43,465. You seem to take a strong exception to anything being done except by what you call moral influence. What would you do in the case of age. Would you settle the law with regard to age, or leave that entirely to moral influence, as to at what age marriage should take place?—No, that is a matter the State can perfectly well decide.

43,466. You would invoke the law in a matter of that kind?—Yes; you can get the common denominator of the ethical conception of the whole community there.

43,467. (Chairman.) You sent a paper to me which showed an error on your part in thinking that we had not attempted to secure the attendance here of representatives of a number of weekly papers?—Yes, I missed the report of that day of the Commission, and then I saw you had done just what I desired you to do.

43,468. The Secretary produced the correspondence that we had?—Yes, that is perfectly right.

43,469. I dare say you regret you made the error?—Shall I formally stand and confess?

43,470. Oh, no?—I accused you of not having done what I afterwards found you had done. You had done as well as I hoped. I hope you will continue to do better.

(Chairman.) We will try.

Mr. Charles Prestwich Scott called and examined.

43,471. (Chairman.) Are you the editor of the "Manchester Guardian"?—I am, my Lord.

43,472. Have you been for 40 years connected with the paper?—For nearly 40 years.

43,473. And you have been asked to give evidence before the Commission?—I have.

43,474. I think your evidence relates solely to the question of the publication of reports?—Yes, that was all I was asked to give evidence about.

43,475. And you discuss "the reasons for or against prohibiting or limiting the publication of the proceedings in divorce cases, and the methods by which such limitation might be effected"?—Yes, that is so.

43,476. If you have carefully prepared this paper, perhaps you will kindly read it from where I have got to?—Do you wish me to read the memorandum?

43,477. Yes, if it expresses your considered opinion?—Yes, I think it does. "I approach the matter from the point of view (1) of the public interest, (2) of the press.

"I. On the question of public policy I hold strongly as a fundamental principle to the liberty of unlicensed printing subject only to responsibility, after publication, to the law. I should view with great jealousy any invasion of this liberty, and I do not think that any incidental evils should lead us, unless for the clearest and strongest reasons, to limit or to abrogate it in a particular class of cases.

"I do not think that public opinion in this country would tolerate the complete suppression of reports of proceedings in divorce cases, and the publication merely of the names of the parties and the verdict. Such suppression might involve great hardship to innocent persons who were known to be involved in the case, and injustice to the parties by the suppression of everything that might explain or extenuate. In the case of persons in high and responsible positions it would deprive the public of information as to character and as to facts which might be necessary for its guidance, and might have a vital bearing on national affairs.

"The alternative to suppression is a censorship. A censorship would appear to be open to a large extent to the same objections as apply to suppression. The reports supplied under it would not be independent, and they might not be adequate. Further, if there is to be a censorship of reports of divorce cases, why should there not be a censorship also of reports of police cases, which on the whole afford opportunity for the publication of far more objectionable matter, or of murder trials which constantly also bring to light terrible and demoralising conditions, or of other classes of cases of which the same thing may be said? Why is there not to be a censorship also of printed books? Many modern novels contain pictures of life and suggestions on conduct far more subtly demoralising than even the most sordid picture of domestic misery and wrong in the Divorce Court, and a whole class of so-called historical biographies has lately come into fashion whose primary object appears to be to rake up and gather together all the unsavoury scandals of the past. These also would appear to stand not less in need of a censor.

"Nor, even granting that a censorship were desirable, have I seen any suggestion for applying it which would appear to me to be practicable and unobjectionable. To license reporters would be useless; the persons who would have to be licensed would be sub-editors or editors. An official report could not be produced in time for newspaper use and would not be adapted to the varying needs of different newspapers."

43,478. What do you mean by the varying needs of different newspapers?—Well, there are different classes of newspapers; the evening newspapers have a totally different need from the morning papers, and the weekly from either of them.

43,479. That is looking at it from the newspaper point of view?—It is a little difficult to separate the two. I was considering the various practical suggestions that have been made for carrying it out. Strictly speaking, perhaps it should have come under the second head. "If county courts were given jurisdiction in divorce cases, both these expedients would become doubly difficult. To limit publication to the judge's summing-up would be to confuse his function and to throw upon him a responsibility properly belonging to others.

"2. As regards the press, it would undoubtedly be an immense relief to many of the better conducted papers if the less scrupulous were subject to some check, and there would be a clear gain to the public in the cessation of a highly undesirable competition in sensationalism and suggestiveness. But divorce cases are only one, and not the most important, of the features by which a cheap popularity is sought and achieved. Shut out from this field those for whom a check is needed would the more industriously explore others, and they might be trusted to defeat any attempt to make them better than they want to be, or than they suppose their readers to desire.

"Nor must we exaggerate the actual extent of the particular mischief. There is a legitimate as well as an illegitimate interest in certain divorce cases. They hold the mirror up to life, even though it be the seamy side of life, and there are ugly things which ought to be known, in order that they may be stamped upon. I do not believe that the chief interest taken in this kind of case is a prurient interest; I think it is largely the same as the interest in sensational fiction, with the additional zest of the story being true, and the issue unknown. Nor ought the effect to be wholly demoralising. At least it must become plain to all who read much of such matter, that sin and sorrow go together.

"Nor, again, ought the offence, even of the worst offenders, to be exaggerated. They may be sensational, but they are not indecent. A clear and sharp line is, as a rule, drawn by every competent reporter and sub-editor between what is, and what is not, possible for publication. If any of them should at times forget, the law should remind them."

43,480. I see you say at the beginning of that second paragraph, "It would undoubtedly be an immense relief to many of the better conducted papers if the less scrupulous were subject to some check." How would you propose to put that check on?—I am not proposing to do so at all. I merely say if it could be done, it would be a great relief. I do not think it is practicable; at least, I do not think it is desirable to attempt it; there would be greater evil involved than good. I admit there would be good, but I think there would be much greater evil.

43,481. Would you tell us what you think the evil is?—The evil in curtailing them?

43,482. Yes?—Well, I think, as a general principle, publicity is wholesome. I think a complete suppression of this class of cases would be attended with greater mischief than with good.

43,483. Let us get the definition more clearly. What mischief do you refer to? I have sat in a great many of these cases, and one might safely say the vast majority of them are of no public interest whatever?—With the great majority that is true, but there are some cases in which the matter is of public interest, and how are you going to discriminate?

43,484. Let us deal with one thing at a time. Supposing they are not matters of real public interest but yet are the foundation for such matters as we have heard of in Sunday publications in considerable volume. What is the advantage on the one hand of allowing that to proceed, and what is the evil that would arise from suppressing it?—I think there is an enormous difficulty in discrimination. I do not see how you can say that this case may be reported, and that case may not be reported. I think it would be quite impossible to discriminate in that way judicially. I think certain cases should be reported, and therefore I say you cannot interfere judicially.

43,485. You cannot devise any means of discrimination?—None; I think it is impossible.

43,486. In these cases which you say should be reported, what is the advantage to the public in having them reported?—Of course there is a legal interest, I mean to say the question of law, which no doubt might be met to some extent by a subsequent selected official publication under the direction of the judge.

43,487. It has been suggested, of course, that the proper law reports should not be interfered with because they only report the matter months after, for the purpose of dealing with any legal point?—I think in cases of persons occupying high and responsible positions in the State, that if they are involved in a case of this kind the public ought to know the whole of the facts, firstly, in their interest, if they are innocent or if their conduct is not such as it might appear to be; and, secondly, in the interest of the public, if they are guilty. I think the public ought to know what kind of men exercise great functions in the State.

43,488. I would ask you to eliminate the consideration of any cases where it might be truly said: This is a public matter that the public ought to know. But take the whole of the rest of the cases, what advantage is there in the public knowing anything about them?—I think there would be great hardship to persons whose names were known to be involved in a case, and who would have no opportunity of showing that their part was really an innocent part, or an accidental part. I think it would be hard on them.

43,489. I was asking about the public interest?—The public interest is in the general principle of liberty of publication, which I think is a very great public interest indeed.

43,490. What is the justification for that principle?—It is the same as that for the permitting of unlicensed printing generally.

43,491. I suppose it would be for the public benefit?—Yes, on the whole for the public benefit, certainly, but not all printed matter is for the public benefit; it is also for the public amusement.

43,492. Assuming you have come to the conclusion that it is not to the public benefit to publish a vast number of those cases——?—I am strongly of that opinion.

43,493. That it is to the public benefit?—That it is not to the public benefit to publish them. I think many of them should be published in a much more restricted form.

43,494. Well, if it could be done, would it not be better that the whole of that mass of stuff should not be published?—I cannot make the assumption to begin with; and, secondly, I prefer to trust myself to a large principle which appears to me sound, rather than to any pettifogging interference with it.

43,495. But you do agree that there is a large mass of this material that would be better not published?—Oh, yes.

43,496. (Sir George White.) I presume there are not an inconsiderable number of cases that might not in the Divorce Court be thought to be of public interest, but that are of public interest in a certain limited sense in the localities where they come from?—That is undoubtedly so, and I should have perhaps referred to that in reply to the Chairman. People's names are mentioned; people are important in a locality who are not important nationally, and they may hold positions which are relatively important in their locality, and the public may have a legitimate desire to know what are the facts in relation to their conduct.

43,497. And therefore it would be a very difficult matter to decide whether a case was of sufficient public interest?—It would be impossible almost, I think, for the judge or anybody sitting in a central court in London to say what was or was not of public interest in the locality.

43,498. Then I understand, while you admit there are details which on various grounds could be better left out, you do not see how to check these details without interfering with the great principle of the liberty of the press?—That is so.

43,499. And therefore you feel constrained to adhere to that principle rather than to attempt to cut down these details and interfere with the general principle?—I feel also that it is perfectly arbitrary to interfere with the publication of these facts in divorce cases and not in other cases. Far worse and more demoralising matter comes out in police courts. A divorce matter very often comes up in the Central Criminal Court—sexual matters arise in murder cases; they arise before the coroners' courts, and unless you are prepared to go the whole length with regard to the whole of these courts it is useless to begin with any particular court.

43,500. (Sir William Anson.) I understand there is a great deal published that you regret?—A very great deal indeed, sir. An enormous quantity I think is extremely to be regretted, and I think it is extremely reprehensible.

43,501. And your wants would be satisfied if the result of the case were announced, the names of the parties, and the exoneration of innocent parties; would not that satisfy you?—I do not think it would. I think the public ought to have sufficient facts before them to be able to form their own opinion.

43,502. Whether it was desirable that those facts should be known or not?—I think the good and the evil go together; you cannot discriminate between them. It is so in human affairs generally.

43,503. And, on the whole, you attach primary importance to the freedom of the press?—It is an enormous benefit—an incalculable benefit.

43,504. And that its freedom is of more consideration than its decency?—I think its decency should be safeguarded by the applications of the law; but I do not think, on the whole, it is its decency which is in question. I think there is a good deal of misapprehension on that. I think it very rarely happens that any indecent matters are published in the newspapers; and not more in the weekly than in the daily, on the whole.

43,505. But, on the whole, you think the disadvantage of any restriction would outweigh any advantage?—Very much so.

43,506. (Mr. Burt.) Only one point, Mr. Scott. On page 2 of your proof, you make a comparison between books and newspapers?—Yes.

43,507. And you say, as I think quite correctly, that in many cases novels are more insidious and more demoralising than any reports in the newspaper?—Far more.

43,508. Well, the point I want to put to you is this, Speaking generally, would it not be correct to say that books—novels and such like—would be much more likely to get into the hands of young people—boys and girls—than the newspapers?—I cannot say that, because many newspapers publish stories—and also cheap fiction has an enormous circulation; and, secondly, I think that the impression you produce on the educated classes is more important and more penetrating than the impression you produce on the uneducated classes. If you demoralise your educated classes you demoralise your whole population—or you tend to.

43,509. You think there is not really that distinction that I have suggested in the question?—I think there is a distinction, but that it is not a very deep one.

43,510. (The Earl of Derby.) Only one word. In the last paragraph of your evidence you say: "A clear and sharp line is, as a rule, drawn by every competent reporter and sub-editor between what is and what is not possible for publication. If any of them should at times forget, the law should remind them." Who is to say that they have forgotten and overstepped the line?—I am not aware what the legal process would be, who would be the proper person to take action. I presume that under the existing law somebody would take action in a case of obscenity or in a case of sedition. Those are punishable offences.

43,511. But supposing there was some particular divorce case with very bad details, would you call it obscenity if it was reported verbatim?—I think that would be a question for a jury.

43,512. You think the State in such a case ought to take action?—I think it should; I think the law should be enforced. There is a law which seems to be somewhat of a dead letter; I do not see why it should not be enforced.

(Lord Derby.) Is there a law that a verbatim report of that kind would come under?

(Chairman.) Yes, if it was indecent; but the difficulty is to know if it was indecent.

(Witness.) I understand there is no privilege for the report of a trial in any court. There is no privilege for matters which ought not to be published under the law.

43,513. (Chairman.) Which is indecent?—Yes, which is in a legal sense indecent or libellous or seditious.

43,514. (Lord Derby.) You would contend that however indecent really it might appear, that it was justifiable to publish it because by so publishing it you might either exonerate certain innocent people, or you might show up people who you think ought to be shown up?—I think that is inconceivable. I do not think the publication of indecent details could come in in that connection. I think a matter of fact colourless report would be sufficient.

43,515. I admit the "Manchester Guardian" would take that view, but would some of the Sunday papers do so?—They might not take that view, but I am contending it is possible to do it.

43,516. But I am contending we should be in such a position to strengthen the Act so that action should be taken under such circumstances. You would not be opposed to that?—If the law can be made more effective for the purpose for which it exists, I should rejoice.

43,517. (Judge Tindal Atkinson.) I understand you, Mr. Scott, to say there is no halfway house between the present system of publication and the closing of the Divorce Court doors to the public?—I have been unable to discover any. I have read carefully such evidence as has been published—the evidence given by journalists and others before this Commission, and all the suggestions made seem to me either undesirable or impracticable.

43,518. Then, from your knowledge, do you think the public would tolerate a court of justice with closed doors?—I do not think they would, and I do not think they ought to.

43,519. (Chairman.) There are one or two cases in which they do tolerate it without any difficulty?—I am speaking of the complete closing of the court.

43,520. Yes?—There are, of course, cases which are heard in camerâ, and rightly heard in camerâ, but I never heard that that jurisdiction of the court was exercised purely in the interests of public decency.

43,521. Take for instance an incest case. Why do you suppose the statute expressly excluded them from public hearing—the Act of 1908?—I always imagined it was partly at least because you could not get evidence in terrible cases of that kind; you could not get evidence unless the court was closed. I do not know whether that is the case.

43,522. Well, take the nullity cases, and all cases in the old Ecclesiastical Courts. The nullity cases always, and any other cases in the Ecclesiastical Court that the judge thought fit. They were always closed if he thought fit, and always closed in nullity cases for hundreds of years without any objection by anybody?—Those are very special classes of cases involving very horrible details, and very little, I imagine, which can be regarded as of genuine public interest. In any case the newspapers would refuse to publish cases of that kind; they would not be tolerated by their readers.

43,523. At any rate the principle is not a novel one?—No, not a novel one. I should have no objection to a judicial discretion with regard to cases which are or are not fit for publication on whatever ground.

43,524. But you feel a practical difficulty in dealing with it?—The practical difficulty I feel to be very great. There is a point on which I should like to say a few words. Several references have been made to the weekly newspapers, and they have been held up as special offenders. I think that is entirely erroneous. I think if the matter is looked into it will be found that by far the greater offenders are the daily papers, particularly one or two. Some statistics, I think, have been collected by the Secretary to the Commission, and a weekly paper, the "Umpire," comes far at the head of that list, with, I think, over 300 columns, as against the "Daily Telegraph" 165, and the "Times" about 100. But that is entirely misleading. I think the reason why these weekly papers come so very high up in the list is that they report all kinds of divorce cases. They rake them together from every quarter, at home and abroad, and they get a great mass. But though the quantity is great I do not think the quality is any worse than in the daily papers; and the quantity is not so great nearly in the sensational cases as it is in the daily papers; and it is the sensational cases which excite the public interest, and if anything is demoralising they are demoralising I had an impression that was the case, and in order to test it I had the columns of a few papers examined in relation to the Stirling case—the most recent sensational divorce case. The greatest offender with regard to the raking together of these cases is the "Umpire"; it comes far away at the head of the list. Well, I looked at the "Umpire." A weekly paper cannot possibly report a thing that is on from day to day as fully as the daily papers. The "Umpire" had 23 columns; the "Daily Telegraph" 69. The "Daily Telegraph" column is more than one-fourth larger than the "Umpire" column; therefore that is something like the proportion of 100 to 23. You are getting on towards 100 columns as against 23. Practically it is four times as much in the "Daily Telegraph" as in the "Umpire." I wish to give the devil his due, and I think the weekly papers are not the chief offenders in this matter.

43,525. (Sir Lewis Dibdin.) That is in the six days?—Yes.

43,526. (Chairman.) Would you just tell us what advantage there was to the public in the publication of one word of that case?—I think it threw an extraordinary light upon the social conditions in certain strata of society.

43,527. And that that is a benefit to the community at large?—I think it is a moral document of extraordinary interest—the spectacle of these people who had every luxury that wealth could produce and never did a day's work for themselves or anybody, and spent their time in this fashion; I think it is an appalling thing, and I think it is wholesome——

43,528. Wholesome reading to be before the public?—No, but I think it is a matter that concerns the nation and that the nation ought to know.

(Chairman.) I think you have expressed your views very clearly, Mr. Scott, and I thank you very much.

Mr. David Edwards called and examined.

43,529. (Chairman.) Are you Managing Director of the Nottingham Daily Express Company, Limited; and were you formerly the General Manager and Editor of the "Daily News"?—Yes.

43,530. I gather from the memorandum you have sent, you do not express any opinion as to the desirability of facilitating divorce generally?—I do not.

43,531. That is not a point you wish to deal with?—That is so.

43,532. You are dealing here with the subject of the publication of divorce cases, and on that you desire to express your views?—That is so.

43,533. How long have you had journalistic experience?—30 years.

43,534. And at Nottingham how long?—About 11 years.

43,535. Then before that, you have told us, you were with the "Daily News"?—About five years on the "Daily News."

43,536. Did you communicate direct to the Secretary?—Yes.

43,537-8. Or was the communication addressed to you?—No, I communicated with the Secretary.

43,539. With the object of presenting your views?—Yes.

43,540. Are you of opinion that the time has arrived when anything ought to be done by the legislature with regard to the publication of divorce cases?—I am.

43,541. Would you tell us on what that is founded?—Well, my own opinion about this is that there can be no freedom of the subject where the collective is permitted to be tyrannical. I can understand that the press might exercise tyranny over the individual, and I am quite satisfied that that is what is taking place in such cases as affiliation cases. Take an ordinary affiliation case. I have no doubt whatever, myself, that there are plenty of young women who never bring a case into court for the simple reason that they do not want to incur the obloquy of their own immediate friends; the scandal is so great that the young woman prefers not to bring the action at all. And I am quite satisfied, on the other hand, that many defendants settle where they have a good defence, because the scandal of a successful defence would be a greater injury than the payment of money.

43,542. You think that would apply also to divorce cases?—I certainly do. I do not take the orthodox view with regard to the freedom of the press, that some of my brethren do. I daresay I shall hear about this, but at the same time I think we have to be true to our own opinions; and I am quite satisfied it is impossible for the press to claim a right to punish on behalf of the public, and thus assume that it stands in a kind of judicial position representing the whole public. As a matter of fact the newspaper man is in the newspaper publishing for business, just as a lawyer is in his profession for business; and I am not at all sure that some newspaper men do not allow that which is the best business policy to govern them in their conduct, in which procedure they are helped by others who mistakenly believe that that is also the best public policy, which I am sure is not the case. I remember not very long ago there was an action brought by the London and North Western Railway against a man for travelling without a ticket. The stipendiary fined him. I do not remember the exact amount of the fine—5*s.* or 7*s.* 6*d.* A little later on there was another case brought before the stipendiary, and by this time the stipendiary had found out that in the previous conviction the name of the man had been placarded all over the system of the London and North Western Railway; and the stipendiary, when the second case came before him, said, "Are you going to publish the name of this man who "has travelled without a ticket, all over your system?" and the solicitor said in the ordinary course it would be so. "Then," he said, "I shall not fine him; that is punishment enough." And I am perfectly certain that newspapers in a great many cases punish very much more severely than the law ever intended punishment should go, that is to say, in the case specially of men of position. If a man is a mere nobody there is no punishment, but it is relative to the position of the man that the punishment is severe; and I maintain that this is a question really not for newspaper men at all; it is a question for men who are not newspaper men; because the newspaper man, when he talks about the freedom of the press, is naturally to some extent prejudiced, while there is a kind of freemasonry amongst press men like all other men. If a man comes here and speaks against the press he is not considered to have done just the thing; and I maintain the question with regard to the divorce proceedings is essentially a matter for other people, and not for members of the press.

43,543. You think that that sort of pressure applies to affiliation orders, separation orders, and to divorce?—I am satisfied it is a grievance felt by the individual; I am quite satisfied as to that.

43,544. You say at the end of your note here: "Plaintiffs abstain from taking advantage of the law, and defendants agree to settlements that are unjust rather than incur the greater injury and odium of a public scandal. Parties concerned are thus deprived of their redress at law, and the wider public that are in no way concerned have purveyed to them reports that cannot help being demoralising." That is a summary of it?—Yes; that is precisely my view.

43,545. Do you think that the publication of the details of these divorce cases has a demoralising effect on the public generally?—I am sure of it; and I may say, while I am speaking about this, some reference has been made to some of the Sunday papers. It is not very long ago that I read in a Sunday paper a report of a case in which nine young men were charged with having committed, in succession, nine criminal assaults upon a young woman; that occurred in Australia, and there was about a column of it in a London Sunday paper. Now there was no news value in that so far as the immediate occurrence of the thing was concerned, because it must have been at least six weeks previously that the thing occurred. So it must have been clipped out of an Australian paper for the simple reason that it was a prurient sexual item of news, and I am sure there is too much of it done.

43,546. What is the remedy you would apply if you had this divorce question to consider?—Well, of course I admit that it is rather a difficult problem.

43,547. Of course it is; that is exactly why I ask the question?—I must admit that I have not anything that to my own mind is an ideal plan. It has been suggested that there might be an official report. I should favour, myself, that reports of divorce cases should be published giving anything that is of value from a legal point of view. I do not believe what you may call the dramatic value ought to be considered for a moment, because if a newspaper gives a report, say, of a wedding, it would be very much more dramatic if they could give the courtship as well with it, but they never do. So the question of the value of a report from the dramatic point of view I do not think ought to be considered at all. That is purely a selfish newspaper way of putting it, and I should be inclined to report only what might be of value in the case as governing certain aspects, for reference in similar cases. The law cases are being kept for the purpose of seeing how certain aspects are to be interpreted. I would only go that length myself; I would not consider how much dramatic value it might contain.

43,548. You practically recognise the evil, but you, like others, feel a difficulty in the exact mode of dealing with it?—Well, I would not hesitate even to go the length of suppression in these cases. I am referring now to the Divorce Court alone, because that is peculiar; it is always of the same character; whatever appears in that court is more or less objectionable; so I should be quite prepared to go the length of absolute suppression so far as that court is concerned.

43,549. You regard the Divorce Court as standing on its own peculiar footing, and being connected with a branch that it is not advantageous to have about the world at large?—I do. I consider the Divorce Court is a court that pries into private affairs that ought to be kept absolutely secret and the publication of which is in itself a punishment; I maintain, as a newspaper proprietor, it is not my duty or province to punish parties seeking the redress they are entitled to at the hands of the justices.

43,550. (Mr. Brierley.) Then would you abolish any report of any kind whatever of a divorce case?—No. I have said how much I would publish; but I should have no personal objection to go that length. I do not advocate it. I should not be sorry myself if they were suppressed, but I do not advocate it.

43,551. Do you say there is no public interest whatever in knowing who has been divorced and who has not?—I do not think that ought to be the deciding point at all. You see my friends here in the newspaper world come and say public interest demands this and public interest demands that. You know they are newspaper proprietors, and you and I know they are honourable conscientious men, but are they sufficiently magnanimous?

43,552. But apart from that, is not it right that a man's neighbours should know if he was divorced or not?—But the neighbourhood would be as much interested to know about the courtship as well.

43,553. But is not it a matter of some importance that they should know?—I cannot admit it. I must say the thing is not to be decided on that ground. The public may become a tyrant against the individual; that is my point.

43,554. (Judge Tindal Atkinson.) Supposing a man who is in a public position in the State is a co-respondent; is not it essential that the public should know what his conduct has been?—If you publish that part which implicates the man, I recognise that the part which exonerates ought to be published; but if the whole thing is suppressed there is no complication.

43,555. But the public want to know of the character of that particular man, and of the circumstances which happened to bring him into the Divorce Court. You would not save such a man as that from punishment, would you?—No; but I recognise that publication in the newspapers, as I said with regard to the fine inflicted by the stipendiary, is sometimes much greater than the crime, and especially so in the case of a very prominent man; indeed, I recognise the newspaper is capable of ruining a man, if he is prominent enough, by publishing confidential statements.

43,556. (Sir George White.) I would just ask you this question, Mr. Edwards. If no remedy could be found by way of an approved report, do you go so far as to advocate that all divorce cases should be heard in camerâ?—No, I do not advocate it; I say I have no personal objection to it. I know plenty of other newspaper proprietors take the same view.

43,557. That is your personal feeling only. Then with regard to the co-respondents in the cases just mentioned by Judge Atkinson. You say, with perfect fairness, that if the name is mentioned in the charge, that any exoneration should also be published?—Yes.

43,558. But of course you would be aware that in country districts, particularly if there is a divorce case in which a man is sued as co-respondent, that is known to his immediate neighbours, and it is a good deal wider than that, that he is charged; and is it not desirable in such a case that his defence and acquittal should be made public? It does not depend altogether upon the newspaper publishing the charge, you see, but it is the knowledge of the neighbourhood?—Yes; but I do not think myself that any question of that kind is of a twentieth part of the importance of the other. I admit it might be, but it would be so infinitesimal as compared with the other, that I think you must take the least evil of the various evils.

43,559. You mean the publication by the newspapers in referring to "the other"?—Yes. What I mean to say is this: whatever you do there is a conceivable injustice to somebody, and I regard the publication of detailed reports as the worst thing of all.

(Chairman.) I think that is all. I have to thank you very much for your evidence; it will be of great value to us

Mr. MAURICE HEWLETT called and examined.

43,560. (Chairman.) Your name is very familiar to us, but may I describe you as being a well-known writer?—Yes, I think I may admit that.

43,561. You have prepared a summary of evidence, with certain conclusions and certain proposals which seem to you to follow from your evidence?—Yes.

43,562. I think your claim to be heard "is that of "a writer whose business it is to express human life "and human nature"?—Quite; yes, certainly.

43,563. And you say you would be ill-equipped for success if you did not know something about your subject?—Yes.

43,564. Now you were asked to give your evidence here?—Yes.

43,565. If you do not mind, I am going to ask you to take the conclusions and the proposals first because that makes it clear; and then the arguments on which you found them, as to which I can ask you after?—Certainly. I should like to say that I took great pains in preparing this, and that I do not pretend it is based on anything but the idealistic view of life, and such knowledge of human nature as I, by experience and study and intuition, have acquired.

43,566. I quite appreciate that. That is why I want to get the conclusions and proposals rather in advance of the arguments?—Quite so. I may, I hope, support them afterwards by the preparatory matter.

43,567. Certainly. Would you read the conclusions and the proposals first then?—

"Conclusion.

"Let me repeat that I am putting the case of the honest-minded only, who consider that desire and intention in both parties are the sine quâ non of marriage. A system or code of law which protects the base in their baseness, and inflicts moral wrong and spiritual anguish upon those bonæ voluntatis, cannot be beneficial to a State, and if persisted in would be justly held as such an irrational tyranny as to result in the disregard of marriage as a sacrament, or a contract either."

"Proposals.

"1. That marriage be voidable by agreement of the parties."—I should like to add, "In the discretion of the court," as that was put there originally.

43,568. Might I ask you what that exactly means, after you have finished the paragraph?—"That marriage be voidable by agreement of the parties, and evidence from one of them that desire and intention are absent or elsewhere engaged, saving always the interests of the children of the marriage, if any."

43,569. I do not quite know what the modification you introduce; "In the discretion of the court," exactly means?—It may be a redundancy, because one may assume that the court had discretion. I thought for the sake of clearness that should be added.

43,570. The effect would be to make the court only a recording instrument?—The court would only be a recording instrument unless it had full discretion to accept or ratify the parties' agreement.

43,571. But on what basis is the court to exercise that discretion?—On the basis entirely of the evidence that may be given by those parties of an agreement based on the absence of desire and intention to perform the marriage.

43,572. But that would hardly leave a discretion; if that agreement be approved the judge would have to act upon it?—Well, I might take an imaginary case. You might have people who were disclosed by their evidence to be low and debased, and who did low and base things, and came before the court on a frivolous basis and for unworthy reasons. In that case the court would say, "The evidence is entirely unworthy"; in which case——

43,573. You mean if they were satisfied it was a bonâ fide case?—Yes. Then:—

"2. That in the absence of agreement such dissolution to be in the full discretion of the court upon hearing of the parties; but that in any event a married woman be protected against conjugal rights if she can show that desire and intention cannot be accorded."

"3. That where it is sought upon these grounds to make void a marriage with issue, any agreement between the parties as to their custody shall weigh with the court. In the absence of agreement, the custody shall be in the discretion of the court, which may also refuse divorce, while protecting the wife against her husband's conjugal rights."

"4. That in all cases of divorce the court shall be assisted by two lay-assessors, one male, one female."

"5. That whatever local court may be empowered by the State to adjudicate divorce between persons who seek it there, similar lay-assessors shall be appointed, at least in cases contemplated in these proposals."

43,574. That enables us to see exactly what the argument is addressed to?—Quite so.

43,575. Then perhaps you will start at the beginning?—Yes, I will leave out the preface.

43,576. I have read this very carefully through and I think there are some points in it that are not in the scope of our inquiry, and I will point these out when I come to them?—Yes, my Lord, I feared that might be so:—

"Scope of this Memorandum.

"I have been struck by the fact that the witnesses before this Commission, and the Commissioners themselves, have confined the evidence almost wholly to the social aspect of marriage, and the social effect of divorce. They do not seem to have allowed for great diversity of character and temperament in individuals, nor to have considered what must be called the psychical welfare of the married. To serious minds marriage is one of the most serious acts of life, to the frivolous it may be an episode, to the base a means of base gratification. But the more serious the nature of men the more injury may be inflicted upon them by an endeavour to reduce the laws to which they must be subject to rigidity; and in the case particularly of refined and serious natures the tendency of English public opinion to preserve in all events what are called the 'outward decencies' often results in fostering inward indecencies which are shocking to conceive. Insincerity is in my eyes a deadly sin, and such a tendency breeds and must breed insincerity. I am here to plead for the serious and sensitive against the frivolous and base, and to suggest that the maxim de minimis should not be applied to the law of marriage and divorce further than is absolutely necessary to keep the base from criminal baseness. Marriage is no doubt a social contract, and properly so; but it is in the eyes of the serious minded, as it is in the eye of the Latin Church, a sacrament also. I think that the evidence so far has treated the social contract as preponderant, the sacrament as subservient to that, and that while this may be necessary in a majority of cases, it would be inequitable not to recognise a perceptible number to whom the sacrament is of greater force than the contract. Assuming again that the State and the English Church admit marriage to be a sacrament, I suggest that the sacrament does not lie in the contract, but elsewhere. Finally, I consider that, by omitting evidence (so far as there may be evidence) concerning the nature and force of love, the Commissioners have been in danger of overlooking not only what is, according to me, of the essence of the sacrament, but what is also in this country, the mainspring of all serious marriages. The scope of this memorandum, therefore, is confined to the serious-minded and to persons bonæ voluntatis, as against the frivolous and base.

"Let me add here that I have confined myself in the following pages to matters which have not as yet been presented for the consideration of the Commissioners. Such questions as those of the equality of the sexes in the eye of the court, or the equal rights of the poor to the relief it may afford have received the attention which they deserve from those who are qualified to give it. Perhaps, I may say, however, in order that there may be no misconception as to my attitude, that I am strongly of opinion that infidelity in the husband should entitle the wife to the full measure of relief which is at present given to the husband of an unfaithful wife. No person who takes the serious view of the marriage contract which I am about to put forth could conceive of the man's immunity from the consequences of his action as it regards his wife. The notion or pretence that a woman can be in any real sense subject to a man, and the notion that a man may have licence to break an understanding while a woman may not are repugnant to my sense of moral law. With respect to the privileges of the poor also, it is impossible for me to believe that they are not in every respect similar to those of the rich. The days of autocracy, however benevolent in intention, seem to me to be over. It would be more discreet in the State to concede in advance what will undoubtedly be claimed as a right.

"PART I.—CHILDLESS MARRIAGES.

"Proposition I.—Love.

"Love is the strongest and most universal passion of created nature. It is based, of course, upon sex; but in man it has diverged from the basal instinct of reproduction or continuance of species. All animals (with rare exceptions) mate when they are in a condition to generate. Man does not. But in him the sexual desire, which is the physical side of the love passion, is inseparable from a spiritual or intellectual desire to unite with the beloved object. Plato's illustration in the Symposium will be remembered and is a good one. Imagination, working upon both desires, finds a means of satisfying each. This is the nature of a force in man which may become irresistible, may produce extreme happiness and extreme misery, the utmost benevolence or the utmost illwill. For it is in the power of man, when moved by it to transcend his nature or to fall below it. He can raise the passion of love to a spiritual rapture inexpressible in poetry, or even in music, or degrade it to lust and perverse appetite which the beasts assuredly cannot parallel.

"Proposition II.—Love and Marriage.

"Such as this force is, it is the governing cause of marriage in England, for, in England, marriages are made in all classes by selection of the parties themselves. The parental or progenitive instinct is not the governing cause, nor, as in other countries, the social or prudential instinct. In nine-tenths of the marriages in England love or liking (more or less serious according to the nature of the persons) on one side or the other must be presumed. Among the highest order of minds love on both sides must be presumed. Marriage in England, therefore, may be defined in its essence as the social sanction of the mutual desire of a man and a woman to unite their souls through their bodies. In all cases bodily desire and spiritual intention to unite are proper to a good marriage; but with the serious-minded they are essential, and the absence of the one or the other would vitiate the marriage.

"Proposition III.—Love and the Contract.

"If the above be true, and the contract be in such cases dependent upon desire and intention, the contract cannot be regarded as necessarily perpetual, since it is contingent upon the presence of the bodily desire and spiritual intention which are essential to the marriage. To a great extent the Latin Church, to some extent the English Church and English Law, admit this conclusion. The State and the Church in England will annul a marriage which is not consummated, and admit impotence in a man to be a cause for quashing a marriage contract. But if a marriage is consummated once the Church regards it as perpetual, and the State will only dissolve it for certain reasons—infidelity, cruelty, and the like. It is now suggested that, if the State will dissolve a marriage for non-consummation at one time, it should so act at any stage of the marriage, or for any defect of potency in either party. If a man cease to desire his wife, or if he desire another woman, he becomes ipso facto an unwilling partner. Either kind of desire may fail him, either the bodily or the spiritual. He cannot be urged or persuaded to fulfil this essential part of his contract, which should, therefore, be voidable. In the case of the woman, it should be remembered that desire on her part, bodily and spiritual, is also contemplated in the contract. But she is so made, physically, that she is capable of receiving what she may not at all desire. Moral compulsion, exhortation, cajolery, or kindness may tempt her to what she regards as wrong doing. She may be impotent in intention though not in fact. Should she have neither bodily nor spiritual desire towards her husband she may be persuaded to submit to him. Should she, having had it once, subsequently lose it, she may still be bound. Should her desire turn to loathing, horror, and physical repulsion, she may still be bound. The effect of this upon a sensitive, imaginative, or nervous woman (and nothing acts and re-acts so immediately upon the nervous system) may be grievous. No marriage law can be good which can inflict rigidly and by routine such anguish upon the refined, sensitive, and honest-minded members of the community.

"Proposition IV.—Love and the Sacrament of Marriage.

"But for the serious-minded there is another and still more unhappy result of a marriage indissoluble for failure of desire and intention. It seems uncertain wherein the English Church declares the sacrament of marriage to reside, whether in the words of plighting, giving and receiving of the ring, or in the marital act. The serious minded place it without doubt in the consummation and continued consummation of the marriage. They say that the sacrament is not taken once only, but whenever desire and intention, being present in both parties, are expressed mutually. They say that the outward and visible sign is the marital act, the inward and spiritual grace the intellectual union of two souls. They say that this sacrament is essential to a marriage, and the profanation of it, that is the absence of intention in one party or the other, or failure of it (that is, the absence of desire), should be admitted as a good reason for divorce. There must be, they say, mutual bodily desire, mutual spiritual intention. If the man desire physical gratification, he degrades himself and insults his wife. If she invite him for the same reason, she degrades herself and tempts him to degradation. If the man be unfaithful to the wife by indulgence of his appetite with another woman, she should be released. If he cease to love his wife because he honestly and sincerely loves another woman, it should be in her power to release him. So with her. If she be unfaithful, the law gives him relief. But if she honestly and sincerely love another man, it should be in the husband's power to give her relief. For in this case, although she might not have been unfaithful in body, she cannot give him spiritual intention, and so complete the sacrament, to which her whole participation is as necessary as his. This is high doctrine, but is undoubtedly believed by a large number of persons, whose serious attitude towards love and marriage should be respected by the State. It is certainly true that the more seriously one regards marriage the more serious is the need of a legal means of dissolving marriage.

"Proposition V.—Love and Adultery.

"The passion of love, being a passion founded on instinct and fostered by imagination, is irrational, unreflecting, spontaneous and not amenable to the law. Undoubtedly it changes its object, and reasonably so. If a youth of twenty-six and a girl of twenty-two, with no experience, little knowledge of each other and none of the rest of their fellow creatures, fall in love, it is not to be supposed that they will always be of the same mind; if they marry, it is not in the nature of things that marriage, as such, should prevent their changing their affections. If either of them do change, subsequently to marriage, it must certainly be the case that the sacrament, as here conceived of, must be profaned, and is to be suggested that the contract should be voidable. It has been said in the scripture that the man or woman married who looks upon another with desire, commits adultery in the heart. It would be equally true to say that the husband or wife who loves somebody else, and nevertheless lives maritally with wife or husband, equally commits adultery. In the sacrament of the Lord's Supper the partakers are warned lest they eat and drink their own damnation. So it is with the sacrament of marriage to those who regard it seriously. Such persons say the contract should be voidable, and can only be insisted upon by the law at the soul's peril. They regard as a superficial view of the social effect of this proposal the objection that the result would be debauchery and indulgence of appetite. It is worse to keep two persons tied to an incongruous, and indeed shocking, union of this nature than to credit them with sincerity to themselves and to each other. Nothing can be more repugnant to humanity than to stimulate or persuade a man to do or a woman to suffer an act of such a significant intimate and nervous a nature for the sake of outward decorum. Outward conformity at the expense of inner revolt is as unwholesome as it is immoral. It should be pointed out to those who wish to abolish divorce altogether, or to withhold it from the poor, that by so doing they are laying mines at the foundations of marriage itself, and going a distinct step towards the abolition of that. If men and women, in deference to a social convention, strangle at 40 a passion which at 20 was considered honourable, they are being hardly used themselves and are using hardly their inoffending partners. It is better to marry than to burn, better also by far to divorce than to burn for one and use another. The base will act basely, however strict the marriage law, and not the less basely for being enabled to do so in secret. They have their reward. Under our present system the honourable and sincere are tempted to dishonour and insincerity. Marriage, therefore, ought to be voidable in all cases where desire and intention in either party have ceased; for in the case of base natures the inoffending party may fairly claim to be freed from degrading use, and in the case of higher natures will ardently desire it. It is reasonable also to suppose (in higher natures) that the inoffending party, if still in love with the party desiring release, will be actuated by the generous promptings of affection, and desire to release the beloved from an intolerable position. If there should be consent, added to good reason, it would seem difficult for the State to refuse relief.

"Part II.—Marriages with Issue.

"Proposition VI.—Conjugal Rights.

"The instinct to beget may be, in rare cases, a conscious factor in the desire of a man for a woman. It is generally so in that of a woman for a man. It is a symptom of love in serious women that they desire a child by the man beloved, and a common case that the desire to have the child is stronger than the desire to enjoy the man. In these cases, when the desire for the child is fulfilled, desire and intention for the man cease altogether; but the presence of the child, or the hope for more, may be enough to keep the wife's affections from another man. Even if they are not strong enough for that, they may keep her from seeking divorce; but she ought not on that account to be compellable to the man's desire. If she can show that desire and intention on her part are no longer in her power, that should be sufficient answer to a petition for restitution of conjugal rights. Such restitution is hardly more than a legal fiction; it allows a case for damages. There are, however, cases within knowledge where a woman would have been thankful to have had her position regularised by the law; where she was willing to forego her lover and remain in her husband's house to care for the children, but most unwilling to participate in an act to which she could contribute neither desire nor good intention. It is extremely important that some legal means should be afforded for recognising this particular hardship of women, which, though it has custom and law to support it, cannot be justified by any theory of morals or ideal of humanity.

"Proposition VIII.—Divorce for Mothers.

"It is rarely that a woman bonæ voluntatis will leave her children for the sake of her lover. When she does it is because (a) the passion of love overmasters her reason and instinct, or (b) because her home is made intolerable to her by the attentions, claims, jealousy or suspicion of the husband. In neither of these cases, clearly, can she contribute desire and intention to the sacrament of marriage, and in each, therefore, the State should afford her the relief she would regard as indispensable—relief from her husband's bed. In the first case, however, the State should not give her divorce unless she had her husband's consent to it; in the second, if release from his bed did not release her from moral torment, she should be relieved by divorce. Where there was consent the custody of the children would have been agreed upon between the parties; but in the absence of consent the State should have discretion how to act, as it has, in fact, now.

43,577. The next paragraph——?—I fear the next paragraph is out.

43,578. Yes, you suggested that yourself?—Yes, I was afraid it might be. Then I go on to Proposition IX.:—

"Proposition IX.—Composition of the Divorce Tribunal.

"The Court of Admiralty, owing to the technical nature of the evidence brought before it, is assisted by seamen who are known, I think, as lay-assessors. Intricate and particular as the economy of seamanship may be, it cannot approach in difficulty, delicacy and importance the questions which are daily before the Divorce Court. The diversity of human nature, the call for insight, sympathetic observation, adjustment of fact to the promptings of temperament and character—these are things quite beyond the capacity of a jury, and demand a knowledge of men and a discernment of personality of the highest order. It is certainly a case where the judge should have the benefit of lay-assessors, who should always be two—one male and one female. The judgment of impartial, educated persons of age, weight and experience, upon such intimate matters as love and temperament are essential to a good and equitable divorce court."

43,579. That brings us to the conclusion which you read before?—Yes, quite so.

43,580. May I ask you two or three questions to get a little more what your direct opinion is?—Certainly.

43,581. You really summarise your point at the top of page 6, "There must be, they say," that is your own view?—My own view.

43,582. "Mutual bodily desire, mutual spiritual intention. If the man desire physical gratification, he degrades himself and insults his wife"?—Yes, I follow.

43,583. That is the substance of the point?—Yes, quite; that it is the essence of the agreement. It has two parts, the bodily desire and the spiritual intention.

43,584. I quite appreciate that. Does that involve a right to dissolve a marriage on either party when these two conditions have ceased to co-operate?—I think so. I do not mean if there is a momentary distaste or a distaste for a short period, that it cannot be accommodated; but I think if it is likely to continue it certainly should form a ground.

43,585. If a personal dislike enters in?—If a personal dislike enters in very strongly or even if physical dislike——

43,586. Might I just ask this. This strikes me as written from the point of view of a very fine high mind. How would you suggest that that proposition would work amongst the practical rough and tumble people of life and amongst the lower classes?—Well, I think the feelings which I suggest as common to humanity are present naturally in all classes of the community, but expressed in a different way. I think it is unjust to assume that because the lower classes, or the poorer classes, express their ideas or feelings coarsely and brutally that they are necessarily coarse and brutal themselves. I do not think so. I think they are trying to say the same thing as we are, that they feel the same thing, and that their marriage proceeds on the same thing. We call it love, they call it liking, and men and women choose each other, or one chooses the other, and the other is influenced by his mind.

43,587. Then you would be prepared to accept that as a law applicable to the whole of the people?—I would, certainly, subject to the evidence and the discretion of the court.

43,588. Have you considered in thinking of such a proposition that, on the average, the man remains a, I will say, masculine creature until a much later period than the woman, and that this proposition might almost inevitably lend itself to men desiring younger partners as their wives advance in life?—Well, as I said in presenting this evidence, I exclude the base from my purview, because I thought there was ample means at the disposal of the State and of the court for dealing with the base. My point was to see if while preventing the base from devastating society, the State could not help the serious and the honest minded. I do not think your point would apply in the case of the serious minded, because I think by the time the female partner of such a marriage was too old, the better and the higher side of the married life would apply to the man and keep him faithful to her. I think so.

43,589. All I wanted to put was, does not that indicate a danger in applying a proposition of that kind to the general State?—Yes, it would if I had suggested that marriage should be ipso facto void. I only suggest it should be voidable. I think it is entirely a question for the discretion of the court.

43,590. Do not you think that might work very adversely to women?—No, I do not think so. I regard as the whole crux of that case the presence of a lay assessor—a woman assessor.

43,591. But they would have no option if the cessation of desire and spiritual intention were enough?—Oh, I think there would be option. The question you put to me as to the relationship of these two people for a long period of years; that is such a serious matter that the court would want evidence——

43,592. I do not see what you think the lay assessor would have to determine?—The lay assessor would have to determine the psychical condition of the parties.

43,593. Of both?—Yes.

43,594. Suppose the psychical condition of the man was for the divorce, but the psychical condition of the woman was full of attachment to the tie?—Then I meet that in this way. If it is the woman wanting to be relieved, I protect her by refusing divorce, but regularising her position in the household with regard to the conjugal rights of the husband.

43,595. Do you think this proposal takes adequate consideration to the position of children of a marriage who are entitled to the proper care of their parents?—They are, of course.

43,596. But if this diminution or cessation of bodily desire and spiritual intention arose and was applied, the children would be left entirely out?—No, in my view in all these cases where there were children, as I say here, they could not come to the court at all without producing the arrangements which they may have made between themselves; and any arrangement they may have made and may produce before the court would be entirely subject to the discretion of the court as to whether it was good for the children, considering the state of the parties.

43,597. That does not give the children much voice, nor anybody on their behalf. The parties are to make what arrangements they please to satisfy their own views of life?—Yes, well, I should be very unwilling to assume that one of the parents at all events had not got the children's interest paramount in his or her mind.

43,598. Well I think you have made the position you suggest extremely plain. Whether it is a practical matter is another point?—Yes, I quite agree that is so.

(Chairman.) Thank you very much for your evidence. You have presented a certain view of this matter which will have to be considered of course.

(Chairman.) I am happy to say we have now practically completed the evidence in this matter. I do not say we have absolutely done so because there are certain materials to be obtained after, but chiefly of the statistical and documentary character. However, practically we have concluded the public inquiry so far as it is to be held in public, and it is interesting to know that during these 20 days we have sat lately we have disposed of 102 witnesses. The figures which I gave on the last adjournment I think are pretty well known. We have taken an enormous number of witnesses on each of these sittings. I would like to say only one word to the Press, namely, that I have felt they have had to labour under two disadvantages; first, that they have had some extremely complicated evidence to listen to, much of it extremely difficult to follow; and I also think being placed (which we could not help) behind the witnesses has not been a position for them which has made it always possible to hear with accuracy everything that has been said. We could not help ourselves in that respect. I should like to say this one word. I have not had the time or the opportunity of reading all that has been reported, but speaking generally it seems to me from what I have seen that the Press have very satisfactorily discharged their duty.

Adjourned.

Winchester House, St. James's Square, London, S.W.

FIFTY-SIXTH DAY.

Wednesday, 17th May 1911.

PRESENT:

THE RIGHT HON. LORD GORELL (Chairman).

HIS GRACE THE LORD ARCHBISHOP OF YORK.
The Lady FRANCES BALFOUR.
The Right Hon. THOMAS BURT, M.P.
The Hon. LORD GUTHRIE.
Sir WILLIAM R. ANSON, Bart., M.P.
Sir FREDERICK TREVES, Bart., G.C.V.O., C.B., LL.D., F.R.C.S.
Sir LEWIS T. DIBDIN, D.C.L.
Sir GEORGE WHITE, M.P.
His Honour Judge TINDAL ATKINSON.
Mrs. H. J. TENNANT.
EDGAR BRIERLEY, Esq.

The Hon. HENRY GORELL BARNES (Secretary).
J. E. G. DE MONTMORENCY, Esq. (Assistant Secretary).

The Right Hon. LORD GORELL, called and examined.

(Chairman.) I should like to put in as part of the evidence some Notes which I have prepared on the question of the principles to be applied in divorce legislation. I have given considerable time, study, and research to the matters with which I have dealt, and trust that the Notes may prove of some service. In putting in the Notes in this way, I am following the course adopted by Sir Lewis Dibdin with regard to his excellent Notes on the Reformatio Legum Ecclesiasticarum.

(The Archbishop of York.) As you are now in the position of a witness and not in that of Chairman, I beg to take this opportunity of thanking you, on behalf of the Commissioners, for your labours.

NOTES PREPARED BY LORD GORELL AS TO THE PRINCIPLES UPON WHICH DIVORCE LEGISLATION SHOULD PROCEED.

Object of the Notes.

1. Before the appointment of this Commission, my attention had been specially directed to three questions: (1) as to whether or not it was desirable and possible to afford further facilities than at present exist for the purpose of enabling persons of little means to bring their matrimonial cases before the courts, (2) as to whether wives should not have the same rights of divorce as husbands, and (3) as to whether the present system of newspaper reporting of divorce cases should not be restricted or prohibited. But the inquiry upon which the Commissioners have been engaged extends over a far wider range of subjects, and questions of the most far-reaching kind are raised and have been presented for consideration by the terms of the Commission. In order to answer these it is necessary to form clear views upon the principles to be applied in their determination.

2. Since the appointment of the Commission, I have therefore endeavoured, so far as my powers have enabled me to do so, by a careful study of the very interesting, learned, and exhaustive evidence which has been laid before the Commission by experts, representative of all shades of opinion and of all kinds of experience; and of the history of the laws of marriage and divorce from early times to the present; by an examination of the writings of numerous authors, both ancient, mediæval, and modern; and, by most anxious reflection, to elucidate for my own satisfaction the fundamental principles which require to be ascertained. And I venture to express the hope that, in placing before the Commissioners the results of my investigations, study, and research, I may afford some assistance in laying down the lines upon which legislation should proceed.

3. I confess that I do so with great diffidence, not only because of the complex nature of the problems involved, the vast mass of historical and other literature to be examined, and the large volume, weighty character, and conflicting nature of the evidence, both of opinion and of experience, which has been given, but also because the questions raised on the inquiry touch not merely upon human laws and institutions but upon matters which are affected by religious beliefs and opinions, and are regarded by very many as concerned with man's spiritual welfare as well as with his social conditions.

4. It has, indeed, been impossible to avoid being at times daunted by the gravity of the task which has been set before the Commissioners, but that task has been faced by them with such serious and engrossing attention and earnest determination to make a great effort to solve problems which have perplexed the Christian world for centuries, as to make me feel confident that the result of the discussions will be to produce, if not a final solution of those problems, at any rate recommendations which, it may be hoped, will prove that steps should be taken sufficient to meet the most crying evils and the most pressing grievances disclosed by the witnesses who have appeared before the Commission.

First Full Inquiry.

5. Numerous and vital changes have been made during the last century in the divorce laws of some foreign countries and of some British colonies, but, so far as I can learn, this is the first time that a formal and exhaustive inquiry has been made in this country, or, indeed, in any country, into the questions submitted for consideration. I have been unable to discover from the learned and deeply interesting account of the document known as the "Reformatio legum Ecclesiasticarum" prepared and put in evidence by Sir Lewis Dibdin that any evidence in the nature of that laid before the Commission was taken before the abortive Commissions of Henry VIII. and Edward VI.—I mean with regard to social and economic conditions, the state of morality in the country or the effect thereon of the laws, or with regard to other matters upon which so much evidence has been given before the Commission. It is sufficient for present purposes to say that the aforesaid document, according to Sir Lewis Dibdin, represents only the views of "certain individual Church- "men of great eminence and influence" (Q. 34,940, lix). He states that they "were no doubt also "adopted by the rank and file of a section of extreme "Protestants in this country, but, except during a "few years of Edward the Sixth's reign, were never

" dominant in the Church of England." English theologians were probably largely influenced by the opinions expressed by the great continental reformers and the greater freedom of thought which resulted from the Reformation, and it seems also probable that the views referred to were shared by many of the laity but to what extent they were generally adopted does not appear at all clear.

6. General evidence of the aforesaid character was not taken by the Royal Commission of 1850–1853, though a few questions as to the principle of the equality of the sexes may be found addressed to some of the six witnesses whose evidence that Commission had. The object of that Commission was mainly, if not entirely, to deal with the establishment through the courts of law of a more reasonable and satisfactory system of procedure in divorce than that which then obtained by means of private Acts of Parliament, and that object was kept steadily in view by the Government in the debates in the year 1857, when, for this reason only, substantial changes in the law as administered by Parliament were opposed by them, with the exception that desertion for two years was added to the existing grounds for judicial separation and as a ground which, added to adultery, would give a wife a right to sue for a divorce against husband.

7. This Commission is indebted to the witnesses who have been called before it for an immense mass of information and learning as well as statements based on practical experience relating to all parts of the matters inquired into, much of which has evidently been the result of very careful investigation and thought.

Difference between an Inquiry held to-day and in former Times.

8. But, further, it is of the utmost importance in considering much that has been thought and has taken place with regard to these matters to keep in mind the immense difference there is between the circumstances under which an inquiry is held in the years 1910 and 1911 and those existing at any period of the world's history prior, say, to the last 50 years.

9. We live in a world which would be hardly recognised even by our grandparents. To-day, astronomy, geology, biology, and other sciences have revealed secrets of the heavens and earth which were unknown to, and undreamed of by, man in former days; more especially have they given to him some conception of the immeasurable periods of time through which the earth must have revolved on its orbit; disclosed traces of the existence of human life upon it from vastly remote times; and manifested the impossibility of accepting in an historical and not an allegorical sense the Biblical account of the creation of the world and man. The habitable globe is now fairly known throughout; communication from one part of it to another by transit is extremely rapid, and by message is instantaneous, so that people at one extremity of it know daily and even hourly what is going on at another extreme. The sea has been conquered, and even the conquest of the air is at hand. Diseases, plagues, and pestilences have been traced, or are in process of being traced, to their sources, and are no longer attributed directly to a supernatural origin. Although much remains to be clearly discovered, man's habitat is understood to-day to an extent which, to the former dwellers upon earth, must have been inconceivable. Heavenly bodies have also been mapped out, counted, examined as to their motions, structure, distance, inter-relationship and other properties, and, although discovery may be still in its infancy and mysteries of the universe are still undiscovered and may perhaps remain insoluble, much has been done to free the human mind from superstitious beliefs and terrors and from that dark ignorance which for so long overshadowed human life.

10. Contrast the state of knowledge which to-day exists with that which prevailed in the days of which we have first any reasonably reliable records, whether by monuments, writings, or otherwise; and even with that which prevailed in later historic times, whether Jewish, Greek, Roman, early Christian, mediæval, or indeed even with that of 50 years ago, and then consider how the state of knowledge at various times has influenced beliefs, thoughts, and actions, and how there has been a gradual, insensible, yet radical modification of the habits of thought prevailing in Europe. The change is still, no doubt, in progress. Its limits have not yet been reached, and it would be idle to attempt to forecast the developments which time will bring forth; but the change itself is profound and fundamental.

11. When we face to-day problems of human life, it is necessary to consider what reliance we are to place upon the opinions of legislators, scholars, divines, and others in earlier days upon those problems, when their opinions were unavoidably affected by their beliefs as to many matters which were mysterious to them, but with regard to which we have now actual and accurate knowledge; when men believed that the earth was the centre of the universe, and all the heavenly bodies were its attendants, and that any deviation from the ordinary daily course of those bodies, as, for instance, the appearance of a comet or the occurrence of an eclipse, portended something disastrous to the dwellers upon earth, and was specially directed against them; when they attributed the devastation of countries by plague or other diseases to what used to be regarded as a special interposition of divine power, and termed a "visitation from God," instead of in some cases to their own neglect of proper precautions, and in others to the workings of microbes or modifications of structure discovered by modern scientists; when it was thought that human power and duty were effectively discharged by offering up prayers for deliverance from physical evils which are now recognised as due to natural causes and human weaknesses, and are combatted and controlled by human action properly directed even with the knowledge already attained; and when their superstition was such that they condemned or censured those who advanced scientific theories, now recognised to be sound, but not then acceptable even to the enlightened, or sent to the stake those unfortunates to whom they attributed evil powers derived from an infernal spirit. It seems in these circumstances not unreasonable to attach less importance and weight to the opinions of men of early times, including the Fathers of the Church, and of later divines and scholars than were attached thereto in days which were less enlightened than our own, and even up to comparatively recent times. The effect of these erroneous views and of this ignorance was not confined to the particular matters involved: they affected men's whole outlook on human life.

Two Illustrations.

12. It is not necessary to elaborate these observations, but it may be useful to give two well-known illustrations of the wide difference between views generally accepted to-day and those entertained even as late as the 17th and 18th centuries.

13. Even after the minds of men had been stirred by the great movement of the Reformation, we find that the discoveries and theories of eminent experimental philosophers, such as Hipparchus or Ptolemy, were generally forgotten or overlooked; that the promulgation by Copernicus of the system which goes by his name was regarded as a danger to religion, and that on the 24th of February 1616 consulting theologians of the holy office characterised the two propositions that the sun is immovable in the centre of the world, and that the earth has a diurnal motion of rotation—the first as "absurd in philosophy and formally heretical "because expressly contrary to Holy Scripture," and the second as "open to the same censure in philosophy "and at least erroneous as to faith," and that on the 22nd June 1633 Galileo, whose discoveries are so well known and who extended and improved upon the discoveries and theories of his predecessors, was condemned by seven cardinals "as vehemently suspected of heresy" to incarceration at the pleasure of the tribunal, and by way of penance was enjoined to recite once a week for three years the seven penitential psalms. The decree, however, fortunately for him, did not receive papal ratificatiou.

14. Another illustration is the persistent continuance of the belief in witchcraft. One of the last executions for this offence in our enlightened country took place in 1665, when two wretched women were hanged at Bury St. Edmund's under a sentence of Sir Matthew Hale, then Lord Chief Baron. Sir Thomas Browne, a great physician as well as a great writer, was called at the trial as a witness, and swore that he was clearly of opinion that the persons were bewitched. The trial is reported in State Trials, vol. VI., 647–702), and a concise account of it is given in Lord Campbell's "Lives of the Chief Justices," vol. I., p. 563 et seq. (ed. 1849).

15. Dalyell, in his "Superstitions of Scotland," pp. 669, 670, notices having seen nine women burning together at Leith in the year 1664, and even as late as 1773 the Divines of the Associated Presbytery of Scotland passed a resolution declaring their belief in witchcraft and deploring the scepticism which was general (Macaulay's History, vol. III., p. 706, ed. 1855). Executions for this offence took place in England and Scotland as late as the end of the 17th or beginning of the 18th century (1712), but the burning of a sorcerer in Spain appears to have taken place as late as 1780. I may refer for these dates to Sir William Lecky's work, "Rationalism in Europe," pp, 122, 135, 136, and p. 5. The first volume, chap. I., gives a full account of the history of the belief in magic and witchcraft and the consequences thereof.

Change in Conceptions.

16. It has seemed to me desirable to make these preliminary observations, because they appear to be necessary when approaching the consideration of problems which have been discussed from time to time for centuries, and can now, for reasons above indicated, be looked at from an entirely new point of view, unfettered by many difficulties which our forefathers must have felt. Although at first their materiality may not be readily apparent, the bearing which they have upon the subject will become clear as I proceed.

It is right to add that not only have our increase in knowledge and our abandonment or modification of old beliefs and opinions completely altered our standpoint from that of our forefathers, but results similar in character have followed from modern conceptions of the relations between the sexes. In times not so very remote it was considered that a wife was the property of her husband, or more or less under his dominion, and that her lot was to endure treatment at his hands, even though it might be destructive of her happiness and disastrous to her health, which nearly every witness examined before the Commission thought entitled her now-a-days not only to remonstrate but to terminate cohabitation. Further, even in the present day, the idea which used to be universal is not yet extinct, that a woman ought to continue cohabitation in the interest of her husband and out of deference to her marriage vows, although her husband's vicious example and teaching may be ruinous to her children already born and intercourse with him may result in the production of diseased and degenerate offspring.

Different Views to be considered.

17. I pass on to matters with which the State is immediately concerned. What view should be adopted with regard to the principles to be applied to the formation and dissolution of matrimony?

18. If marriage ought to be considered by the Legislature as indissoluble, the Act of 1857 ought to be repealed, and no private Acts of Parliament dissolving marriages ought to be passed, and it would be unnecessary to attempt to answer any of the questions raised, except on some minor points and as to the jurisdiction and procedure of courts of summary jurisdiction. The result of this position cannot be shirked. England would then be the scene of unredressed matrimonial wrongs to an extent greater than in any previous period of her history, unless resort were had to the revival of the extensive mediæval powers of annulment and the abuses which would arise therefrom.

19. If marriage ought to be considered by the Legislature as indissoluble, except for the cause of adultery, questions raised as to means of enabling the poorer classes to bring their cases before the courts, as to publication, as to the equality of the sexes with regard to adultery, and as to some amendments in the administration of the law in the High Court and in courts of summary jurisdiction, will require to be considered.

20. If, however, marriage ought to be regarded by the Legislature as dissoluble upon grounds in addition to adultery, it will then be necessary to deal with the question of what ought to be the other grounds, and the conditions and restrictions under which they ought to be allowed, as well as with all the questions aforesaid.

21. It is then necessary to determine on what principles the Legislature should proceed in enacting laws on the subject of marriage and divorce; or, dividing the question, should the Legislature proceed in enacting such laws on the principle that marriage is—

(a) indissoluble; or
(b) is dissoluble only on the ground of adultery; or
(c) is dissoluble on some grounds in addition to adultery.

22. The first important point to notice is that questions relating to marriage and divorce affect all the inhabitants of this country, whether they are believing Christians, nominal Christians, or do not belong to any Christian church, and the Legislature cannot allow its consideration of these questions, even in a country in which the larger proportion of the inhabitants are Christians, or nominally such, to be limited by the views expressed by representatives of Christian churches, especially where so much difference exists between them as the evidence before the Commission shows. I shall revert to this point later on, but I shall at first proceed to deal with the questions mainly from the points of view in which they may be regarded by Christians.

Question as regarded by Christians.

23. I notice that with regard to the three entirely different principles above stated, it may be necessary, even from a Christian point of view, to differentiate between marriages contracted between Christians and marriages outside Christianity, for I understand that a number of members of the Church of England who maintain that the bond of Christian marriage is indissoluble except by death, agreeing in this respect with the doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church, do not regard marriages contracted outside Christianity as essentially indissoluble. This is expressed as a conclusion by Mr. Watkins in his work on "Holy Matrimony" at page 589, and I gather that this is in accordance with the evidence of the Bishop of Birmingham, from which I quote the following questions and answers:—

> "21,243. (Chairman.) Is your view now, as a conclusion, that marriage should be treated as indissoluble?—In the Church—yes.
>
> "21,244. In the Church?—Yes. I will not say what I think is possible in civil society, but in the Church.
>
> * * * *
>
> "21,258. How would your view apply to the the cases, which undoubtedly would be numerous in England, of persons who are not Christians at all and yet are married according to their own rights or according to the registrar's form of celebration. I mean the State must consider all its citizens?—Quite so. The early Christians regarded those marriages very largely as marriages which might be rendered Christian if the parties became Christians, but which were, so to speak, voidable. St. Paul, for example, maintains that if two parties had been married, being Pagans, and had subsequently become Christian, it was a matter of choice between them whether they maintained or did not maintain the marriage.

"21,259. I wanted to get at this, whether the view you present at the moment is that a Christian marriage should be treated as indissoluble, but that any other marriage should be treated as dissoluble by the State, in considering the matter?—I should respectfully propose that the State would have to (taking the matter in its broadest sense) pay great regard to the fact of differences of conception. I conceive that in India the State does that. It recognises there that the marriage contract or agreement means a great many different things. Unhappily, as I should think, the modern State would have to pay regard to that.

* * * *

"21,504. (Lord Guthrie.) My Lord, do you think that all marriages entered into in England are indissoluble for any cause, or only what have been called Christian marriages? — Not all marriages, because, of course, Jewish marriages would not be, I suppose."

24. The result of this differentiation is thus expressed by the witness:—

"21,442. How far, under those circumstances, would you think that the State was bound to consider, with regard to its marriage law, the large numbers of its citizens who do not wish for Christian matrimony, or who were not, because they were not Christian, capable of Christian marriage?—Oh, certainly.

"21,443. You think the State is bound to consider that?—Oh, most certainly. I do not think the State law can be maintained at a level much higher than the average public opinion of the citizens at any time.

"21,444. So would you consider it as inconsistent that the principles you have laid down this afternoon that the State should have regard in its public law to these citizens who cannot be regarded as desiring or capable of Christian marriage?—Of course a Christian citizen would try to influence public opinion, but he cannot complain at the State law following public opinion."

25. It is to be observed that the Rev. Edmund Wood, who gave evidence on behalf of the English Church Union, appeared to be of opinion that for reasons he put forward with regard to the original institution of matrimony, all marriages should be regarded as indissoluble (Q. 40,384–5).

26. Those who maintain that Christian marriage is indissoluble argue that, however aggravated and however widespread the hardships and personal injustice may be that arise from the application of this principle, these wrongs must remain without a remedy other than mere separation between the parties, and their sufferings must be tolerated as belonging to the necessary order of things, inasmuch as there is a specific law of marriage instituted by God Himself at the Creation and expressly adopted and confirmed by Christ; a law incapable of variation; a law set forth in definite terms and so clear that any municipal variation of it is as much a defiance of the order of things as a breach of what are known as natural laws.

27. Then, again, other members of Christian Churches accept the view which has been acted on in England for about 200 years and is recognised by the present Statute Law that Christian as well as non-Christian marriage is dissoluble on the ground of adultery, and found this view upon the interpretation of St. Matthew's Gospel, in which they consider that Christ is represented as allowing this exception. But, save with regard to this exception, their attitude towards the hardships and personal injustice caused by other matters, which break up a home even as much or more than adultery, is similar to that of those who maintain the absolute indissolubility of marriage.

28. And, again, other members of Christian Churches admitting broader views maintain that the conditions of divorce are properly to be determined by the State in the light of Christian principle with reference to the actual necessities and circumstances of men. This is shown by the following passage from the evidence of Canon Hensley Henson, who maintained that the mass of the communicants in England would not sustain the rigid view of the clergy (Q. 22,678):—

"22,585. * * * * * *

It will be sufficiently apparent that when the sacramental view of marriage is frankly abandoned, and the permanence of the marriage bond is seen to be contingent on conditions which may cease, there emerges the grave and difficult practical question as to the circumstances which shall be held to imply such a destruction of the marriage bond. All Christians hold that death destroys the bond; most Christians hold that adultery does so. Beyond that point there is less agreement, but most Protestant Christians agree in the principle that whatever can be shown to render impossible the primary objects of marriage is primâ facie a sufficient ground for divorce. If it be rightly contended that there is nothing in the Gospels which can fairly be described as 'a definite and detailed social law,' and if it is not the case that Christ's words with respect to marriage are in such sense 'plain and direct' as to close the question for His disciples, then it would seem to follow that the conditions of divorce are properly to be determined by the State in the light of Christian principle with reference to the actual necessities and circumstances of men. So long as the marriage law does not violate Christian principle it can claim from the Church respect and obedience."

29. Those who would affirm the first principle (that marriage is indissoluble) are naturally opposed to any extension of the present law and system of its administration, and those who would affirm the second (that marriage is dissoluble only on the ground of adultery) would naturally be in opposition to an extension of the law to other grounds of divorce besides adultery, but are not necessarily averse to an improvement in its administration; whereas those who would favour the last alternative would not necessarily find themselves opposed to either reform.

30. Two important points may be noticed before proceeding to examine the proper principles to be applied One is the remarkable diversity of view in the Church of England with regard to these principles—and there are other churches which differ still further—and yet all churches have identically the same sources from which to draw their conclusions; and, although there is a whole world of literature upon the subject, the original materials on which the question depends are extremely limited. If these materials in the Old and New Testaments are examined without partiality or preconceived inclination to arrive at one result rather than another, and with adequate regard as to the origin of these materials, there ought to be no reason for such wide diversity of opinion.

31. The other point is that where Christians affirm either of the first two principles and apply them only to Christians and not to non-Christians, they do not affirm any general ordinance applicable to all mankind, or any general principle as governing monogamous union; a remarkable, and, as it seems to me, illogical position to adopt if there be any express divine law which should be applied originating in a principle enunciated at the Creation. On the other hand, those Christians who would affirm the last alternative would probably find that, commencing with a general principle of indissolubility, and admitting exceptions according to human necessities, they would be in practical accord with non-Christians who would settle the difficulties by human principles, that is to say, by basing their conclusions upon a consideration of the conditions of human life, and of what would best tend to the social and moral well-being of the people. They would be unable to regard any law as of divine origin which did not show an adequate consideration of such matters, or any appreciation of evolution in human relations. Such a law would involve a contradiction in terms.

32. It is, therefore, in the first instance desirable to come to a reasonably certain conclusion as to whether or not the views, either of those who affirm the principle first stated, or of those who affirm the second, are supported by divine ordinance, and if so which view is so supported; and then, if no reasonably certain conclusion can be reached in favour of either of those views, to proceed to consider the principles by which those who would support the last alternative principle (whether they do so from a Christian or a non-Christian point of view, influenced both on grounds of religious and public policy or out of regard to considerations of public policy only) should be guided.

33. An answer in the affirmative to either of the first two questions stated will be found to rest mainly upon the views entertained by ecclesiastics and those following their views, which declare that, according to the teaching of the Founder of Christianity, divorce is absolutely forbidden to Christians entirely, or at any rate, for any cause except one, that is to say, adultery; or, in other words, that Christian marriage is indissoluble, or, at any rate, indissoluble except for the said one cause. Passages in the Holy Scriptures are used in support of these views. The most important in addition to the verses 1–4 of the 24th chapter of Deuteronomy, are the following taken from the Revised Version:—

St. Matthew.

V., 31. It was said also, Whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement:

32. But I say unto you, that every one that putteth away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, maketh her an adulteress; and whosoever shall marry her when she is put away committeth adultery.

XIX., 3. And there came unto Him Pharisees, tempting him and saying, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause?

4. And He answered and said, Have ye not read, that He which made them from the beginning made them male and female.

5. And said, For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife; and the twain shall become one flesh?

6. So that they are no more twain, but one flesh. What, therefore, God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

7. They say unto Him, Why then did Moses command to give a bill of divorcement, and to put her away?

8. He saith unto them, Moses for your hardness of heart suffered you to put away your wives: but from the beginning it hath not been so.

9. And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and he that marrieth her when she is put away committeth adultery.

10. The disciples say unto Him, If the case of the man is so with his wife, it is not expedient to marry.

11. But He said unto them, All men cannot receive this saying, but they to whom it is given.

12. For there are eunuchs, which were so born from their mother's womb: and there are eunuchs, which were made eunuchs by men: and there are eunuchs, which made themselves eunuchs for the Kingdom of Heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

St. Mark.

X., 2. And there came unto him Pharisees, and asked him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife? tempting him.

3. And He answered and said unto them, What did Moses command you?

St. Mark.

X., 4. And they said, Moses suffered to write a bill of divorcement, and to put her away.

5. But Jesus said unto them, For your hardness of heart he wrote you this commandment.

6. But from the beginning of the Creation male and female made He them.

7. For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife;

8. And the twain shall become one flesh: so that they are no more twain, but one flesh.

9. What, therefore, God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

10. And in the house the disciples asked Him again of this matter.

11. and He saith unto them, Whosoever shall put away his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery against her;

12. And if she herself shall put away her husband, and marry another, she committeth adultery.

St. Luke.

XVI., 18. Everyone that putted away his wife and marrieth another, committeth adultery: and he that marrieth one that is put away from a husband committeth adultery.

1. Corinthians.

VII., 1. Now concerning the things whereof ye wrote: It is good for a man not to touch a woman.

2. But, because of fornications, let each man have his own wife, and let each woman have her own husband.

3. Let the husband render unto the wife her due: and likewise also the wife unto the husband.

4. The wife hath not power over her own body but the husband: and likewise also the husband hath not power over his own body, but the wife.

5. Defraud ye not one the other, except it be by consent for a season, that ye may give yourselves unto prayer, and may be together again, that Satan tempt you not because of your incontinency.

6. But this I say by way of permission, not of commandment.

7. Yet I would that all men were even as I myself. Howbeit each man hath his own gift from God, one after this manner, and another after that.

8. But I say to the unmarried and to widows, It is good for them if they abide even as I.

9. But if they have not continency, let them marry: for it is better to marry than to burn.

10. But unto the married I give charge, yea not I but the Lord, That the wife depart not from her husband.

11. (But, and if she depart, let her remain unmarried, or else be reconciled to her husband); and that the husband leave not his wife.

12. But to the rest say I, not the Lord: If any brother hath an unbelieving wife, and she is content to dwell with him, let him not leave her.

13. And the woman which hath an unbelieving husband, and he is content to dwell with her, let her not leave her husband.

14. For the unbelieving husband is sanctified in the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified in the brother; else were your children unclean; but now are they holy.

15. Yet if the unbelieving departeth, let him depart: the brother or the sister is not under bondage in such cases: but God hath called us in peace.

I. Corinthians.

VII., 16. For how knowest thou O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband? or how knowest thou O husband, whether thou shalt save thy wife?

Romans.

VII., 2. For the woman that hath a husband is bound by law to the husband while he liveth; but if the husband die, she is discharged from the law of the husband.

3. So then if, while the husband liveth, she be joined to another man, she shall be called an adulteress: but if the husband die, she is free from the law, so that she is no adulteress, though she be joined to another man.

34. For the 19 centuries which have elapsed since the commencement of the Christian era controversies have raged as to the meaning to be placed on these passages. The literature on the subject is enormous, including as it does the writings of the early Fathers of the Church, divines, and lay scholars of different ages, opinions of the great Protestant reformers and others, conflicting decrees of councils, &c. It may be interesting to note that Mr. W. E. Gladstone in his speech of July 31st, 1857, in opposition to the second reading of the Bill of 1857 in the House of Commons, gives seven different constructions, as the following extract from the speech will show: "Now, Sir, it is "not to be dissembled that a very great diversity of "opinion prevails with respect to the due construction "to be put on Scripture in this matter. There are, in "the first place, those who think that the prohibition "of divorce—that is, divorce carrying with it the "power of re-marriage—is absolute. There are those "who think that there is in Scripture permission to "marry after divorce in case of adultery alone, but "that the permission is limited to the innocent man, "and that there is not given to the woman under any "circumstances liberty to marry. That I believe to be "the most ancient opinion of the Christian Church "after the old law, as I shall call it, of indissolubility. "There are those who go one step further. They "give liberty of divorce and re-marriage both to "the innocent man and to the innocent woman. "There are others who give liberty of divorce "after adultery to both parties if they are innocent, "and to the man although he is guilty. There "are others, and that is the description of the "Scotch law at the present moment, who give it to "both whether innocent or guilty, provided there is "no intermarriage between the guilty parties. There "is another class that permits the intermarriage of "the guilty parties, and there is another which con-"siders that divorce may be permitted not only for "adultery but for other causes . . . . We have "many causes far more fatal to the great obligations "of marriage, as disease, idiocy, crime involving "imprisonment for life, and which, if the bond be "dissoluble, might be urged as a reason for divorce. ". . . . With respect to the great question of the "indissolubility of marriage, let me observe we had "too much dogmatism, but the length to which I "would push the argument is this—That the Gospel "was intended to work out a certain great and "provident result; and the mode of attaining this "result, the most blessed and precious for mankind "at large, was, in the wisdom of God, not by means of "commands and forms in a rigid shape, but rather "by the infusion of a new spirit into the precepts of "the law, a spirit that pervaded every artery and vein "of society, raised its tone from the degradation of "heathenism, abolished the cruel sacrifice of human "life, abolished the exposure of children, abolished "polygamy, abolished slavery."—(Hansard, vol. 147, p. 838–841.)

35. No common accord or understanding has been reached even at the present day, although the controversies have turned, and according to witnesses before the Commission, still turn mainly, if not entirely, upon the actual words used in the passages referred to. Mr. Watkins, whose work on "Holy Matrimony" has been already mentioned, at p. 151 thereof, says: "The "evidence of Holy Scripture is difficult to understand, "the appeal to Christian tradition is not quite "uniformly answered, and from the standpoint of "reason it may be conceded that there are arguments "of weight on both sides." This want of accord is perhaps not so strange when it is remembered that to-day's controversies are inherited from times of ignorance and superstition, from periods of violent recoil from prevailing licence, when ascetic doctrines prevailed and celibacy was glorified at the expense of marriage, when the the theory of verbal inspiration and the consequent inerrancy of the Scriptures were universally accepted and free criticism of those writings and inquiries as to their authorship and source and comparative values were considered inadmissible, and when the limits of man's knowledge and the depth of his ignorance may be easily understood from what I have already stated: if any one requires ocular demonstration of this, let him look at the celebrated Mappa Mundi in Hereford Cathedral, designed, according to M. D'Avezac, the French geographer, early in 1314.*

36. At the present day the Scriptures are no longer looked on as outside the region of critical investigation, and partly owing to the development of textual and historical criticism, and partly to the progress of modern geological, archæological, biological and other scientific knowledge,† and to the discovery of the Assyro-Babylonian and other cosmogonies and to other causes,† they can now be criticised in a way that was impossible in former days, and there are considerations to-day which were formerly either unknown or considered without weight, but which now seem to show grounds upon which religious and ecclesiastical difficulties which the question under discussion present may be lightened or overcome.

37. The present position is that—

The Roman Catholic Church does not permit divorce a vinculo.

The Scottish law, accepted by the Protestant churches of Scotland, allows divorce to either sex for adultery or malicious desertion for four years.

The Greek Church allows divorce to either sex for adultery, and other causes are recognised in Greece, as shown by the synopsis, Minutes of Evidence, p. 4.

The law of England recognises adultery as a ground of divorce, coupled, in the case of a wife's suit, with certain added circumstances.

The laws of other Christian countries appear in the synopsis aforesaid.

38. The evidence given by witnesses who appeared before the Commissioners discloses that there is not unanimity in the Protestant churches, and that even in the Church of England there are at least the three different opinions stated above held by the clergy and members of that Church on the subject, but which of these opinions is supported by a larger number of persons it is difficult, if not impossible, to judge; nor are there available means of determining the number of the clergy who hold one opinion rather than another, nor the numbers of the laity who agree in one opinion or another, nor the relative proportions of clergy and laity in each case. I restate these opinions for convenience in this form:—

(1) That marriage is indissoluble.

(2) That marriage is dissoluble on the ground of adultery.

---

* See "Gentleman's Magazine," May 1863, and Murray's Handbook to the Cathedrals of England, p. 113.

† I refer to the Creation tablets deciphered by the late eminent Assyriologist, George Smith, and brought to the British Museum along with other treasures from the famous library of Assurbanipal (668–626 B.C.) excavated at Kouyunjik (Nineveh) and to Sayce's "Fresh Light from the Ancient Monuments"; Schrader's "Cuneiform Inscriptions in the Old Testament" (translation by Professor O. C. Whitehouse) and "Records of the Past" (edited by Sayce), second series, vol. 1, pp. 122, 153; and Boscawen in "The Babylonian and Oriental Record, October, 1890."

(3) That marriage is dissoluble for such grave causes as render joint married life actually or practically impossible.

The witnesses base these opinions mainly on questions of construction of the Scriptures, and have very fully discussed them. This is important, because none of the witnesses, including eminent biblical scholars among the clergy, have claimed any special powers, other than those acquired by study, which enabled them to consider the matters more effectively than can be done by adequately informed reasonable laymen. For this reason, although the legislature is not likely to examine into questions of theology, yet, as the views aforesaid are material and the grounds upon which they have been formed have been very fully gone into and explained by many learned men before the Commission, I think it right to point out certain matters which may assist open minds in coming to a conclusion upon these questions, if they approach them as I have endeavoured to do, without allowing pre-conceived opinions to overrule reason.

39. The points and suggestions which I venture to make are put forward with the utmost diffidence, for they are within the province of the theologian rather than within that of one whose training and work have been of a legal character; but the original materials referred to by the witnesses, and upon which comments have been made from time to time by numerous writers, are after all of a very limited nature, and I think it may be useful to make in these notes observations which have occured to me from a consideration of the evidence and writings and documents, including certain points arising out of the consideration of the scriptural texts pertinent to this matter which do not seem to me to have been raised by any of the witnesses, or in any of the works cited by them.

Notes on various Material Points.

40.—(1) The English text is derived from a large number of varying manuscripts and versions in the Greek language,* which seem to have been derived from words spoken in Aramaic, and not from any contemporaneous writings. There does not appear to have been any commitment of the Gospels to a written form until some uncertain number of years after the Crucifixion, though a document known to critics as "Q" (Quelle, source), the existence of which at some time is presumed by them, is regarded as of very early but uncertain date. The Epistle to the Corinthians referred to is supposed to be of a date some 25 years after the crucifixion.† It is stated that owing to the length of time which elapsed between the happening of the events recorded and the dates of the written records and the unreliability of human memory it is impossible to be certain that we now have a precise or full account either of what took place or of what was said.

(2) The state of Jewish society and practice with regard to divorce has been placed before us,‡ and seems to be better understood by scholars at the present day than at former times. We are thus assisted in understanding the bearings of the passages in question on the disputes which existed between the Jewish schools, and more especially between the school of Shammai and that of Hillel. The former contended for a strict reading of the passages in the Old Testament, while the latter maintained a view which practically permitted a man to put away his wife whenever he chose to do so. Upon this I may refer to the 24th chapter of Deuteronomy, v. 1–4, and the comments thereon by that well-known and very learned writer Dr. Driver, Regius Professor of Hebrew and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford, in his work on Deuteronomy (ed. 1909) at pp. 269–273.

(3) The first and second chapters of the Book of Genesis, which contain what has been termed the Mosaic account of the Creation, are, according to what I understand, to be the best modern opinion composed of distinct documents or sources which have been welded together by a later compiler (or "redactor") into a continuous whole. C. I.–II., v. 4^a, and C. II., v. 4^b–25, contain a double narrative of the origin of man upon earth; the former belonging to the age of Ezekiel and the exile (6th century B.C.) forming part of what is commonly called the priestly narrative, denoted for brevity by the letter P, and the latter belonging probably to the 9th century B.C., and forming part of what from its use of the name Jahweh is generally denoted as "J." Dr. Driver, from whose great work on "The Book of Genesis" these statements are taken (pp. iii, iv, xvi, Introduction), says at page xlii of the Introduction: "We are forced "therefore to the conclusion that though, as may "be safely assumed, the writers to whom we owe "the first 11 chapters of Genesis, report faithfully "what was currently believed among the Hebrews "respecting the early history of mankind, at the same "time, as is shown in the notes, making their narra- "tives the vehicle of many moral and spiritual lessons, "yet there was much which they did not know and "could not take cognisance of: these chapters, conse- "quently, we are obliged to conclude, incomparable "as they are in other respects, contain no account of "the real beginnings either of the earth itself, or of "man and human civilization upon it," and again at p lxi: "we have found that in the first eleven "chapters there is little or nothing that can be called "historical in our sense of the word: there may be "here and there dim recollections of historical occur- "rences; but the concurrent testimony of geology "and astronomy, anthropology, archæology, and com- "parative philology, is proof that the account given "in these chapters of the Creation of heaven and earth, "the appearance of living things upon the earth, the "origin of man, the beginnings of civilization, the "destruction of mankind and of all terrestrial animals "(except those preserved in the ark) by a flood, the "rise of separate nations, and the formation of different "languages, is no historically true record of these "events as they actually happened. And with regard "to the histories contained in chapters xii–l, we "have found that, while there is no sufficient reason "for doubting the existence, and general historical "character of the biographies, of the patriarchs, "nevertheless, much uncertainty must be allowed to "attach to details of the narrative: we have no "guarantee that we possess verbally exact reports of "the events narrated; and there are reasons for "supposing that the figures and characters of the "patriarchs are in different respects idealized. And, "let it be observed, not one of the conclusions reached "in the preceding pages is arrived at upon arbitary "or à priori grounds; not one of them depends upon "any denial, or even doubt, of the supernatural or of "the miraculous; they are, one and all, forced upon us "by the facts; they follow directly from a simple "consideration of the facts of physical science and "human nature, brought to our knowledge by the "various sciences concerned, from a comparison of "these facts with the Biblical statements, and from "an application of the ordinary canons of historical "criticism. Fifty or sixty years ago, a different "judgment, at least on some of the points involved, "was no doubt possible: but the immense accessions "of knowledge, in the departments both of the "natural sciences and of the early history of man, "which have resulted from the researches of recent "years, make it impossible now: the irreconcilability "of the early narratives of Genesis with the facts "of science and history must be recognised and "accepted."*

I find in this passage, from a work by one of the greatest living authorities in the Established Church, a statement as to the immense change in thought which

* A short account of this is to be found in Mr. Watkins' book, pp. 152–164.

† See the evidence of the Bishop of Ely (Q. 23,055, 23,058) and other witnesses.

‡ See evidence of Mr. Abrahams and Dr. Adler.

* Reference is also made to pp. 33, 36, and 51–56 of the same work. See also "Early Narratives of Genesis" by Bishop Ryle and the article by Whitehouse in Hasting's Dictionary, vol. 1, "Cosmogony." See also Cambridge Biblical Essays.

has taken place in the last half century, and that the account of the Creation given in the first two chapters of Genesis is no longer regarded as an inspired revelation in the sense of a record of real facts. The bearing of this upon the construction of the already-mentioned passages in the New Testament, upon which so much reliance is placed by those who base their opposition to any reform of the law on scriptural grounds, is of the utmost importance, for it will be seen upon a close examination of those passages that a construction of them is possible and reasonable to-day, to which in former days orthodox Christians might have felt it difficult or even impossible to assent.

(4) A difficulty which has been felt by the Western Church throughout the ages with regard to the treatment of the subject of divorce in the first of the Gospels may, according to certain modern critics, be eliminated if their views be accepted. That difficulty arises from the exception, "except for fornication," in the ninth verse of the 19th chapter of St. Matthew; and the exception, "saving for the cause of fornication," in the 32nd verse of the 5th chapter of the same Gospel, the specification of which exception has been and is regarded by the second category of Christians above alluded to as limiting divorce to one cause only. This exception has been a stumbling block, on the one hand, to those who oppose divorce altogether, and on the other hand, to those who advocate divorce for other grounds.

Competent critics point to certain inconsistencies in the account in St. Matthew xix., and maintain that they show that the account in St. Mark is original and that εἰ μὴ ἐπὶ πορνείᾳ and παρεκτὸς λόγου πορνείας are insertions by the editor of St. Matthew into St. Mark's narrative. With regard to this I refer to the evidence of the Bishop of Ely (Minutes of Evidence, Vol. II., p. 435), of Dr. Paterson (ib., p. 442), of the Bishop of Birmingham (ib., p. 347), of Canon Hensley Henson (p. 411), and of Dr. Sanday (Q. 38,476 et seq.), Dr. Inge (Q. 38,672 et seq.), Dr. Denney (Q. 38,777 et seq.) and others. I may also refer to the notes on these verses by W. C. Allen, M.A., Chaplain, Fellow and Lecturer in Theology and Hebrew, Exeter College, Oxford, in "A Critical and Exegetical "Commentary on the Gospel according to St. Mat- "thew," pp. 52, 201–206. At page 52 he says: "It "is, however, open to question whether this exception "(in v. 32) is not an addition of the editor, repre- "senting no doubt two influences, viz., Jewish custom "and tradition, and the exigencies of ethical necessity "in the early Christian Church. A similar exception "is made in xix. 9, and it will there be seen that the "clause is clearly an interpolation. There is, there- "fore, a presumption that it has also been interpolated "here. Moreover, the teaching of Christ as recorded by "St. Mark (x. 11) seems to preclude any such exception.

I gather that the exceptions are now regarded by high authorities as interpolations or interpretations of Christ's teaching according to the view of it held by the writer of the first Gospel, and that if these exceptions are eliminated the passages are brought into consistency with those in St. Mark and St. Luke, to which I refer later on. If these views are not accepted, then it is to be noticed that several different interpretations have been given to the word πορνεία, which are referred to by the Bishop of Ely in his evidence (Vol. II., p. 434); and that by some the exception has been treated as illustrative and not exclusive. The contention of many eminent theologians seems reasonable, that the introduction of the exception clearly shows that the writer, who recorded the account with the exception, did not consider that Christ laid down a principle of indissolubility absolutely regardless of any exceptions. This last consideration, as bearing on the proper interpretation of the teaching, is of the greatest importance; upon this, see the evidence of Dr. Sanday, Dr. Inge, Dr. Denney, &c.

(5) The evidence appears to show that modern critics regard the Gospel according to St. Mark as the earliest written record which we now have of the words and deeds of Jesus Christ, though the document known as "Q" already referred to is thought to have been earlier than St. Mark's Gospel.* This Gospel is attributed to the Mark mentioned in the Acts, and Papias, who was martyred at Pergamos in 163 A.D. mentions a tradition that Mark, who neither heard nor accompanied Christ, committed to writing what he heard from St. Peter. The date and place of the writing seem to be uncertain. There is some tradition that it was written at Rome. (Principal Lindsay, "The Gospel according to St. Mark," pp. 14–17.)

(6) From the general character of the discourses it seems clear that Christ spoke, not as a legislator, but as indicating general principles, and without expressing exceptions thereto. Clear instances of this are found in the 5th chapter of Matthew, verse 34, "Swear not at all"; verse 39, "Resist not evil" (R.V., "Resist not him that is evil"); verse 40, "And if any man will sue "thee at law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy "cloke also"; verse 42, "Give to him that asketh thee"; chapter vi., verse 19, "Lay not up for your- selves treasures upon earth"; verse 25, "Take no "thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye "shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall "put on."

Those who would forbid divorce in all circumstances because of Christ's unqualified words (supposing they were unqualified) seem to fall into the same error as the Society of Friends, who consider war and litigation absolutely forbidden by Christ's express command, "Resist not evil," and who refuse to take an oath in a court of justice because of his injunction, "Swear not at all." None of the witnesses who were examined on this point were able to give a satisfactory explanation why words, equally unambiguous and unqualified in each case, should be subject, when carried into application, to exceptions in the one case and not in the other (see the evidence of the Bishop of Ely, p. 437).

Christ's teaching was spiritual. He taught, preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom of Heaven. To Pilate, He said, "My Kingdom is not of this world," and there are no indications in the Gospels of any interference by Him with the institutions and government of the country. Indeed, when, as it is recorded, the Pharisees sought to entangle Him (and it must be remembered that, in the question of divorce, a similar entanglement was attempted) with a question as to the lawfulness of giving tribute to Cæsar, the often-quoted reply is attributed to Him: "Render therefore unto "Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the "things that are God's." Further, He inculcated great general moral principles without giving forth any detailed or definite social laws and without referring to exceptions to general principles, though in the passages which deal with His comments on the Sabbath Day, He inculcates an exception to a general principle in case of necessity. Cf. Matthew, chapter xii., verses 1–13.

I may also refer to the copy of the late Bishop Creighton's letter written from Peterborough on the 18th March 1895 to the Rev. Canon Stocks in his "Life and Letters" by his widow. He says: "The "marriage question is dreadfully difficult, and would "require a volume. I am sorry for the attitude "recently taken up by Luckock and others. It is not "founded on sound knowledge. Speaking generally, "the question raises in its extremest form the problem "of the actual application to life of the principles "of the Gospel. We must remember—it cannot be "remembered too much—that the Gospel consists "of principles, not of maxims. The only possible "principle concerning marriage is that it is indis- "soluble. But all principles are set aside by sin; and "our Lord recognised that as regards marriage. (The "interpretation of πορνεία as prenuptial unchastity "will not do. Such a man as the Bishop of Lincoln "is against it on patristic grounds. It is untenable.) "I must own myself to a strong indisposition to set "the Church against the State on such a point as the "interpretation of the latitude to be assigned to the "permission of dissolution which our Lord's words "imply. It has always been found difficult to adjust

* "Oxford Studies on the Synoptic Problem." Edited by Dr. Sanday, 1911.

" law and equity. But is the Church on this point " to admit of no equity? The mediæval system was " a mass of fictions or dispensations and subterfuges. " The question has always troubled the English " Church. Cranmer, Andrews, Laud, alike, had no " fixed principles. Now the State has taken matters " into its hand and marriages are primarily civil " contracts. We as Christians abhor divorce. But " when a divorce has been judged necessary, are we to " refuse any liberty to the innocent and wronged " party? It seems to me a matter for our discretion " on equitable grounds in each case. I could not " advise any of my clergy to refuse to solemnize a " marriage of an innocent person who genuinely " desired God's blessing. I prefer to err on the side " of charity."

(7) The last matter to which I would draw attention is the necessity for bearing in mind the circumstances in which the words attributed to Christ are recorded as having been uttered and the context as bearing upon their construction. The importance of this was recognised by the Bishop of Birmingham in the following answers:—

Q. 21,533.

* * * *

"(Lord Guthrie.) I suppose the view we take in the civil courts would not be dissented from by you with regard to the Christian question, namely, this: in considering any utterances of Christ's we must, must we not, consider exactly what was the question under discussion in reference to which He speaks?—Most certainly.

"21,534. You see it happens every day in the courts that the opinion of a great judge or a great authority is quoted; the judge at once asks: what was he talking about; what was the context?—Yes.

"21,535. And the general opinion of a great priest or a great judge is represented or controlled by the particular circumstances?—Yes.

"21,536. Do you agree to that?—Entirely."

41. I have now stated those matters which it has occurred to me should be borne in mind before approaching the consideration of the written records, and I now proceed to examine first the account which is considered, as already stated, to be the most original representation of the teaching of Christ on the subject of divorce, viz., the 10th chapter of the Gospel according to St. Mark, and in my citations I use the revised version. For close textual criticism and biblical exegesis, reference must be made to the scholarly evidence of Dr. Sanday, Dr. Inge, and others, but there are further matters which seem to me to require careful consideration.

42. The scene of the incident related in St. Mark is laid in the country over which Herod Antipas ruled, who had divorced his wife in order to marry his own niece, the wife of his brother Herod Philip, and had beheaded John the Baptist for denouncing his conduct. It must be borne in mind that the Pharisees sought to set Herod against Jesus, and no doubt questions were being raised as to the unlimited right to divorce which were likely to affect morals in Judæa as well as throughout the Roman Empire at that time (Principal Lindsay, op. cit., p. 166). The state of the Jewish law and practice, as described by Mr. Abrahams, must also be remembered. This made the question put before Christ (which did not deal with divorce in our sense of the word, but with "putting away") different in essence from the question which has now to be considered. Broadly speaking, divorce was the unrestricted privilege of the man who could either force his wife's consent to a divorce, or proceed against her if she were unwilling. She had no strict rights, but could practically force him, by pressure brought to bear upon him, to file a bill of divorce in certain circumstances, which did not include mere infidelity, if she wished to be free. But how far this position of a wife was a reality as early as the days of Christ seems from Mr. Abrahams' evidence doubtful. It is in these circumstances that the discussion recorded (Mark x., 1–12) appears to have taken place. The writer, indeed, if what is above stated be correct, was certainly not present. He does not indicate who were present, except in general terms; nor what school of thought the Pharisees referred to represented. He gives a fragmentary account, for it is hardly reasonable to suppose that, with ample opportunity, and having regard to the conduct of the ruler of the country and the disputes between the different schools of Jewish thought, the discussion was confined to the few sentences which have reached us, and he gives an account differing materially from that recorded in the Gospel according to St. Matthew.

43. It is to be noted that at the commencement of the 10th chapter it is stated that the Pharisees came to Jesus into the borders of Judæa beyond Jordan and asked Him a question, "Is it lawful for a man to put " away his wife? tempting Him." It may be considered reasonable to suppose that this brief account is referring to an attempt to entrap Him into an exposition in reference to the conduct of Herod and the disputes existing at the time which might be used against Him. No other explanation has been suggested, so far as I am aware, of why this question should have been put to "tempt Him." What follows after the question appears to be regarded by some who maintain the indissolubility of marriage as indicating that a new command wider than was necessary for the determination of the immediate question was given by Christ, which was to govern the Christian Church in all circumstances and for all time to come. But it may be answered that a close study of verses 3–12 shows that this cannot have been His intention—that no new command was introduced, that no legislation was attempted, and that He was merely placing before His questioners arguments derived from the Jewish Scriptures. Mr. Watkins observes: "If the copula " was an essential feature of the original Divine " institution, it must be no less so of Christian " marriage, which is no new institution, but the " original marriage of Eden taken up into a new " hallowing. All that was essential in Eden must be " essential now." (Watkins, op. cit., p. 114.) If the opinions thus expressed by this writer are to be considered as indicating the views entertained by any considerable body of opinion, we are relegated to the consideration of the Old Testament records in the early chapters of Genesis for the account of the institution of matrimony. But these are not records of real facts. If, however, these opinions are not to be so considered, then it will be seen from the following observations that, if anything in the nature of a general ordinance was promulgated by Christ, it may be regarded as applicable to the then existing Jewish customs, because it was based upon the current interpretation placed upon these chapters by the Jews who regarded them as the records of historical facts, though, if so regarded, they are now known to be irreconcilable with the discoveries of modern times, and can be more naturally regarded as the parabolic and philosophical presentment of the author's conception of truth. It was not part of Christ's mission to correct popular impressions of the Jewish Scriptures. For the purpose of dealing with His hearers, He met them on their own ground and with their own weapons. His answer to the question is thus recorded: "What did Moses command you?" and the reply is obviously a reference to the aforesaid chapter of Deuteronomy,* which placed some restriction on the then existing freedom of divorce by requiring a bill of divorcement. It is: "Moses suffered to write a bill of divorcement and to "put her away." It is then recorded that He gave a reason for Moses suffering the writing of a bill of divorcement and the putting away, thus: (Verse 5) "For your hardness of heart he wrote you this com- "mandment." (Verse 6) "But from the beginning of "the Creation male and female made He them." (Verse 7) "For this cause shall a man leave his father "and mother, and cleave to his wife." (Verse 8) "And the twain shall become one flesh; so that they "are no more twain, but one flesh." It seems clear that He is recorded as quoting from the Book of Genesis I. 27, "Male and female created He them," and from the second chapter of the same Book, verse 24, which contains the words, "Therefore shall "a man leave his father and his mother, and shall "cleave until his wife; and they" (lxx., "the twain") "shall be one flesh." But it is of great importance to notice the concluding words of the 8th verse of the 10th chapter of St. Mark, "so that they are no more "twain, but one flesh." These words are not a quotation, but show an inference drawn from the previous words quoted. The words of the said 24th verse in the 2nd chapter of Genesis appear to be a comment by the narrator upon the account of the creation of woman from a rib of man, which he has given in the previous verses. Dr. Skinner, Professor of Old Testament language and literature, in his work on Genesis, page 70, terms this verse "an ætiological observation of the narrator," and adds, "It is not a "prophecy from the standpoint of the narrative; nor "a recommendation of monogamic marriage (as applied "in Matthew xix. 4 ff, Mark x. 6 ff, 1 Cor. vi., 16, "Eph. v., 31); it is an answer to the question, What "is the meaning of that universal instinct which "impels a man to separate from his parents and cling "to his wife? It is strange that the man's attach- "ment to the woman is explained here, and the "woman's to the man only in iii., 16." Dr. Driver's note on this verse is: "The narrator's comment, "explanatory of the later existing custom (cf. x., 9, "xxii., 14[b], xxxii., 32). Therefore—viz., because man "and woman were originally one, and hence essentially "belong together,—DOTH a man leave his father and "his mother, and CLEAVE *unto his wife; and they "*BECOME one flesh: the attachment between them "becoming greater, and the union closer, even than "between parent and child. Marriage,—and, more- "over, monogamic marriage,—is thus explained as the "direct consequence of a relation established by the "Creator. Cf. Matt. xix., 4–6 (Mark x., 6–8); 1 Cor. "vi., 16, xi., 8–12; Eph. v., 28–33; 1 Tim. ii., 12–14." ("The Book of Genesis," p. 43). I shall have to refer to the words "one flesh," but reserve my observations thereon until later.

* Dr. Driver states that the composition of Deuteronomy must thus be placed at a period long subsequent to the age of Moses, and he places it as a work of the 7th century B.C. "Deuteronomy, p. XLIV. et seq., Introduction," and (at p. LVI. he explains that "all Hebrew legislation, both civil " and ceremonial, however, was (as a fact) derived ultimately " from Moses, though a comparison of the different codes in " the Pentateuch shows that the laws cannot all in their " present form be Mosaic; the Mosaic nucleus was expanded " and developed in various directions as national life became " more complex and religious ideas matured. Nevertheless, " all Hebrew laws are formulated under Moses' name, a fact " which shows that there was a continuous tradition em- " bracing a moral, ceremonial, and a civil element; the " new laws or extensions of old laws, which, as time went " on, were seen to be desirable, were accommodated to this " tradition and incorporated into it, being afterwards enforced " by the priestly or civil authority, as the case might be."

44. It will be observed that the quotation from the said 24th verse is not recorded in precisely the same terms as the original. The 24th verse begins with the word "Therefore." In the previous verses of the 2nd chapter of Genesis the writer expresses his conception of the formation of man, the planting of a garden in Eden, the placing of a man in it, and the making of a woman from a rib taken from Adam while he slept, and proceeds in the 23rd verse thus: "And the man "said, 'This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my "'flesh: she shall be called Woman, because she was "'taken out of Man,'" and then the writer adds, "Therefore," &c.

45. Christ appears to have been referring to the beginning of Creation as it was then believed by the Jews to have taken place, and to the Mosaic account, which, as already pointed out, is not now accepted as other than poetical and allegorical, and He was, in effect, arguing that, from the account given in their own scriptures as they then accepted them, the inference is that from the fact of a male and female creation and union, that union should be monogamous and continuous. The Jews would appear to have treated the Mosaic account of Creation as an account of real facts, and throughout the whole of the Gospels there is no suggestion of any disclosure by Christ of (to use Dr. Driver's words) "the irreconcilability of the early "narratives of Genesis with the facts of science" (p. lxii.), or that in the human capacity in which He appeared on earth he claimed any greater historical or scientific knowledge than those among whom He moved, and therefore it is suggested that His dicta on this matter may be regarded as affected by being statements of inferences from what were then regarded as historical facts but were not in fact such. It does not seem as if sufficient weight has yet been given to the fact that doctrines put forward by Christian churches as if they emanated from Christ are in reality founded upon an Old Testament account of what we now realise were not real facts. General principles may well be founded upon allegorical teaching, but precise enactments are not based on such materials. However much spiritual thoughts may be drawn from the conceptions so marvellously expressed in the early chapters of Genesis, and, though some may regard them as part of a progressive revelation to man, the account is not necessarily a sound basis for theories and laws relating to the temporal life of man upon earth.

46. That the discussion is recorded as argumentative is made still clearer by the 9th verse of the 10th chapter, "What therefore (Gr. οὖν, therefore, consequently) "God hath joined together, let no man put asunder." These words are generally relied upon by objectors to dissolution, but are often misquoted by them, thus: "Those whom God hath joined together, let no man "put asunder." The word in the original refers to the institution of marriage in general, not to the particular individuals concerned. An instance of their use in the form just set out is to be found in the Anglican Marriage Service, and they have been not infrequently misquoted in the course of the proceedings before the Commission. In general quotation the word "therefore" is omitted. But this omission is of the highest moment, because the word omitted shows beyond all question that Christ was not laying down any new principle, but was drawing an argumentative inference Himself from the aforesaid passages in Genesis, which, as the Jews accepted the Mosaic account, gave them a guide on which to found their views on the question which He had been asked. This may be made still plainer by turning back to the second sentence in verse 8, "so "then they are no more twain, but one flesh," which is followed by the "therefore" of the 9th verse. It will be seen that, addressing the Pharisees on their own Scriptures, He only drew a general inference for them from the account of the Creation of man and woman in Genesis as to the normal relationship of the sexes, and that, in the most important verse quoted by Him, an inference was drawn by the narrator. We have thus what may be looked upon as an inference upon an inference, which again is drawn from a poetical conception which was concerned with general sex relations, and not in the least with any question of divorce.

47. So much seems torest upon the Old Testament records quoted by Christ that I pause to notice that, even if they were treated, as in former days they were, as inspired statements of real sayings and doings of the time of Creation, there seems to be nothing in them to justify the conclusion that in no circumstances could the normal relationship of husband and wife be put an end to; and when we now appreciate that they were compiled some few centuries before the Christian era, and when polygamy, in all probability, extensively prevailed, and the putting away of wives was recognised, I confess it seems to me almost impossible to believe that the writer was doing more than express his conception of how the world and men and women on it were created; or that he was intending to deal with, or that he had in the slightest degree in mind, questions of dissolution of marriage.

48. To return to the record in the said 10th chapter —the conversation regarded as above suggested is argumentative, and the argument is based on assumptions accepted by His auditors, but which are not in fact tenable now. The account in St. Mark seems to indicate that the conversation with the Pharisees closed at this point, and it is most remarkable, if Christ intended to lay down publicly a distinct prohibition against divorce and re-marriage in any circumstances, to find no plain statement to this effect recorded in that part of the account which deals with what appears to have been a public discussion.

49. The discussion appears to have been resumed "in the house" (verse 10), where it is stated that the Disciples asked Him again of this matter. The question put by them is not given, but the answer recorded is found in verses 11 and 12. It is always important to know the actual question put if any dispute arises as to the meaning to be given to an answer. If the two conversations are read by the light of the circumstances in which, and the place at which they took place, and of the matters already stated, and, further if they are read without any pre-conceived opinions, it seems reasonably clear that Christ was dealing with the impropriety of a man or woman, whenever he or she chose, putting away the other with the object merely of marrying another person; for He says, "Whosoever shall put away his wife, and marry another, "committeth adultery against her. And if she herself "shall put away her husband and marry another, she "committeth adultery." The collocation of the words "put away" and "marry another" shows that the point was putting away a wife or husband, as the case might be, in order to marry another person. The words "against her" which, however, are not to be found in Matthew, may perhaps be considered not very intelligible; possibly they are indicative of a wrong done to the wife by putting her away without proper cause. There is absolutely no reference to any case in which the circumstances are such that the marriage tie has been sundered de facto though not de jure, and a man and his wife are no longer living together, and it has become impossible for them to do so through the misconduct of one of them, nor to the interference of public justice in such cases, and it seems extraordinary that the record should be entirely silent upon such points if they had ever been present to the mind of anyone who took part in the discussion from which the statement made to the Disciples originated. It may not be unreasonable to suppose, having regard to the brevity of the record, though the subject discussed was one of great importance, that only a fragment has been preserved. It may be noticed that the clause, verse 12, is omitted in the account of Matthew xix., 9, probably because it was inconsistent with the Jewish law, which did not permit a woman to divorce her husband, though upon this see the evidence of Mr. Abrahams already referred to, and Dr. Driver states that "By the later "Jews a wife was permitted in certain cases . . . . "to claim a divorce." But there may be doubts about the 12th verse representing correctly what was said, and the difference between the two Gospels in this respect shows how difficult it is to rely on either of them giving an exact account of what occurred. This is usually the case where more than one account is given from memory of conversations years after they took place. Possibly St. Mark, writing as has been suggested for Gentile Christians, may have written the 12th verse in the form in which we have it as a correlative to the 11th verse.

50. The account in St. Matthew appears to be of the same occasion as that mentioned by St. Mark. It is said by some that this account records the conversation as taking place at one and the same time, whereas in St. Mark it is recorded as taking place partly with the Pharisees and partly with the Disciples, but, although the former account is somewhat transposed, it seems clear from verse 10 that there is recorded a conversation with the Disciples subsequent to that with the Pharisees. The differences are pointed out in the evidence of the witnesses already referred to, and I call attention to that evidence. The general opinion seems to be that this Gospel, as we have it, is much later than that of St. Mark, that the writer may have had the Marcan Gospel before him, and the document, which critics denominate "Q.," as to which there is necessarily much uncertainty.

51. The great difference between the teaching of this Gospel and that of Mark, is that in the former the exception of fornication is expressly introduced both in the 19th and the 5th chapters. In the 19th chapter, verse 9, the words "except for fornication" are introduced (it may be noted that they are, according to the authors of the Revised Version, in some ancient authorities followed by the words, "maketh her an "adulteress," instead of by the words, "and shall "marry another, committeth adultery," and that the former words seem to indicate a wrongful putting away). In chapter 5, verse 32, the words, "saving for "the cause of fornication," are introduced. Critics, as I have noticed, consider, and give reasons for considering, that these words thus introduced, and also the words, "for every cause," in chapter 19, verse 3, and "except for fornication," in the same chapter 19, verse 9, have been added to St. Mark's account, but if they are to be regarded as authoritative, it is to be noted that one school consider the exception aforesaid as illustrative, while another regards it as allowing of divorce for adultery and for that alone. There have also been suggestions that it related to ante-nuptial inconstancy, and not to adultery only, or to prostitution of the wife, or to general misconduct, or to idolatry; and, lastly, the Roman Catholic Church and others consider that it justifies the putting away, which is a separation only and not a divorce. The most weighty modern opinion appears to be in favour of regarding the exception as not mentioned specifically in the discussion and discourse, but that if it were so mentioned it was not referred to as an exclusive exception.

52. Confusion is introduced by the use of the Greek word πορνεία, which is the generic form for fornication instead of the word μοιχεία, which means adultery. Gibbon pointed out that the former word is not in pure Greek a common word, and is only a translation of some word used by Christ, the original of which is unknown, nor can its proper meaning be strictly applied to matrimonial sin. He observed, "the ambiguous "word, which contains the precept of Christ, is flexible "to any interpretation that the wisdom of a legislator "can demand."*

53. I have already referred to the question of the construction if the exception I have discussed be omitted, and to the position maintained by the witnesses and writers if it is to remain. The general observations I have already made on St. Mark's account are applicable to the account in St. Matthew, though perhaps with even more force for the passages in verses 4 and 5, chapter xix., beginning, "Have ye not read," are clearly shown by these words to be quotations from the Jewish Scriptures, though verse 5, as we have it, incorrectly treats the words as having been attributed to the Creator. And, further, verse 6 shows, even more clearly than is the case with the account in the 5th chapter of St. Mark, the inferential character of the discussion, for after the quotations from Genesis, the said 6th verse runs thus: "Wherefore they are no "more twain, but one flesh, What therefore God hath "joined together let not man put asunder." It will be observed that the account in St. Matthew concludes with verses 10, 11, and 12, which are not to the same effect as the 10th, 11th, and 12th verses of the 10th chapter of St. Mark. Much difficulty appears to have been felt as to the interpretation to be placed upon the former, for it is not clear what "the saying" referred to is, and in one view they seem to relate to the advocacy of celibacy, but whatever "the saying" to which reference is made may be, Christ contemplates that "all men cannot receive" it, and would appear to indicate the necessity of taking human needs into consideration. (See on this point the evidence of Dr. Sanday, Minutes of Evidence, Q. 38,476, et seq.)

54. A last point to notice in the account in St. Matthew's Gospel, is that chapter xix., verses 5–9, is regarded by the Roman Catholic Church and others as permitting a separation from bed and board by legal authority, but I can find no trace in Jewish law and tradition of any such proceeding which is regarded by competent writers as an invention of a later period by the churches; and, further, the words of the verse are so obviously dealing with the divorce of that time that it is extremely difficult to-day to understand how any other interpretation came to be adopted, except by forcing a construction in order to support the advocacy of enforced celibacy. It may be asked, as it was asked by Sir George Grey in the debate in the House of Commons in 1857 (July 31st), how it is that the putting asunder of husband and wife, which is the result of such a separation as aforesaid, can justly be said to be in accordance with the law of God, while the more complete separation, which takes place as a consequence of divorce a vinculo, is maintained to be in direct opposition to that law (Hansard, Vol. 147, p. 857. Moreover, when the question with which the discussion started and the whole conversation is considered, it is perfectly clear that the putting away refers to divorce a vinculo and not to a mere separation from bed and board. It may be further observed that to follow the Roman Catholic construction logically the right to separation a mensâ et thoro should be confined to fornication, but they extend it, at any rate, to cruelty and possibly desertion. Q. 22,933.

* "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," vol. 8, ch. 14, edition 1791, p. 67 (and also Bury's edition, vol. 4, 481–2, and see note 132, p. 481, note). In this note Gibbon says: "Some "critics have presumed to think, by an evasive answer, he "avoided the giving offence either to the school of Sammai "or to that of Hillel (Gelden, lex. or Ebraica l. iii. c. 18–22, 28, 31)."

55. If these suggestions be correct, it seems unnecessary to examine St. Matthew v., 31, 32, with minuteness, for those verses form part of what is known as the Sermon on the Mount, when a number of general precepts were stated such as would be natural to a moral discourse, but it seems impossible to read the whole of this chapter together, without concluding that general principles were being stated in general terms, and exceptions thereto were not being discussed; indeed, it would be unreasonable to expect, that on such an occasion, precepts would be expressed with the precision requisite if positive rules of law were being laid down.

56. The short passage in St. Luke xvi., 18, consists of one verse only, which is inserted without any indication of how what it states came to be said, and without connection with what precedes or follows. It has been suggested that the writer has taken it from the source "Q," which was common to him, and to the writer of the work attributed to St. Matthew. The observations already made upon statements of general principles apply here also.

57. The Gospel of St. John contains no account of the teaching in question. With regard to the 7th chapter of the First Epistle of St. Paul to the Corinthians, I cannot discover any adequate reason for considering that its language justifies any proposition that marriage was regarded by the writer as indissoluble. The general effect of it appears to be in the opposite direction, and was evidently so regarded by those who framed the heading of the chapter in the Old Version, which states: "2. He treateth of marriage, 4. showing "it to be a remedy against fornication: 10 and that "the bond thereof ought not lightly to be dissolved." It is upon this chapter that so much stress is laid by Scottish and Continental theologians as supporting the view by analogy that desertion may be a ground for divorce, upon which point I refer to the evidence of Dr. Paterson (Minutes of Evidence, p. 445).

58. Those who maintain that marriage is indissoluble, consider that they base their views upon divine teachings in the Scriptures, to which I have referred, and I have now pointed out reasons for doubting the soundness of their conclusion, and for attributing the original foundation of these views to Old Testament teaching, based upon the poetic conceptions of ancient Jewish writers.

59. I have now examined what appear to be the main features of the records on which the Christian doctrines of the formation and dissolution of marriage are rested. In the evidence is to be found much minute and most learned criticism upon these records, and therefore I have confined myself to what appear to be the most striking matters.

60. I confess that to a lawyer the admitted uncertainty, not merely as to what Christ meant by what he is recorded as having said, but as to what he actually did say, makes it incredible that He could have intended His words to be used as indicating principles for legislation. Lawyers are familiar with difficulties arising in the construction of statutes, but the idea is unknown that it should be impossible to ascertain what were the exact terms of the statute itself.

Conclusions from the Records.

61. The conclusions I draw from the records by the light of the general considerations which I have presented are these:—

I think it must be borne in mind at the present time that the records differ; that we have no reasonable certainty that we have an exact or full account of what was said; that there were undoubtedly disputes of an important character amongst the Jews at the time of Christ; that these disputes related to the right of a man, without cause assigned or existing, to put away his wife, by his own act, and not to the question now under consideration, namely, the right of a man or woman, the victim of grave wrong on the part of his or her spouse, which makes it impossible for the marriage relation to continue, or where other circumstances have supervened which produce the same result, to ask a court of law, before which the said wrong or circumstances are legally proved, to declare at an end in law, the relation which is already determined in fact; that these disputes were the cause of the inquiry addressed to Him in order to entrap Him, as in other cases, into some compromising answer; that no direct answer was given, but that He argued with his inquirers upon the basis of such knowledge of their history and such beliefs as they possessed; that He made some statement afterwards to His Disciples which is differently reported in the records as we have them; and that He followed His usual course of dealing with general, moral, and spiritual principles, but made no legislative suggestions.

62. It is, indeed, not reasonably possible to find in the records any plain and clear statement which directs that, while marriage may be freely entered into by the voluntary action of the parties, a state or church is bound to prohibit its dissolution for any cause or only for one cause. Nor does it appear that the great teacher was Himself considering the matter from such a point of view, for otherwise it would seem difficult to account for the complete omission of all reference to the position of the children of a marriage which was sundered in fact.

Observations on Christian Teaching.

63. I would suggest that Christ's whole teaching was concerned with man's moral character and his spiritual life here and hereafter, and not with the actual working or necessary evolution of institutions by which man's temporal life is regulated; and when one reflects on this, and the beliefs and state of knowledge at the time and the circumstances in which the discussions referred to took place, it would seem that what is really to be found in this teaching is that from the creation of man and woman it may be inferred that some union should be formed between them; that that union should, in the best interests of humanity, be of a monogamous character, from which it should naturally follow that it should be continuous and that each person entering into such a union ought to be faithful to the other. Faithfulness to the union seems to be the keynote to the teaching which He intended to address to the inquirers. A man was not to put away his wife and marry another, nor was a woman to put away her husband and be married to another. But in this, while we find a guiding principle of conduct aiming at the realisation of a high ideal of marriage—an ideal, the universal attainment of which, if human nature remains as it has been and is, however much it may be devoutly wished and striven for, is not likely to be completely realised—it is obvious that underlying it, as an assumed but necessary condition, is the correlative duty of faithfulness, without which no ideal union can be realised. In the first part of the recorded discussion, it seems to be assumed that while each remains faithful there should be no putting asunder. The idea of "putting asunder" is in a certain sense inapplicable to a tie which has already been sundered in fact. And in the second part of the discussion, unless a very constrained construction is placed on the words recognised as being the most original account, there is, when reasonably construed, absolutely no prohibition of a complete severance of the marriage bond when the assumed condition is broken and either party becomes in fact unfaithful to the bond.

64. When one realises what human nature is, of what horrible conduct human beings are capable under the influence of lust, anger, greed, or drink (witness, for instance, some of the evidence given by Mr. Parr, Director of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and the evidence relating to cases under the Aliens Act), and the frightful sufferings they can inflict on each other and upon children, and when Christians have in mind the intense pity and superhuman sympathy with which Christ regarded the suffering, the poor and the needy, and His tender regard for little children, it seems impossible to credit, that, in teaching the doctrine of faithfulness, He was condemning those who suffer from a breach of it and cannot hope to realise an approach to the ideal nor even a bearable existence, to life-long misery and moral deterioration, if not ruin, when their ideal is shattered by conduct which He condemned, or by supervening circumstances which rendered its realisation hopeless and life intolerable. How His teaching, which was founded on considerations applicable to the whole human race, was appropriated as peculiar to Christians, and was translated by interpretations thereof into doctrines which have been established in certain sections of the Church, is matter of history. That it was not at the outset so treated is plain from the fact of the introduction of the exception in St. Matthew, and the fact of the introduction by St. Paul of an exception to meet a case which had not been before Christ. The exception introduced by the editor of the Gospel according to St. Matthew, as Mr. Allen, expressing views many entertain, says, "representing, no doubt, two influences, viz., Jewish "custom and tradition and the exigencies of ethical "necessity in the early Christian Church," shows the sense in which the teaching was understood by those who lived at the time, and in the same environment as the teacher or writer. Moreover, the importance of this is extremely great, for this Gospel has been commonly attributed to St. Matthew (the only one of the three Evangelists whose records refer to the points in question, who was associated with Christ throughout His ministry), though I gather that this attribution is no longer generally accepted, and if the writer, who, according to Dr. Inge, wrote or compiled the Gospel as we now have it about the year 90 A.D. from the Marcan account, and from some prior document possibly written by St. Matthew himself for the Jewish communities, felt himself justified in introducing the exception (and it has not been suggested that it was not introduced in good faith), it must have been because he considered he was copying or introducing an allowable exception to a declared general principle to meet the necessities of Jewish life according to Jewish customs and mode of thought. It would seem necessarily to follow that other exceptions might in the same way be introduced which are required to meet the necessities of a different civilisation.

65. Later, when we turn to the writings of the early Christian Fathers, who did not live in Christ's time, but in conditions which were not those of Jewish society in that time, we find that, while they based their opinions on the records of the Bible, their interpretations in times in which general morality reached to the utmost laxity—times which were full of trouble and disturbances, and when there was much ignorance and superstition—resulted in the putting forward of views which may be regarded as expressing an exaggerated recoil from the licence of the Roman laws. These views were asserted in an endeavour to combat the deplorable state of things which existed in the society of the times in which the writers lived, and were dictated largely, though unconsciously, by mistaken and irrelevant assumptions which necessarily coloured their whole views on the relations between the sexes, and therefore on all subjects connected with marriage and divorce. They, or some of them, were celibates by choice; they forbade the clergy to marry, and lauded the superior sanctity of the celibate state both for clergy and laity. Most of them condemned second marriages, and therefore, of course, condemned the marriage of divorced persons, whether innocent or guilty. Thus Origen (186–254), who has been called "the most learned and original of the "early Church Fathers, and perhaps the noblest "figure among them all," was not only a celibate, but, according to Eusebius, mutilated himself, following a judaically literal interpretation of Matthew xix., 11, "there be eunuchs, which have made themselves "eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake." It should be added, however, that he was young when he did this and his action was condemned by the Church generally. Origen wrote, in regard to second marriages, "I think that a monogamist, and a virgin, and "he who perseveres in chastity, are of the Church of "God. But he who is a bigamist, albeit his con-"versation is honest, and he excel in virtues other "than chastity, is yet not of the Church, and of the "number of those who have not 'spot or wrinkle or "any such thing,' but that he is of the second degree, "and of those who call upon the name of the Lord, "and who are saved in the name of Jesus Christ, yet "are in no wise crowned by Him." Tertullian, who subsequently changed his mind and admitted the second marriage after divorce of the innocent woman as well as of the widowed (see C. Dodson's English edition of "Tertullian," p. 432), devotes a whole treatise, De Monogamia, to prove that second marriage is "sin"; Athenagoras calls second marriage "reputable adultery"; and St. John Chrysostom, referring to marriage in general, asks, "What can be more bitter than this bondage?"

66. Confusion also resulted from false analogies drawn from the figurative language of Scripture, comparing Christ and the Church to husband and wife, and many other fanciful Scriptural arguments are contained in the writings of the early Fathers.

67. It must also be remembered that, while the Fathers forbade re-marriage, they, or some of them, forbade an innocent husband to forgive an adulterous wife, and insisted that it was not merely his right, but his duty to separate himself finally from her. This principle, which was the logical outcome of the Father's opinions, is repudiated by Protestant supporters of the Fathers' views, some of whom seem to go to the opposite extreme by enforcing on husbands and wives that they ought to continue to live together, although the result may be to produce misery to themselves and their children. The general remark may here be made that certain views about marriage and divorce are defended, on the alleged authority of the early Christian Church. But those who so argue are ready, as in the case of the marriage of the clergy, and the second marriage of clergy and laity, to throw over, or ignore, the same Fathers, when their opinions or practices do not suit them. It may be here remarked that Christian churches recognise fully second and even subsequent marriages both for the laity, and also for the clergy in Protestant churches, and this is frequently acted on. The churches, therefore, act on the view that the marriage relationship is of a temporal character and do not attach to it that spirituality which Mr. Frederic Harrison states is attributed to it by the Positivists, who are entirely against second marriages. (Minutes of Evidence, Q. 40,226 et seq.)

68. The Fathers, and their mediæval and modern followers, seem to look at the questions of marriage and divorce chiefly from the point of view of the spouses and of the Church, and to ignore largely the interests of the family and the State, which most people nowadays consider of the utmost importance. The same tendency, in a modified form, is suggested by the sparse reference in the proofs of certain witnesses submitted to the Commission, to any interest other than those of the spouses and the Church. In this connection remark may be made about the immorality which is produced directly and indirectly, where divorce is prohibited, and spouses, severed for life, but unable to re-marry, are as a matter of fact led, in a large proportion of cases, into improper sexual relations with others. This aspect of human life is ignored both by the ancient and modern advocates of the absolute indissolubility of marriage.

69. The writings of the early Fathers have naturally not been without their effect on later times. Subsequent writers founded on their opinions and attached an importance to them which, for reasons already given, cannot be now recognised. The belief developed that marriage was a sacrament, and therefore results in a bond which, as formed by God, cannot be severed by man. The condemnation of this belief contained in Article 25 of the Thirty-nine Articles does not seem to have prevented its adoption in substance by some clergy of the Church of England.

70. It is submitted that it cannot be established that there has been any continuous and unanimous consensus of opinion in the Christian Church in favour of the view that absolute indissolubility of marriage is the necessary result of Christ's teaching.

Opinions entertained at Different Periods.

71. It may be convenient to divide the different periods as follows:—

(1) Early Christian Church.
(2) The Latin and Greek Churches.
(3) The Protestant Reformers, British and Continental.
(4) The English scholars and divines, Anglican and Nonconformist, from the Reformation to the end of the eighteenth century.

I shall now briefly summarise the opinions entertained in these periods, but, for reasons already given, I do not think that the importance ought now to be attached to them which would be given to them in the days when they were respectively expressed.

1. Early Christian Church.

72. Opinions both ways may be quoted, subject to any questions which may be raised by scholars as to whether we now have the true text of the authors to whom the writings are attributed, as to whether the same author is always consistent in his opinions, and as to whether an author who condemned matrimony or divorce, maintained his opinions outside the scholar's study, and the hermit's cell, in face of the facts and necessities of life. The opinions of the Fathers were largely founded on reasons now abandoned by the best modern scholarship, British, American, and Continental, and, as has already been pointed out, the attitude of that scholarship towards all questions of biblical interpretation is so entirely different from that of the Fathers, that their opinions have no longer the authority which they exercised on our forefathers.

73. The question is much debated, but there are grounds for asserting that the views and practices of the Apostolic age, and the age immediately subsequent, were in accordance with the ordinary understanding of St. Matthew's Gospel, and of St. Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians, that is to say, divorce for adultery, with right to re-marry was permitted, at least, to the husband, and that divorce for desertion was permitted, at least in the case of a Christian husband and a non-Christian wife. In regard to the age beginning with, say, the third century, it may be said generally that, in the early Christian Churches, both of the East and West, the best known and most representative names are on the side of indissolubility. In the West, with some notable exceptions, the tendency of opinion was later in favour of indissolubility; while, in the East, opinion was developed into the views which were, and are, entertained by the Greek Church. As an instance of those who favoured dissolubility, I may take St. Epiphanius (310–403), Bishop of Salamis in Cyprus, who, it may be worth noting, was born of Jewish parents. He states, in his "Panarion," that it is lawful for a man who is living in separation—for whatever ground, fornication or adultery, or other "evil cause"—to marry again. He says: "Him the Word of God "censures not, though he be joined to a second wife, "or a wife to a second husband, neither doth it declare "him cast out from the Church, and from life, but "bears with him by reason of his infirmity."

74. On the other hand, take St. John Chrysostom (347–407 A.D.), in favour of indissolubility. He argues against marriage and in favour of virginity, and uses strong expressions as to the indissolubility of the marriage bond. In the case of a woman, he says: "Let "her remain unmarried or be reconciled to her husband. ". . . What then if he will never be reconciled? one "may ask. Thou hast one more mode of release and "deliverance. What is that? Await his death. For "as the (consecrated) virgin may not marry, because "her spouse liveth always, and is immortal; so to her "that hath been married it is then only lawful when "her husband is dead. . . . Seest thou the restraint, "the inexorable bondage, the chain which compasses "both parties?"*

75. Augustine, writing in the beginning of the fifth century, found great difficulty in the interpretation of the Scriptures. He admits, after discussing the scriptural texts, that the question of divorce and re-marriage is surrounded with difficulties: "His ita pro meo "modulo pertractatis atque discussis, quæstionem "tamen de conjugiis obscurissimam et implicatissimam "esse, non nescio. Nec audeo profiteri omnes sinus "ejus, vel in hoc opere, vel in alio me adhuc explicasse, "vel jam posse, si urgear, explicare" (de Conjugiis Adulterinis ad Pollentinum, cap. xxv. (end), paragraph 32 in Paris edition, 1838, vol. x., col. 680. Basle edition, 1556, tom. 6, col. 854).

76. Although his opinions varied somewhat, his conclusions were that Christian marriage was indissoluble by reason of its sacramental character.

77. It ought to be added, in the case of some of the passages usually quoted from the Fathers in favour of indissolubility, the same question arises as in the case of Christ's teaching—did the writers, while laying down general principles, mean to exclude all possible exceptions? Equally strong passages against resorting to divorce will be found in the writings of divines who maintain the lawfulness of divorce, including Martin Luther, who wrote in one passage, "I detest divorce." It should, perhaps, be added here that the Anglo-Saxon Church seems to have recognised divorce and made special provision as to the devolution of property in case of divorce (Aethelbert, § 79; Theodore's Pœnitential, xix. §§ 18, 20, 23). See also Cnut's Law 54, which gave the husband all the property in the event of the wife's infidelity. See also the evidence of Sir David Brynmor Jones. (Minutes of Evidence, Q. 43,137, et seq.)

2. The Latin and Greek Churches.

78. The Western Church, subsequent to its rupture with the Eastern Church in 1054 A.D., adhered to the indissolubility of marriage, both in principle and in practice, subject to the relief afforded by decrees of nullity for causes not recognised by any other Church as sufficient.

79. But the Greek Church, the Eastern division of Christendom, although holding equally with the Western Church that marriage is a sacrament, has acted throughout on the principle that marriage is not indissoluble. Dr. Lucock, formerly Dean of Lichfield, put the matter thus: "At the beginning of the eleventh "century [1030 A.D.] . . . . Alexius, Patriach "of Constantinople, drew up a series of Canons on "the Dissolution of marriage; and these have been "considered binding ever since. They are as follows:—

"(1) The Priest who gives the marriage blessing to a woman divorced from her husband is not to be condemned if the man's conduct was the cause of the separation.

"(2) Women divorced from husbands whose conduct was the cause of separation are blameless, if they wish to marry again; and so are the Priests who give them the blessing on the union; the same rule applies to men.

"(3) The man who marries a woman divorced for adultery, whether he has himself been married before or not, is an adulterer, and must submit to the penance of adulterers.

* See also In cap. Matthaei xix. Homilia xxxii., Antwerp. 1542, p. 178. (In this Homily S. Chrysostom discusses the whole divorce question.)

"(4) The Priest, who gives his blessing on second marriages for those who have dissolved their marriage by mutual consent, which is not sanctioned by the laws, shall be deprived of his office."

These rules are translated by Dr. Luckock from John Selden's Uxor Hebraica, seu de nuptiis et divortiis ex jure civili, id est, divino et Talmudico veterum Hebraeorum, Book III., chapter 32. (Seldeni Opera Omnia, vol. ii., p. 855 [ed. 1726], where the Rules are set out in Greek and Latin.)

3. The Protestant Reformers, British and Continental.

80. To some Protestants, neither the opinions of the Reformers (whether Episcopalian, Presbyterian or Lutheran, whether English, Scottish, French, German, Swiss, Dutch or Scandinavian) nor of the great divines and scholars, like Erasmus, who, although remaining in the Church of Rome, concurred with the Reformers in their views in favour of the dissolubility of marriage, nor of the Greek Church, seem to be of any importance, compared with the opinions and practice of certain of the Early Fathers and of the Post-Tridentine Roman Catholic Church. In a recent work entitled the "History of Divorce and Marriage" by the Rev. H. J. Wilkins, D.D., 1910, published since this Commission began its labours, and referring to some of the evidence given before it, I find that practically every writer since the Reformation in favour of the lawfulness of divorce is ignored, except Dr. Hammond (1644), Bishop Cosin and Milton; and Mr. Watkins (whose work, while it is valuable for its collection of extracts from numerous early writers, decrees of councils, &c., appears to assume the historical truth of the narratives in Genesis of the Creation and Fall, pp. 2, 3, and 25) prints the following paragraph, at page 394 of his book: "From the time "of Gratian, the teaching of the Decretum (published "about 1140) on the subject of divorce and re-marriage, "was practically the teaching of the whole Western "Church. The controversy was, in fact, closed and, "for the purpose of this treatise, it is useless to pursue "the investigation farther. For the past 700 years "the historic churches of Western Christendom have "declined to recognise re-marriage after divorce." This view is not followed in this memorandum.

(1) English.

81. At the Reformation it may be inferred from the preparation of the abortive "Reformatio Legum Ecclesiasticarum" that those concerned in its preparation were in favour of the dissolubility of marriage on several grounds. And there certainly has been from that time a strong party in the Church of England agreeing with the views of the continental and Scottish divines on the dissolubility of marriage, but differing from them and from each other in regard to the causes on account of which marriage might be dissolved. That party construed the expression "for better or worse" introduced into the Anglican marriage service as applying to the ordinary incidents of life for instance, such, as sickness or health, poverty or wealth; while those who have preferred the doctrine of indissolubility have considered that that expression equally compelled the subsistence of the marriage tie in adultery, even where no self-respecting person could be expected to continue co-habitation, and in desertion, where the continuance of co-habitation had been permanently rendered impossible.

82. No action for divorce was brought in the English courts till the passing of the Divorce Act of 1857. It has been said that divorce a vinculo, admittedly incompetent before the Reformation, must have remained so after the Reformation, seeing that no statute was passed (till 1857) making it competent. But in Scotland, where, before the Reformation, the same rule of indissolubility attached as in England, divorces for adultery were granted from the Reformation, without any statute authorising them.

83. Further, the 250 Acts of Parliament granting divorces, passed year by year, for at least 150 years prior to 1857, while fought on the merits, were not resisted on the ground that marriage was ipsa natura indissoluble.

84. It is not necessary for present purposes to set out the passages from the works of the English Reformers. But it may be remarked generally that whatever opinions may possibly have been held by individuals in the Reformed Church, there are recorded opinions of English Reformers in favour of the lawfulness of divorce. Reference is made to Sir Lewis Dibdin's valuable memorandum.

(2) Scottish.

85. If the opinions of English Reformers, and the post-Reformation history of divorce in England, cannot be set aside, neither is it reasonable to ignore the views held in Scotland at the Reformation, and the post-Reformation law and practice of that country. Yet in the learned work, already referred to, by Dr. Luckock, while the law of the United States and the British Colonies, and of Germany, Belgium, Switzerland, Denmark, and Austria are discussed, no reference whatever is made to the fact that in Scotland, for 350 years, the working of a law allowing divorce for adultery and desertion has been put to a practical test among a population, the conditions of whose life more nearly resemble those of the people of England than the conditions obtaining in any other country in the world. Generally speaking, the Scots Reformers were more in accord with the Reformers of France, Germany and Switzerland than were the English Reformers, but I do not think it necessary for the purposes of these notes to go in detail into their writings at present, except to say that so far as their writings show they were unanimously opposed to the doctrine of the absolute indissolubility of marriage.

86. For more than three centuries, adultery and desertion have been grounds of divorce in Scotland. John Knox in his "First Book of Discipline" confines the remedy of divorce to cases of adultery, but in April 1573 a statute was passed declaring wilful desertion for four years to be a ground of divorce. It is understood that although the statute may have been passed partly to serve the personal interests of the Duke of Argyle, Chancellor of Scotland, it was accepted in Scotland as conformable to Scripture, and as demanded by public policy.

87. The Westminster Confession of Faith was adopted by the Church of Scotland in 1647 and ratified by Act of the Parliament of Scotland in 1690. That confession was mainly the work of English divines, most of them members of the English Universities. Fourteen were Doctors of Divinity, and the Assembly included Arrowsmith and Tuckney, Professors of Divinity at Cambridge, Dr. Hoyle, Professor of Divinity at Oxford, and such scholars as Twisse, Lightfoot, Coleman, Edmund Calamy the elder, Godwin and Gataker among the English clerical members, and Gillespie and Rutherford among the Scottish. During part of the sittings, John Selden was one of the English lay members.

88. Chapter 24 is headed "Of Marriage and Divorce." Articles 5 and 6 run thus:—"5. Adultery or fornica-"tion committed after a contract, being detected "before marriage, giveth just occasion to the innocent "party to dissolve that contract. In the case of "adultery after marriage, it is lawfull for the innocent "party to sue out a divorce, and, after the divorce, to "marry another, as if the offending party were dead." "6. Although the corruption of man be such, as is apt "to study arguments, unduly to put asunder those "whom God hath joyned together in marriage, yet "nothing but adultery, or such wilfull desertion as can "noway be remedied by the Church or Civil Magistrate, "is cause sufficient of dissolving the bond of marriage, "wherein a publick and orderly course of proceeding is "to be observed, and the persons concerned in it, not " left to their own wills and discretion in their own " case."*

89. In the writings of Scottish divines, Presbyterian and Episcopalian, Established Church and Dissenting, from the Reformation down to the present day, divorce is alluded to as a remedy to be used only in the last resort; and, contrary to the view of many of the Early Fathers, the duty of forgiveness, even in the case of unfaithfulness, is inculcated. But there seems to be no passage in which the legal right of the innocent spouse to obtain divorce a vinculo is said to be contrary to Scripture, or otherwise excluded; nor is any case known, during the 350 years from 1560 to 1910, in which any member of the Protestant Church in Scotland has been subjected to discipline, or refused the privileges of the Church, for having availed himself or herself of the remedy of divorce a vinculo provided by the law of Scotland for adultery and desertion; or for having remarried, subsequent to divorce. The sin of the guilty spouse, apart from any question of divorce, involved church censure and refusal of the sacraments, and the practice was and is, for Scottish ministers, Presbyterian and Episcopalian, to refuse to remarry the divorced guilty spouse, at all events to the paramour.

90. During the period when the Church of Scotland was established under Episcopal Church government, that is to say, from 1610 to 1638, and from 1660 to 1688, the law as to divorce remained unaltered, and no proposal was made for its alteration. At that time, there was a body of learned divines in Aberdeen, connected with the University, known in ecclesiastical history as " The Aberdeen Doctors." Of these, John Forbes of Corse (1593–1648), D.D., Professor of Divinity in the University, was the most eminent. He wrote in Latin, and his reputation was European; his " Irenicum amatoribus veritatis et pacis in Ecclesia Scoticana " was warmly commended by Archbishop Ussher. Forbes was a strong Episcopalian and, when the Presbyterians came into power, suffered the loss of his Professorship rather than sign the National Covenant of 1638, and exile rather than sign the Solemn League and Covenant of 1643. His views on divorce are to be found in his " Theologia Moralis, " libri decem, in quibus precepta Decalogi exponuntur, " et casus conscientiæ explicantur." That work, written in Latin, contains a learned citation of authorities, and a discussion of the whole question of divorce, in relation to the teaching of the Old and New Testaments, and the views of the early Christian Fathers, and also from the point of view of civil polity. Forbes maintains the lawfulness of divorce both for adultery and desertion. See the passages from the Theologiae Moralis printed on pages 456 and 457 of the evidence, Vol. II., at the end of Professor Paterson's examination.

91. The same attitude has been taken in Scotland among divines of dissenting communions, Presbyterian and Independent.

(3) Continental Reformers.

92. The views of some of the principal reformers are given very fully in the interesting evidence of Professor Whitney, and it is not necessary in these notes to refer more fully to them. Without exception they all, Lutheran, Calvinistic, Zwinglian, allowed divorce for adultery, most of them allowed divorce also for desertion, and some of them also allowed divorce for other causes; and whenever they allowed divorce they allowed re-marriage.

4. English Divines and Scholars, Anglican and Nonconformist, from the Reformation to the end of the Eighteenth Century.

93. It has been said by some that the Church of England has always asserted that divorce is contrary to Christ's teaching, and, therefore, that marriage, or at least marriage between Christians, is sua natura indissoluble. Thus Dean Luckock writes: " Though " the East subsequently fell away from the teaching " of antiquity, and though at times the Latin Church " in Provincial Synods may have accepted some " questionable canons, yet the Anglican branch has " approached very near to an uniform consistency all " through her lengthened history."

94. What is meant by the Church of England, or the " Anglican branch "?

1. If its constitution is meant, as contained in its constitutional documents, absolute indissolubility as distinguished from normal permanency is not in its Articles or Prayer Book. Some witnesses founded on Canon 107, the effect of which has been variously stated, and it must be remembered that the Canons do not proprio rigore bind the laity, but bind the clergy and the law officers of the Ecclesiastical Courts (Bishop, On Marriage, Divorce, and Separation, Ed. 1891, sec. 103). Canon Hensley Henson states his concurrence with the view enunciated by Dr. Hammond, Chaplain to Charles the First, namely, that the terms of the Canon presuppose that marriage is not indissoluble by the law of the Church of England; but see the memorandum of Sir Lewis Dibdin on this point. As to the Prayer Book, the words of the marriage service were referred to, but they certainly have not in practice been read as negativing the right to divorce on the ground of adultery, which has been treated in England as a good ground for divorce for two or three centuries, and similar words have been used in the marriage service of the Churches in Scotland, where divorce, both for adultery and desertion, has been allowed for some 350 years.

2. " The Church of Scotland " may be used as synonymous with the general assembly of that Church, which is a legislative and judicial body representative of clergy and laity, and recognised by the law as entitled to express the opinion of the Church. But " the Church of England " cannot be used in that sense, for it has no such body. So far as the Church can express itself through the Convocations of York and Canterbury, and through Church Congresses, the indissolubility of marriage has never been affirmed. The deliverances of the Lambeth Conferences of 1888 and 1908 are inconsistent with the indissolubility of marriage being a part of the constitution of the Church of England.

95. But if by the Church of England be meant its leading dignitaries, scholars and preachers, the dissolubility of marriage has been as fully maintained as its indissolubility. It is sufficient for the purposes of these notes to refer to the division of opinion amongst the Bishops, expressed in the debates on the Bill of 1857, and in support of dissolubility, to Bishops Joseph Hall (1574–1656), Jeremy Taylor (1613–1667), John Cosin (1594–1672), Gilbert Burnet (1643–1715), and Archdeacon Paley (1743–1805).

96. The views of English Nonconformist scholars and divines like John Owen (1616–1683), Richard Baxter (1615–1691), and John Milton (1743–1805), have generally been in favour of allowing divorce, at least for adultery. See also the evidence of the Nonconformist ministers who have appeared before the Commission and the resolutions passed by certain churches.

Different Conclusions of Theological Writers.

97. I have briefly examined the views of theological writers from age to age, and I think that no one can fail to be struck by the fact that, starting from the same sources, they have reached totally different conclusions; some, that, according to Christ's teaching, marriage is to be regarded as indissoluble, others that it is dissoluble on one ground; others that is dissoluble on two grounds; others, again, have gone further and admit other grounds. The result of this distracting diversity of opinion is manifest in the difference in the laws adopted in various countries. This diversity, it seems reasonably clear, arises mainly from differences in the interpretation of Christ's teaching as recorded. I think it is impossible, after a study of the numerous writings, for anyone who examines them to-day not to feel how these writers of former days have been affected by the mere letter of the records, and how they have been unable to take a wide view of the circumstances of the origin and nature of the records, and the state of belief and knowledge which prevailed at the time of the foundation of Christianity; and how, in endeavouring to place their interpretations on the records, they have been not unnaturally influenced by the condition of society in their own day, by the existence of abuses which have passed away, and by their opinions on matters as to which their conceptions were affected by their own state of knowledge and the beliefs which then prevailed. Writers, prior, say, to the last half century, had not the advantages which we possess; and they were hampered and hindered in forming just and sound conceptions by the want of them. Even to-day there are to be found writers and others who seem unable to realise the difference of attitude towards problems of life existing to-day and in times which preceded the research of the past century, and who still seem as if they lived in the Middle Ages.

* See " Act ratifying the Confession of Faith and settling " Presbyterian Church Government," June 7th, 1690. (The law and Acts made in the second session of the first Parliament of our high and dread Sovereigns William and Mary. Edinburgh, 1690.) Also the Acts of the Parliament of Scotland, vol. x., p. 128 (May 26, 1890).

98. Criticism and discoveries have taught us much that was inconceivable by writers of past times. Although some critical work was undertaken by John Spencer and Thomas Hobbes, it was not until about a century ago that any real progress was made in the critical study of the Old Testament. The progress which has now been made may be gathered from the extracts from Dr. Driver's work on Genesis above set out. Those who would appreciate the steps in that progress may consult the article by Mr. Stanley Arthur Cook, in the "Cambridge Biblical Essays," where the works of De Wette, Ewald, Graf, Williamson, Robertson Smith, and others, are reviewed, and in which Mr. Cook remarks that "we have Israelite science and history, "the details of which prove to be neither scientific nor "historically authentic" (p. 64). The same book of essays also contains one entitled, "Our Lord's Use of the Old Testament," which deserves close study. I have already gone somewhat fully into the reference to the Old Testament account of Creation in the accounts of Christ's teaching on divorce, and will only add that throughout all the works of the writers on this subject, which I have been able to examine, I have noticed how much they depend upon interpretation of sentences in the accounts, and how they do not seem to me in any way adequately to consider the context, and what were the foundations on which rested so much of what was recorded in those accounts.

Some further points.

99. Before stating the general conclusions at which it seems possible to arrive, it is desirable to refer to a few other points which bear more or less on the question of principle. The first has been already noticed. It is that those, or some of those, who base their views upon Divine teachings in the Scriptures confine the application of these principles, so far as they are based on religious grounds, to persons who are baptised Christians, that is to say, persons who are baptised with such baptism as the Churches can recognise as valid. It is not necessary for the purpose of these notes to enter upon a consideration of the interesting problems which arise from these views as to marriages contracted between Christians and non-Christians, and as to the position of converts, or those who depart from the Church. These will be found very fully considered by various writers, amongst others, Mr. Watkins.

100. A second point is that these views are applied to Christians, whether the marriage has been entered into before the Church with a religious ceremony or in any other form; in fact, no difference in this respect is made between a civil and religious ceremony, and this is because a religious ceremony has not, except where the ruling of the Council of Trent has been adopted, been regarded as essential. I think we may rely on the evidence on this point of the first 1,000 years of Christianity being correctly summed up by one of the writers already mentioned thus:—

> "(1) That where a marriage has been celebrated by Christians with the usual civil forms, there being no bar which, by Christian rule, would hinder the marriage, it was accepted as valid, and no priestly benediction was required as a condition of validity."
>
> "(2) That notwithstanding from the early stage of Christianity the priestly benediction was a usual accompaniment of marriage between Christians, there can be no doubt that prior to the Council of Trent, in the 16th century, priestly solemnisation was not required by the Canon law as a condition of validity." (Watkins, p. 101.)

101. This has always been the case in Scotland, and was the case in England until the passing of Lord Hardwicke's Act in A.D. 1753. I may add, however, that there was a difference of opinion upon this point in the House of Lords in 1843–4 in the case of Regina v. Millis, 10 Cl. and F., 534; but the more modern view is that the statement above is correct, as was indicated in 1865 by the Judgment of Mr. Justice Willes in the case of Beamish v. Beamish, 9 H.L.C. 274, and upon this point I refer to the evidence of Sir Frederick Pollock. The materiality of this point would seem to be that the recognition of civil marriage must appear to involve the recognition of the right of the State to place its conditions upon the bond.

102. A third point is that the principle of indissolubility appears to be only applied by those who support it as applicable to a consummated marriage. Consummation is regarded at being essential to a complete marriage. The foundation for this view may be traced to the 2nd chapter of Genesis, and especially to the words which describe the man and woman as becoming "one flesh," which some appear to regard as a distinct divine ordering, and to have the consequence which is maintained by them, but which, if regarded as a mere inference drawn by an early Jewish writer from the fact of the creation of woman out of man would not lead to any necessity for arriving at such a conclusion. Dr. Skinner points out that "both in Hebrew and in "Arabic 'flesh' is synonymous with 'clan' or 'kindred "group'" (Genesis p. 70). It may be suggested that we have here a reference to the Beena marriage, but I gather from the evidence of Mr. Abrahams that that form of marriage was probably at a different period from the date of the compilation of the early part of Genesis.

103. I have, in an earlier part of these notes, set out the comments of Dr. Driver and Dr. Skinner on the verse in Genesis in which the words in question occur, and show how they are quoted in St. Matthew and St. Mark in the accounts of the discussion which is there recorded, and it is very remarkable that, while we have these comments by very learned theologians, and also at the present day the general considerations which I have ventured to present, there seem still to be found persons who regard the 24th verse of the 2nd chapter of Genesis, which expresses the conclusion of a writer of the 9th century B.C. drawn from the poetic conception of the creation of woman from man, as "the utterance of God."* It seems probable that the words used in this verse have had a very powerful influence in the production of views with regard to matrimonial relations and as to the copula carnalis, as well as mutual consent, being essential to a complete and indissoluble marriage. It would be outside the purpose of these notes to examine this doctrine at length—a doctrine which gives effect to sexual connection after consent to a marriage, but which, while the act is of precisely the same nature, and has the same physiological results, whether there be or be not such consent, would not hold that an act of intercourse in the latter case had any effect in uniting the parties, unless they adopt the view that the remarkable conclusion indicated in 1 Corinthians, c. 6, v. 16 is the consequence. I will only remark that it is probable that this doctrine led to the exercise of the power of the ecclesiastical courts to declare a marriage null on the ground of impotence, though at the present day, according to the legal aspect of this matter, that deficiency is regarded as justifying a declaration of nullity on the ground that the party against whom the charge is made has entered into a contract which he or she is wholly unable to perform.

* Cf. Watkins, p. 3.

104. How much the primitive beliefs to which I have referred have affected the views entertained in former days and at the present time with regard to the matrimonial relationship may be judged by their introduction to a certain extent into the Anglican marriage service, which consists in substance of two parts, the expression of the legal contract by consent of the two parties and the religious service by which it is blessed. In the latter, these beliefs will be traced in the address where the institution of matrimony "in "the time of man's innocency" is referred to, and in the last two prayers where the creation of woman from man and the creation of "our first parents Adam and Eve" are mentioned. These are obviously taken from the account in Genesis, which has been accepted as the true statement of facts by compilers of the service, who evidently compiled it on that basis. To-day this basis must be rejected, though it is sought to treat the matters which the compilers regarded as matters of historical fact, as merely symbolical. The service seems to be out of keeping with modern thought and to need reconsideration.

105. Another point which seems to require indicating is that when Christian Churches recognise marriage as binding on Christians in an equal degree, whether entered upon with or without a religious ceremony, and also hold that marriage is terminated by the death of either party, and that second marriages are admissible, the question arises whether they really can regard marriage as truly governed by religious considerations, using the term "religious" in its strict sense, or whether they ought to regard it as a relationship created for temporal purposes, which should be regulated by considerations of what is for the best interest of humanity, and whether the teaching of Christ must not be interpretated on the footing of this relationship, and regarded as inculcating faithfulness on a moral basis and not as laying down religious principles.

106. The last point is that the view has been presented that the Christian ideal of marriage is higher than that which the State may see fit to adopt. I think it should be observed first that if the teaching is to apply only to Christians, it seems difficult to understand the general reference in it to the male and female creation which was treated as embracing the ancestors of both Christians and non-Christians. And secondly, it does not follow from the mere fact of a male and female creation of man that the inference is that the union of man and woman should be monogamous, though this inference has been generally accepted by a large portion of the human race in its best interests. It would seem that teaching based on this inference should apply to all alike.

107. If, however, the teaching is to apply only to baptised Christians, is there any ground for holding that the ideal which a State should endeavour to maintain for its other members should be of a lower standard? I conceive not. There is no reason why the State should not accept the well-expressed sentence of Modestinus, one of the five great juris consulti of the Roman Empire, as a definition of marriage, "Nuptiae sunt "conjuntio maris et feminae et consortium omnis "vitae, divini et humani juris communicatio." The question appears to be what is the best method of attaining to the ideal? Is it by declaring the marriage tie legally indissoluble in every case, notwithstanding the fact that events have supervened upon the marriage which have in fact ended the joint life, and notwithstanding that human beings are not ideal, and that adulterous relations may be formed, appalling sufferings and misery may be inflicted upon innocent people and their children, and a general disregard of the law be developed by maintaining a legal tie when the actual tie has ceased to exist? Or is it better to recognise the deficiencies of human nature and their consequences and, in the interest of the parties, their children, and the State, to permit the dissolution of a legal tie when the whole objects of its formation have been frustrated?

108. In England, the Legislature, affected, no doubt, by that theological opinion which has permitted divorce for one cause only, has at present given a qualified answer, and one of the main questions to be considered is whether this meets the exigencies of life.

109. It is one of the most striking features of the evidence which has been taken by the Commission that theological difficulties have weighed little with the great mass of the witnesses, and among those who feel them there are differences of opinion. It seems to be not too much to say that, with extremely few exceptions, the lay witnesses pass by questions of doctrine as if they concerned theologians rather than the practical legislator.

110. I cannot but feel that this leads to the inference that the prevalent lay opinion is not in accord with the more rigid views of certain sections of the clergy, and regards theological perplexities as theoretical or academical and not practical. This is specially illustrated in the evidence of several very important witnesses. The clerical witnesses, however, seem to assume the religious character of the questions, but I would refer to what I have above said as to whether the questions are to be considered as truly of a religious character or not. If theoretical and practical views could be reconciled in the manner suggested later on, it would no doubt be a satisfaction to many who may feel some doubt whether their practical views are antagonistic to Church teaching, and yet are impressed with the necessity of entertaining those views in the interests of virtue and humanity.

111. The attitude of the lay witnesses referred to seems also to show what anyone with the experience of, say, the last 40 or 50 years must have noticed, namely, the gradual but increasing decline of ecclesiastical ideas among the laity; further, there are those who maintain that the influence of the clergy over the intellectual life of the nation has been constantly declining.

Result of Examination into Question of Principle.

112. The result of my lengthy examination into the question of principle, so far as it is affected by considerations peculiar to Christians, is that, in the absence of any certain guidance from Scripture, and in view of the differences of opinion which have existed ever since the time of Christ among learned men in all branches of the Christian Church, the English people of the present day, not ignoring but untrammelled by appeals to the letter rather than to the spirit of Christ's teaching, or to the theoretical opinions rather than to the practice of early Christians, or to Roman Catholic views based on a dogma which is condemned by the Articles of the Church of England, may follow the course taken by all other non-Roman Catholic countries in the world. They may regard this most important and most difficult question as a matter of civil polity to be settled under the control of the great principles laid down by Christ, on grounds of expediency, in relation to the present circumstances of the people and with due regard for the conscientious difficulties of the minority.

113. I am thus brought to the point that, on true Christian principles, we may arrive at the third alternative proposition above stated, namely, that marriage is dissoluble on some grounds in addition to adultery, and that its adoption is much assisted by the remarkably interesting and learned evidence of Dr. Sanday, Professor Inge, and other critics who have given evidence.

114. The question remains as to what conclusion should be reached if the questions to be considered are regarded from a purely human point of view. It is necessary to consider this because members of Christian Churches are not alone concerned, but the State has to consider the position of large bodies of its subjects who do not belong to any Christian communion and are not interested in the theological points which have been discussed. It was stated by Canon Hastings Rashdall that those who nominally belonged to the Church of England, would probably be a small majority of the inhabitants of this country, though I suppose those who would claim to belong to some Christian body would be in a considerable majority.

115. Laws, which human communities make for themselves, if they are not founded on what are regarded as Divine commands, or are laid down by a dictator or other over-riding power, will naturally be the result of human experience, which dictates to those who have to frame the laws what rules should be adopted in the general interest. Such experience will naturally be progressive, according to the length of time during which it has been gathered, the increase of knowledge in all departments, and the general development of the community; but as it is gained, certain clear and definite principles emerge, and in the end become so well established that the community in general acts upon them, and is able to express them in distinct legislation.

116. It would be too long for the purpose of these notes to show in detail how the peoples of the world, unless controlled by some superior authority, have applied principles which they have acquired in this manner. I confine my remarks to the subject of matrimonial relations, and would only suggest that on this head Mr. Westermarck's "History of Human Marriage," in which he traces the origin of human marriage, is of very high value.

117. I shall content myself with pointing out certain results which have been reached in the Western world.

118. Marriage has been defined by various legal writers, but I am not concerned with technical definitions. Its substance is a relationship voluntarily entered into by a man and a woman for purposes which are well recognised, and such relationship is regarded as creating a status, resulting from the joint life which alters the position of the parties towards each other and the community.

119. Polygamy had generally ceased to exist in the Western world before the commencement of the Christian era, though it still prevails in many parts of the world, and although there is no law of nature which dictates that the union of man and woman should be monogamous or continuous, it may safely be inferred that, as civilisation in the West advanced, it was found by experience that a monogamous union was that which best promotes the interests of humanity, and no doubt this appreciation was intensified by the influence of Christianity.

120. It was, further, a reasonable consequence of a monogamous union that it should be regarded as for the best interests of the children of a marriage and of the parties and community that such a union, when once formed, should be continuous.

121. While, therefore, the marriage union could be freely entered into by parties competent to agree, States have considered that it could not be treated as an ordinary simple contract in which no one is concerned except the parties, and that it ought not to be put an end to at the simple will of the parties. States have considered that the children of a marriage are interested in the maintenance of the status of the parents which is created by it, and that so also is the community in general.

122. The result has been that it has been regarded as generally desirable that the incidents of the relationship should be regulated by the State, and that limitations upon its determination at the will of the parties should also be determined by the same authority.

123. It has followed, therefore, that from a purely civil point of view, the relationship, when once constituted, has been regarded as continuous, and to continue unless circumstances have arisen which render its continuity practically impossible and frustrate its objects.

124. It is thus found that by a process of experience the same position can be reached as that which is arrived at by laying down a broad Christian principle of indissolubility, with exceptions to meet the necessities of human life.

125. If it can be properly maintained that a Divine law, if any such were in fact laid down for the guidance of human beings, and a human law arrived at as the result of human experience and passed with the object of promoting the highest morality and well-being of the people, would be in accord, such a proposition would go far to solve the problems which have perplexed the race.

126. My conclusion is that it can and ought to be so maintained.

I conceive that if this consummation, devoutly to be wished, were to result from the labours of this Commission, a great work would have been achieved, probably one of the greatest possible. It may well be asked should not any law, from whatever source it is derived, which has to deal with a subject in which the social, moral, intellectual, and spiritual welfare of men and women, their offspring and society in general, are concerned, be framed in the best interests of all, and not be left to depend upon which of the conflicting opinions, as to the meaning of certain doubtful passages in the Scriptures, has most adherents? While the various sections of the Churches adhere with rigidity to opinions which they have derived in the manner which has been indicated, complete unanimity on the broad lines I suggest may not be possible, though the State may act upon them. But is it not reasonable to suggest that, in view of the remarkable evidence which has been given before this Commission, more especially that of the learned theologians and scholars, and of the general considerations collected in these notes, many opinions, still tenaciously held, require and ought to receive reconsideration?

127. If the result should be that, whether the principle be reached by one mode or the other above suggested, legislation should be framed in the best interests of the morality and welfare of the people, then the question will be how the interest concerned and objects to be attained will be best secured.

128. In these notes I am mainly considering the principle to be applied, and I do not propose therein to go into the question of the application of the principle at any very great length. I will, however, proceed to direct attention to the following principal points.

129. Some maintain, that independently of religious considerations, the interests concerned and objects to be attained are best secured by declaring marriage absolutely indissoluble. They seem to consider that hard cases may make bad laws, and that it is of less importance to regard the occasional failure and suffering than the stability of what is ordinary and normal, and that such stability may be seriously shaken by permitting marriage to be in any case dissolved, or by permitting extension of the grounds for dissolution. It is probably extremely difficult for such persons to realise how much they are influenced in holding these views by religions considerations.

130. On the other hand it is strongly urged that those who hold these views do not sufficiently recognise the existing facts, those facts being that human beings are not ideal, that events occur which in fact end married life, that adulteries, desertions, cruelties, &c. take place, that dreadful misery is inflicted on innocent people and their children, and that a disregard of law takes place if release cannot be obtained, and that these matters do not occur in solitary instances, but to an extent which affects large numbers of people; and, further, that the necessity for intervention exists, and has always been recognised even by ecclesiastical authorities who provide the inadequate remedy of separation in certain cases, and that the stability of society will be rendered firmer by mitigating the harshness of the law. In effect this contention is that the interests concerned and objects to be attained will be best secured by recognising the general permanency of the marriage bond, and, at the same time, recognising how in actual human life the objects with which that bond is formed may be wholly frustrated with miserable and disastrous results.

131. Some of the witnesses called before this Commission have thought that additional grounds of divorce would tend to diminish the regard which should be entertained for the sanctity of marriage, and be therefore adverse to public policy; but another view to which the unhappy state of affairs spoken to by many witnesses, and in certain respects the painful accounts given by them as to the existing state of immorality, and the miseries of innocent parties and their children produced by adulterous connections, gross violence, drunkenness, desertion, &c. may lead, is that to maintain the legal tie of marriage in circumstances where joint life has become practically impossible, may reduce the idea of sanctity to mockery, and may cause the degradation of the regard which should be entertained towards the marriage tie if there are no means of being legally freed from it.

132. It may be noted that the evidence before the Commission is full of illustrations of the sad state of things which results from the impracticability of dissolving the legal tie when it has been dissolved de facto, and it seems reasonable to expect that no improvement will take place without the establishment of a reasonable law sufficient to meet really serious needs, and that there is no danger by adopting such a course of adversely affecting the stability of the ordinary and normal, but rather that the strengthening of the regard for the marriage tie and morality should result.

133. The real difficulty will be in arriving at the causes which the State should recognise as sufficient to justify its interference on the application of the sufferer on account of the frustration of the objects with which the tie has been formed.

Suggestions for arriving at a proper Law.

134. The general principles by which causes for dissolution of marriages should be ascertained may be gathered from the foregoing observations, to which I add the following.

135. The State should consider what law should be laid down in the best interests of the whole community, and should be guided by two principles: (1) no law should be so harsh as to lead to its disregard; (2) no law should be so lax as to lessen the regard for the sanctity of marriage.

136. I will briefly make some suggestions as to the proper law to apply upon the basis of these principles. Starting with the fact that monogamy, that is the union of one man with one woman, best secures family life, the interests of the children of the marriage and the interests of the State, that the State is interested in its citizens maintaining proper standards for themselves, and especially in bringing into existence healthy children, and maintaining and educating them, it may be observed that great importance should be attached to the proper formation of the marriage tie. A great deal of evidence has been given on this point, and it may be desirable that the Legislature should consider it, but, for the moment, I am only dealing with the principles upon which marriage may be dissolved, if at all.

137. It may then further be observed that, marriage having been properly formed, if the world were ideal, there would be no necessity for any laws which would put an end to the tie; but we have to deal with human nature as it always has been, as it is, and in all probability will be. It is found that, for various reasons, some marriages become complete failures, and life together becomes either morally or physically, in some cases both morally and physically, impossible. Unless the unions formed by such marriages which have already ceased in fact can be dissolved in law, lives become hopelessly miserable, illegal unions are formed, immorality results, and illegitimate children are born. What course then should be taken? Some have suggested that it is desirable that no marriage should be dissolved, but that the utmost remedy which the parties should be allowed to pursue should be that of judicial separation if they cannot live together, thus leaving the marriage tie to exist. The evidence that has been given shows that this will not meet the difficulty.

138. The history in connection with this matter from very early times has been placed before the Commission. Attention has been drawn to the old powers of annulment, by which in Roman Catholic times escape from the tie was possible for nobles and rich people where the necessity arose; and to the private Acts of Parliament which were passed in England; and a great body of evidence has been given as to the state of immorality which results, especially amongst the poor who cannot afford the present cost of divorce proceedings, from holding parties to a tie which has in fact been broken, though not legally put an end to. This is one side of the problem.

139. At the other extreme of the problem, there is the suggestion which has been made, but made by very few witnesses, that dissolution of the tie by mutual consent might be permitted. The first observation to make upon this is that it does not seem to have met with favour from the great bulk of the witnesses who have been called, and would probably not meet with any general favour if suggested; and, secondly, it may be said that, in the present state of English Society, or indeed of any society of a similar character, such a ground for dissolving a marriage would probably lead to disastrous results, analogous to those which history records were produced in the times of the Roman Empire. It is, of course, possible that some high minds are to be found amongst those who have written and advocated the power of dissolving a marriage on this ground, who might perhaps without danger be trusted with such a law, but would it be reasonably safe so to trust the great bulk of the community? It might perhaps work, under proper conditions, to ensure deliberation and to prevent forced consents. The last Norwegian law shows how it is to be tried in that country (see Appendix). In practice it would probably prove to amount to divorce at the will of either party who could make the other's life unbearable in order to force a consent. It may be of interest to refer to the observations which were made by Sir James Mackintosh, and also by Mr. Bishop, on the two extremes which I have pointed out. Those made by Mr. Bishop in his well-known work on Marriage, Divorce, and Separation will be found in Vol. I., ed. 1891, Chapter 3, Sections 38 to 60, under the title "The Rights and Wrongs of Dissolution by Divorce," and will well repay a careful perusal. The following is an extract from Sir James Mackintosh's "History of England," Vol. II., page 274. "It must "be admitted that the intrinsic difficulties of the "subject are exceedingly great. The dangerous "extremes are absolute and universal indissolubility, "which has been found to be productive of a general "connivance at infidelity, and consequently, of a "general dissolution of marriages on the one hand, "and on the other, of a considerable facility of "divorce in cases very difficult to be defined—a "practice, to say nothing of other evil consequences "which would be at variance with the institution of "marriage—intended chiefly to protect children from "the inconstancy of parents, and next, to guard women "against the inconstancy of husbands who, if divorce "were procurable for any but clearly defined and most "satisfactorily proved facts, would be enabled, as soon "as they were tired of their wives, to make the "situation of the helpless females, so uneasy that they "must consent to divorce. To make the dissolution "of marriage in the proper case alike accessible to all "is one of the objects to which in great cities and "highly civilised countries it is hardest to point out a "safe road."

140. Suppose, then, neither of the extremes are suitable, what other course is there?

I have already referred shortly to what marriage is, the interests of the parties, of their offspring, of the State, and, of course, it is appreciated how the object of marriage is to provide for the mutual society of the parties, for the procreation bringing up, and education of children, the prevention of vice, and the general attainment of that family life upon which society rests. Those who refer to Scripture will find how all these considerations are summed up by the old writer in the 18th verse of the 2nd chapter of Genesis: "It is not good that man should be alone; I will make a helpmate for him."

141. Then are the interests of the parties, their children, and the State properly served, and the aforesaid objects attained where continuance of marriage relations, through supervening causes which frustate the objects of marriage, has become practically impossible, by maintaining a legal tie when the tie is de facto ended? My own studies and experience, and a very careful consideration of the facts and evidence placed before the Commission, lead me to suggest that this question should be answered in the negative.

142. The question, then, seems to be, first, what the Legislature would be justified in considering as circumstances rendering married life practically impossible? At the present time, in this country, adultery is certainly so considered. But there are certain other causes which frustrate the objects of marriage even more than adultery in some cases. The Commission has had before it a great body of evidence which demonstrates this in a way which is impossible of contradiction. Even in 1857 this was recognised by some speakers on the Bill of that year; for instance, the Bishop of London said that he was prepared to maintain the opinion of universal Protestant churches that, in some grave cases, marriage might be dissolved; and Mr. Gladstone, at that time, remarked that "we have many "causes far more fatal to the great obligations of "marriage (than adultery) as disease, idiocy, crime "involving imprisonment for life, and which if the "bond be dissoluble might be urged as a reason for "divorce." There are persons who have contended as grounds for dissolution of marriage mere disinclination of the parties to each other, usually termed incompatibility of temper or unconquerable aversion; but it may be suggested that the introduction of such a cause might endanger the stability of married life and lead to the relaxation of effort to continue it, and that such a cause might in fact lead to the termination of the marriage relationship by mutual consent for trifles which might be magnified in evidence to prove the case. This ground has been introduced in some foreign laws, and the advantages and disadvantages may need consideration.

143. In practical life certain grave causes have been generally recognised, and probably will continue to be recognised, as putting an end de facto to married life and as entitling or compelling a reasonable and right-thinking person to take legal action accordingly.

It is also desirable to consider what remedy should be applied in cases where such causes intervene; some urge that only separation should be permitted, others that a complete severance of the marriage tie should be allowed. This has been very fully dealt with in the evidence, and strong expressions from some writers are also to be found upon the subject. I think it may be taken that the great body of the evidence given is in favour of complete dissolution, though there is evidence the other way.

Result of Consideration of the Matter.

144. The result of this consideration of the matter is that it has to be determined whether to affirm or reject the proposition that there are certain grave causes which render married life practically impossible, and that the State is justified in interfering, at the instigation of the injured party, to put an end to the marriage tie on the ground of one or other of such causes. If the proposition is affirmed, it is then necessary to consider what are those causes.

145. I may make the foregoing observations clearer if I state the position thus. There is in human beings a sexual difference in approximately equal numbers of persons. The result has been that unions have been formed with certain well-recognised objects. The western world has recognised that such unions should in the best interests of all concerned be monogamous, and that a monogamous union ought to be continuous until the death of one of the parties. Christian doctrine and Western human views of life are so far in complete accord. Experience of life teaches that causes other than death do in fact intervene to make continuous married life practically impossible, and the objects of the formation of the union are frustrated. It is useless to maintain a tie in theory which is broken in fact, when an attempt to maintain it leads to disastrous results to the parties, their children, and the State.

146. According to modern critical opinion and for reasons already given, it may be asserted that Christian doctrines do not necessarily conflict with human principles on these points, and it is common knowledge that many of the community are not governed by the theological doctrines of any Christian church, or of a particular section thereof. And, therefore, the principle may be laid down for the guidance of the State that, while marriage should be regarded as normally indissoluble, it should be capable of dissolution if the continuity of the relationship has become practically impossible so as to frustrate the objects with which it was formed.

147. Experience teaches that some grave causes generally recognised by the community do produce these results.

148. Parties entering into the married relationship may be regarded as contemplating its continuance notwithstanding many difficulties, but not that it shall be continued in theory when circumstances intervene, which in fact put an end to it and which the world, acting by experience gained, recognises as doing so.

The only difficulty, then, is in arriving at the causes which should be so regarded. The difficulty is more apparent than real. If two people were able to consider with fulness what their union meant as they stood to be married, they would be able to appreciate that they must contemplate in the circumstances a future extending over a number of years in which the usual vicissitudes of life must be expected, such as are brought about by increase or diminution of means, by illness, by family difficulties with children and otherwise; but would they naturally have in contemplation that either would absolutely break the vow of fidelity, would treat the other with such violence as to render joint life unsafe, would break up the home and leave for another part of the world, or would be placed shortly afterwards in a lunatic asylum or confined as a hopeless drunkard or criminal? The answer must be no. The world at large takes, and has always taken, the same view of the facts, and so have churches though they have differed as to the remedy.

149. Take, for example, adultery—the unfaithfulness of a partner to the vow of fidelity—laws of all churches and States which need be considered recognise adultery as constituting not only a moral but also a legal wrong entitling the innocent party to legal relief. So they do in cases of cruelty. The ecclesiastical courts in England have always enforced separation at the suit of the injured party, on the grounds of adultery and cruelty. Desertion is on a similar footing, and since 1857 has been added as a ground in England. More lately habitual drunkenness has been added. The law in Scotland has already been noticed.

150. There are thus already four causes for which the community has recognised the right of one party to a marriage to a separation by order of court from the other and to maintain that position through life. There are two causes in which separation de facto is brought about which are analogous, for instance, to desertion, e.g., long criminal imprisonments, and lunacy long continued and incurable; in both of these cases married parties are compulsorily separated. With regard to matters which are ordinarily contemplated as part of the experienced incidents of family life the community has not been willing to regard them as justifying its interference to separate married parties from each other.

151. In reality there is not much difficulty in stating what causes require consideration. The question is rather, what is the remedy? Divorce or only separation?

152. Both reason and the weight of opinion and experience lead to the conclusion that judicial separation is an undesirable and inadequate remedy, and that where joint life has become practically impossible from certain grave causes, dissolution of marriage should be permitted.

153. In concluding these notes I desire to observe that it may have to be considered whether the Legislature, while providing additional remedies for matrimonial wrongs, ought not to leave the State Church and other churches a measure of liberty—to co-operate or not to co-operate with the State in carrying out these additional remedies, and also a measure of liberty to deal with their own members who avail themselves of these additional remedies, as they think proper. Of course, if sound human principle and all theological doctrines were in accord, no difficulty in these respects would arise; but we have not yet, unfortunately, reached that position, though it is obvious from what has been stated that the opening for its attainment exists, and possibly some day the difficulty may be removed. With regard to the Established Church, it may be that in considering such liberty as aforesaid the question will arise how the opinions of substantial minorities may be safeguarded, for in view of the fact that there exist at least three definite opinions in that Church, it would be necessary to consider how far minorities are to be protected against a dominant majority so as to ensure freedom of opinion and action for each body.

154. In concluding these notes I desire to observe that, however rigidly certain views may be held at present, we live in times of great changes of thought, that difficulties in the relation of Church and State which may occur if certain changes in the law take place, might not be difficulties if Christian teaching and sound human principles came to be regarded in the future as being in accord, and that the present time may possibly afford an opportunity for the leaders of religious thought, which has not occurred before and may not occur again, of strengthening the relation between Church and State rather than weakening or severing it, especially when they remember the diversity of opinion which exists and the imperfect and slender materials upon which the more rigid opinions are founded. It may be that, at present, the prospect of attaining to greater unanimity of Christian opinion is somewhat remote, but the silent progress in general intellectual development, which is continually taking place, has already caused some opinions and beliefs which in an earlier age were regarded as sound and of high importance, to be now considered unsound and irrational, and may in the future lead to more common accord among the churches and their members respectively than now exists.

INDEX.

N.B.—The figures in heavy type refer to the paragraphs in Lord Gorell's statement (pages 527 to 548).

MINATION PAPERS :—
ajors (other than R.A.M.C. and A.V.C.) in "Tactical Fitness for Command"; Lieutenants and Captains of the Regular Army and of the Australian, Canadian, and New Zealand Permanent Military Forces, for Promotion; Majors of the Royal Army Medical Corps (Regular Army) in "Technical Subjects," for Promotion; Majors of the Army Veterinary Corps (Regular Army) in "Technical Subjects," for Promotion; Lieutenants of the Special Reserve of Officers, for Promotion; Lieutenants, Captains, and Majors of the Territorial Force, for Promotion; Officers of the Special Reserve of Officers and the Territorial Force (Voluntary), for the Symbol "Q" or "q." May 1912. 1*s.* litary Entrance :—R.M. Academy, R.M. College, Qualifying Test for Commissions. Supplementary First Appointments in the Royal Marines. June–July 1912. 1*s.* alifying Certificates. March 1912. 6*d.*
NCIAL INSTRUCTIONS. Appendix II. Payment Units proceeding to or from India as ordinary iefs at Indian expense. 1*d.*
. DRILL FOR. 6-in. B.L. Howitzer. 1912. 1*d.*
. HANDBOOKS FOR :—
n. B.L. 30-cwt. Howitzer, Marks I. and I*. 1912. 1*s.*
-in. B.L. Mark IX., "C" Mark IX. and Marks X., X*., and X.* Land Service. 1912. 1*s.*
AN EMPIRE. OUR. A short Review and some nts for the use of Soldiers proceeding to India. 6*d.*
'S REGULATIONS AND ORDERS FOR THE ARMY. 2. 1*s.* 6*d.*
TANCE SERVICES. ARMY. Regulations. Part I. 12. 6*d.*
E FINDER. Infantry No. 2. (Barr and Stroud.) 5-inches base. Handbook. 1912. 1*s.*
GRAPHY AND TELEPHONY. Instruction in. endments, Sept. 1912, to Vols. I. and II. 1*d.*
ITORIAL FORCE :—
RSING SERVICE. Standing Orders. 1912. 1*d.*
GULATIONS for the, and for County Associations. 912. 6*d.*
TANRY AND MOUNTED RIFLE TRAINING. ts I. and II. 1912. 6*d.*

alty Publications :—
NEL PILOT, PART II., 1906. Revised Supplent, 1912. —
SEA AND GULF OF ADEN PILOT, 1909. Supplent, 1912. —
O-JAPANESE WAR, 1904–5. PRIZE COURT CISIONS. Vol. I. Russian Cases. 7*s.* 6*d.*

of Trade :—
NAL. Weekly. 3*d.*
UR GAZETTE. Monthly. 1*d.*
HANT SHIPPING :—
dical Guide. The Ship Captain's. 2*s.*
ONAL INSURANCE ACT, 1911. PART II. UNPLOYMENT INSURANCE. Decisions given by Umpire. Vol. I. up to and including Aug. 1912. With Index. 8*d.*
WAY AND CANAL TRAFFIC ACT, 1888. Analysis the Railway Rates and Charges Order Confirion Acts, 1891 and 1892. [Reprinted with ain additions, from the Parliamentary Paper 6832 of Session 1892.] 1*s.* 6*d.*
BYORS. INSTRUCTIONS TO. Lights and Sound nals. 2*d.*

Office Publications :—
CALENDARS.
CHANCERY ROLLS. Various. Supplementary Close Rolls, Welsh Rolls, Scutage Rolls. 1277–1326. 15*s.*
CHARTER ROLLS. Vol. IV. 1–14 EDWARD III. 1327–1341. 15*s.*
STATE PAPERS. COLONIAL SERIES. Vol. XX. America and West Indies. Jan.–Dec. 1, 1702. 15*s.*
STATE PAPERS relating to IRELAND. HENRY VIII., EDWARD VI., MARY, and ELIZABETH. Vol. XI. 1601–1603; with Addenda, 1565–1654, and Calendar of the Hanmer Papers. 15*s.*
LISTS AND INDEXES.
XXXVIII. List of EARLY CHANCERY PROCEEDINGS. Vol. V. 20*s.*

Record Office Publications—continued.
III. PRIVY COUNCIL.
PRIVY COUNCIL OF ENGLAND. ACTS OF THE. COLONIAL SERIES. Vol. V. 1766–1783. 10*s.*
VI. SCOTTISH.
GREAT SEAL OF SCOTLAND. REGISTER OF THE. 1306–1424. New Edition. 15*s.*
PRIVY COUNCIL OF SCOTLAND. REGISTER OF THE. Third Series. Vol. IV. 1673–1676. 15*s.*

Local Government Board :—
BYELAWS. MODEL. VIII. Public Bathing. 2*d.*
Do. as to New Streets and Buildings. Circular, Aug. 29, 1912, to District Councils. 1*d.*
REPORTS ON PUBLIC HEALTH AND MEDICAL SUBJECTS. NEW SERIES :—
63. BOILED MILK AS A FOOD FOR INFANTS AND YOUNG ANIMALS. Available Data in regard to the Value of. 9*d.*
66. FLIES AS CARRIERS OF INFECTION. Further Reports (No. 5). 3*d.*
69. ENTERIC FEVER in BARNSTAPLE. 4*d.*
SMALL HOLDINGS AND ALLOTMENTS ACT, 1908. Circular, Aug. 22, 1912. Small Holdings—Accounts of County Councils. 1*d.*

Various :—
AERONAUTICS. ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR. Report on the Tests of Petrol Motors in the Alexander Motor Prize Competition, 1911. 9*d.*
AFRICA BY TREATY. THE MAP OF. 3rd Edition. 3 Vols. and case of Maps. 60*s.*
ANCIENT AND HISTORICAL MONUMENTS, &c, in WALES AND MONMOUTHSHIRE. ROYAL COMMISSION ON. Inventory of the Ancient Monuments in the County of FLINT. 9*s.*
ANCIENT AND HISTORICAL MONUMENTS, &c. in SCOTLAND. ROYAL COMMISSION ON. Fourth Report, and Inventory of Monuments, &c. in GALLOWAY. Vol. I. County of WIGTOWN. 6*s.* 6*d.*
ASTROGRAPHIC CATALOGUE, GREENWICH SECTION, Vol. III. (part of). 2,212 Stars within 3° of the North Pole in Standard Rectangular Co-ordinates for the Epoch 1900·0. 2*s.*
CAPE OBSERVATORY ANNALS. Vol. X. Spectroscopic Researches, Part II. Appendix I. On the Spectrum and Radial Velocity of ϵ Canis Majoris. 6*d.*
COLONIAL OFFICE :—FLAGS, BADGES, AND ARMS OF THE BRITISH DOMINIONS BEYOND THE SEAS. Additional Plate for Part II.—Arms of Jamaica. 6*d.*
COMMERCIAL TREATIES BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND FOREIGN POWERS. Vols. I. to XXV. 15*s.* each.
GREENWICH OBSERVATIONS, 1909. APPENDIX. Investigation of the Motion of Halley's Comet from 1759 to 1910. 3*s.*
GREENWICH ASTRONOMICAL, MAGNETICAL, AND METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS, 1910. 20*s.*
Do. Separate parts :—
RESULTS. ASTRONOMICAL. 1910. 5*s.*
Do. MAGNETICAL AND METEOROLOGICAL. 1910. 3*s.*
Do. PHOTO-HELIOGRAPHIC. 1910. 3*s.*
HISTORICAL MONUMENTS (ENGLAND). ROYAL COMMISSION ON. County of Buckingham Inventory. 15*s.* 6*d.*
HOME OFFICE :—
QUARRIES (under the Quarries Act, 1894) in the United Kingdom and the Isle of Man. 1911. List of. 5*s.*
SHOPS ACT, 1912, with Regulations, Explanatory Memorandum, and Circular. (Bound, 6*d.*) 4*d.*
OPHTHALMIA NEONATORUM in Scotland. Incidence of. 4*d.*
ORDNANCE SURVEY. PROFESSIONAL PAPERS. New Series. No. 1. GEODETIC BASE LINE, An Account of the Measurement of a, at Lossiemouth, in 1909; together with a Discussion on the Theory of Measurement by Metal Tapes and Wires in Catenary. 2*s.*
SICKNESS AND MORTALITY. Adjusted Rates of, and Expectation of Sickness based thereon; and Monetary Tables. 10*s.*
SLEEPING SICKNESS COMMISSION of the Royal Society. Reports of the. No. XII. 5*s.* 6*d.*
SOLAR PHYSICS COMMITTEE. SOLAR ECLIPSE EXPEDITION to Vavau, Tonga Islands, April 29, 1911 (Eastern date). Report. 6*s.*
STATE PAPERS. British and Foreign. in 100 Vols. 10*s.* each

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE THE

ROYAL COMMISSION

ON

DIVORCE AND MATRIMONIAL CAUSES.

VOLUME III.

Presented to Parliament by Command of His Majesty.

LONDON:
PUBLISHED BY HIS MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE.
To be purchased, either directly or through any Bookseller, from
WYMAN AND SONS, LTD., FETTER LANE, E.C., and 32, ABINGDON STREET, S.W.; or
H.M. STATIONERY OFFICE (SCOTTISH BRANCH), 23, FORTH STREET, EDINBURGH; or
E. PONSONBY, LTD., 116, GRAFTON STREET, DUBLIN;
or from the Agencies in the British Colonies and Dependencies,
the United States of America, the Continent of Europe and Abroad of
T. FISHER UNWIN, LONDON, W.C.

PRINTED BY
EYRE AND SPOTTISWOODE, LTD., EAST HARDING STREET, E.C.,
PRINTERS TO THE KING'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.
1912.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON DIVORCE AND MATRIMONIAL CAUSES.

APPENDICES

TO THE

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE AND REPORT

OF THE

ROYAL COMMISSION

ON

DIVORCE AND MATRIMONIAL CAUSES.

Presented to Parliament by Command of His Majesty.

LONDON:
PUBLISHED BY HIS MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE.
To be purchased, either directly or through any Bookseller, from
WYMAN AND SONS, LTD., FETTER LANE, E.C., and 32, ABINGDON STREET, S.W.; or
H.M. STATIONERY OFFICE (SCOTTISH BRANCH), 23, FORTH STREET, EDINBURGH; or
E. PONSONBY, LTD., 116, GRAFTON STREET, DUBLIN;
or from the Agencies in the British Colonies and Dependencies,
the United States of America, the Continent of Europe and Abroad of
T. FISHER UNWIN, LONDON, W.C.

PRINTED BY
EYRE AND SPOTTISWOODE, LTD., EAST HARDING STREET, E.C.,
PRINTERS TO THE KING'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.
1912.

[Cd. 6482.] Price 1*s.* 10*d.*

GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS.

1. Government Publications (with the exceptions mentioned in paragraphs 2 to 6) can be bought, either directly or through any bookseller, from—
WYMAN AND SONS, LTD., Fetter Lane, London, E.C.; or
H.M. STATIONERY OFFICE (Scottish Branch), 23, Forth Street, Edinburgh; or
E. PONSONBY, LTD., 116, Grafton Street, Dublin; or from the Agencies in the British Colonies and Dependencies, the United States of America, the Continent of Europe and Abroad of
T. FISHER UNWIN, London, W.C.

Booksellers, and the accredited Agents of Free Public Libraries, are entitled to a discount of 25 per cent. from published prices.

2. Hydrographical Publications of the Admiralty are sold by—
J. D. POTTER, 145, Minories, London, E.C.

3. Patent Office Publications are sold at—
The Patent Office, 25, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, W.C.
(N.B.—Classified Abridgments of Patent Specifications are sold also by Wyman and Sons, Ltd.)

4. Ordnance Survey and Geological Survey Publications can be purchased from—
The Director General of the Ordnance Survey, Southampton; or
The Superintendent, Ordnance Survey, Dublin; or Agents in most of the chief towns in the United Kingdom.
(N.B.—Small Scale Maps are, as a rule, procurable at Railway Bookstalls in England and Wales.)

5. The Journal of the Board of Agriculture is published monthly by the Board, at 4, Whitehall Place, London, S.W. Price 4*d.*

6. The London Gazette is published on Tuesday and Friday evenings by—
Wyman and Sons, Ltd. Price 1*s.*

The following is a list of some of the more important Parliamentary and Official Publications recently issued:—

Statutes—

Public General Acts, Local and Personal Acts, 1912. In separate Acts, at varying prices.

Public General, Session 1911. With Index, Tables, &c. 3*s.*

Index to Local and Personal Acts, 1801–1899. 10*s.* Subsequent years may be purchased separately.

Second Revised Edition. 1235–1900. Vols. I. to XX. 7*s.* 6*d.* each.

Statutes in Force. Chronological Table and Index of. 27th Edition. To the end of the Session 1 and 2 Geo. V. (1911). 2 vols. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Interregnum, 1642–1660. Acts and Ordinances of the. In 3 vols. (not sold separately). 30*s.*

Acts of the Parliaments of Scotland, 1424 to 1707. Revised Edition. 10*s.*

Statutory Rules and Orders other than those of a Local, Personal, or Temporary Character. With a List of Statutory Orders of a Local Character arranged in classes; an Appendix of certain Orders in Council, &c.; and an Index. Issued in 1890 to 1911. 10*s.* each.

Statutory Rules and Orders revised. Statutory Rules and Orders, other than those of a Local, Personal, or Temporary Character, in force on December 31, 1903. Vols. I. to XIII. 10*s.* each.

Statutory Rules and Orders in force on 31st December, 1909, Index to. 10*s.*

HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPTS. Reports of the Royal Commissioners. In course of issue.

STATISTICAL ABSTRACT FOR THE BRITISH EMPIRE, 1896–1911. [Cd. 6082.] 1*s.* 3*d.*

SEA FISHERIES. ENGLAND AND WALES. Report, 1911. [Cd. 6291.] 1*s.* 11*d.*

CONCILIATION. TRADE DISPUTES. Report, 1911. H.C. 87. 9*d.*

TUBERCULOSIS. Departmental Committee Interim Report. [Cd. 6164.] 3*d.*

NATIONAL INSURANCE. Outworkers Committee Report, Evidence and Appendices. [Cd. 6178, 6179.] 1*s.* 8½*d.*

ASSURANCE COMPANIES. Statements for 1911. H.C. 334–I. of 1911. 4*s.* 3*d.*

MERCHANT SHIPPING. Tables of progress, 1880–1910. [Cd. 6180.] 8½*d.*

TRADE OF THE UNITED KINGDOM. Annual Statement. 1911. Vols. I., II. [Cd. 6216, 6336.] 8*s.* 11*d.*

LABOUR STATISTICS, UNITED KINGDOM. 1910–11. [Cd. 6228.] 1*s.* 6*d.*

FACTORIES AND WORKSHOPS. Report of Chief Inspector. 1911. [Cd. 6239.] 2*s.* 9*d.*

EXPLOSIVES. Reports of Inspectors. 1911. [Cd. 6240.] 1*s.* 3*d.*

AGRICULTURAL OUTPUT, GREAT BRITAIN. Persons employed, &c. Report. [Cd. 6277.] 6*d.*

RUBBER IN THE PUTUMAYO DISTRICT. Treatment of Natives employed. [Cd. 6266.] 1*s.* 5*d.*

BRUSSELS SUGAR CONVENTION. Correspondence with West Indian Colonies. [Cd. 6282.] 2½*d.*

LOCAL TAXATION COMMITTEE. First Report, with Evidence and Appendix. [Cd. 6303—I.,—II., 6304.] 5*s.* 4½*d.*

RAILWAY RETURNS, 1911. Capital, Traffic, Income, Expenditure, &c. [Cd. 6306.] 1*s.* 3*d.*

EXPLOSIONS IN MINES COMMITTEE. First Report. [Cd. 6307.] 11½*d.*

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS AT PRICES OF 1900. Tables, 1900–1911, With Memorandum. [Cd. 6314.] 3*d.*

CENSUS, ENGLAND AND WALES, 1911. Vol. I. Administrative Areas. Counties, Urban and Rural Districts, &c. [Cd. 6258.] 5*s.* 4*d.*
Do. Vol. II. Registration Areas. Area, Families or Separate Occupiers, and Population. [Cd. 6259.] 3*s.* 7*d.*

LOSS OF THE S.S. "TITANIC." Report of Formal Investigation. [Cd. 6352.] 7½*d.*

LIFE SAVING APPLIANCES AND SAFETY OF LIFE AT SEA. Report of the Advisory Committee respecting Regulations. [Cd. 6353.] 2*s.*
Do. Draft Rules, with a Memorandum. [Cd. 6402.] 2½*d.*

INTERCEPTING TRAPS IN HOUSE DRAINS. Report of Committee, with Plans. [Cd. 6359.] 1*s.* 1*d.*

LICENSING STATISTICS, ENGLAND AND WALES, for the year 1911. [Cd. 6337.] 2*s.* 5*d.*

INLAND REVENUE. 55th Report. [Cd. 6344.] 1*s.* 5*d.*

STATISTICAL ABSTRACT. UNITED KINGDOM. 1897 to 1911. [Cd. 6399.] 1*s.* 9*d.*

NAVIGATION AND SHIPPING. UNITED KINGDOM. Annual Statement for 1911. [Cd. 6398.] 3*s.*

MINERS' SAFETY LAMPS. TESTING OF. Report of Departmental Committee on. [Cd. 6387.] 5½*d.*

ISOLATION HOSPITALS. Report. [Cd. 6342.] 1*s.* 7*d.*

ANCIENT AND HISTORICAL MONUMENTS (ENGLAND). Second Interim Report. South Buckinghamshire. [Cd. 6418.] 4½*d.*

COMPANIES. 1911. 21st Report. H.C. 267. 1*s.* 4*d.*

Military:—

ARMY REVIEW. Vol. III. No. 2. Oct. 1912. 1*s.*

ARTILLERY AT THE PICARDY MANŒUVRES in 1910. Translated from the French. 2*s.* 6*d.*

CLOTHING REGULATIONS, Parts I., II., and III. Amendments, Sept. 1912. 1*d.*

DRESS REGULATIONS, 1911. Amendments, August 1912. 1*d.*

ELECTRICITY. Notes on. 1911. 1*s.* 3*d.*

ENGINEER TRAINING. 1912. 6*d.*

EQUIPMENT REGULATIONS. Amendments, Sept. 1912, to Parts 2 and 3. 1*d.*

ESTABLISHMENTS. PEACE. Part II. Territorial Force. 1912–13. 4*d.*

APPENDICES

TO THE

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE AND REPORT

OF THE

ROYAL COMMISSION

ON

DIVORCE AND MATRIMONIAL CAUSES.

Presented to Parliament by Command of His Majesty.

LONDON:
PUBLISHED BY HIS MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE.
To be purchased, either directly or through any Bookseller, from
WYMAN AND SONS, LTD., FETTER LANE, E.C., and 32, ABINGDON STREET, S.W.; or
H.M. STATIONERY OFFICE (SCOTTISH BRANCH), 23, FORTH STREET, EDINBURGH; or
E. PONSONBY, LTD., 116, GRAFTON STREET, DUBLIN;
or from the Agencies in the British Colonies and Dependencies,
the United States of America, the Continent of Europe and Abroad of
T. FISHER UNWIN, LONDON, W.C.

PRINTED BY
EYRE AND SPOTTISWOODE, LTD., EAST HARDING STREET, E.C.,
PRINTERS TO THE KING'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.
1912.

[Cd. 6482.] Price 1*s.* 10*d.*

APPENDICES.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

APPENDIX I.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE HISTORY OF DIVORCE.

Modern Western notions upon the subject of marriage and divorce have been largely influenced by the views of the Christian Fathers and early mediæval theologians. It is therefore necessary to examine the systems of law that helped to mould the views of these various Christian thinkers. This will involve some brief consideration of the systems of marriage and divorce adopted by—

A. The Cretan and Ancient Greeks;
B. The Romans;
C. The Jews.

It will then be necessary to consider—

D. The Early Christian Doctrine and Practice of Divorce;
E. The Practice and Doctrine of Divorce under the later Roman Empire;
F. The Romano-Germanic Law of Divorce;
G. The later Canon Law of Divorce;

and then to trace the history of divorce in England from the Reformation down to the Divorce Act of 1857.

A. The Cretan and Ancient Greek Practice of Divorce.—The Cretan and Ancient Greek practice as to marriage and divorce requires comparatively brief treatment, for although the Athenian law is stated not to have been entirely supplanted by the Roman until the beginning of the third century A.D.* its influence in Christian times can only be measured by its effect on Roman law. We may say generally that marriage was treated among the Cretans and Greeks as a free contract, and its dissolution was freely allowed, though definitely kept in check by rules as to the devolution of property on divorce.

Some writers have suggested that in the Homeric age divorce was entirely unknown, but our modern evidence as to divorce among the Cretans (which does not appear to have been considered by Dr. Howard, though he regards the evidence on which the absence of divorce is alleged as slender) almost certainly rebuts this conclusion. Thus the Leges Gortyniorum, discovered in 1884, contain some important provisions as to divorce. Divorce at will was nominally allowed, but if capricious it involved heavy money penalties. Moreover, if a husband by his bad conduct compelled his wife to leave him these penalties attached and vice versâ. The wife took with her on her departure not only the property that she had brought to her husband, but at any rate a portion of the extant produce on that property and also the results of all work (such as weaving) that she herself had done. If the husband was responsible for the divorce and was not justified he had also to pay her a fine of five staters.

With respect to a child born after the divorce the Gortynians devised a procedure to ascertain paternity, which foreshadows that contained in the Senatus Consultum Plancianum.† We thus see that the divorce law in force in the Cretan city in the sixth century before our era compares favourably with the later Greek laws,‡ and had a certain influence on Roman law.

By the Athenian Law divorce could be granted either to the husband or to the wife. For each there was a special type of procedure. The divorce pronounced by the husband was called ἀποπομπή (the sending away), while that secured by the wife was called ἀπόλειψις (the abandonment). But the latter term is sometimes used in the sense of Repudium. In the case of the husband's action no legal decision was required. The wife returned to her father or her κύριος and the husband retained the children. It was, however, usual for the husband to dismiss his wife before witnesses.

This class of divorce was closely restricted by the duty on the husband to return the wife's dowry.* It is probable that in practice divorce was largely the privilege of the husband alone, owing to the legal requirements that rendered necessary the personal attendance of the wife desiring a divorce before the Archon and the filing by her of a written statement in support of her plea.† In a society that subjected married women to an almost Oriental seclusion these formalities must have presented no slight difficulty to wives desirous of exercising their legal rights; and the example of Alcibiades, who "collected a band of men and dragged" his wife Hipparete from the Archon when she attempted to obtain a divorce,‡ is significant of a distinction drawn as regards the sexes between the abstract legal rights and their enforcement.§ Either party possessed a right of action, but whether this was merely an action for "variation of settlements" or for the re-establishment of marriage is doubtful.‖ In one point the Greek law of divorce has no modern parallel (other than the necessity of parental consent), though it was followed in Roman times. A third party, namely, the father or his legitimate heir, could end the marriage either with the intention of taking the wife home again or of finding her another husband.¶ When the husband repudiated his wife it was his duty to find her another husband, and it seems probable that she had no choice in the matter.

As we have said, the dowry had to be returned (though probably not in the case of the adultery of the wife), and until it was returned, 18 per cent. per annum (9 obols a month) on the dowry had to be paid. The rather low position of women in practice in the matter of divorce was attacked by Plato, who in his Republic sets forth a higher ideal. The Athenian law seems to have been finally supplanted by the Roman law about the year 212 A.D.††

A brief reference must be made to States other than Athens. At Thurium both parties had the right to divorce according to the laws of Charondas, but by a later law in either case the party repudiating the other was not allowed to marry a younger person than the repudiated spouse (Diodor. Sicul., xii. 18). At Sparta an unsuccessful attempt was made to authorise divorce for sterility.

B. The Roman Practice of Divorce.—The Roman law requires a more detailed discussion; for, as Dr. Howard maintains, in its later development it had negatively "most to do with shaping the ideas of the Christian "Fathers relative to the nature of marriage and the "doctrine of divorce."

The earliest forms of marriage known to ancient Rome formed a holy relationship,‡‡ and could only be contracted between persons possessing the connubium, in other words, the patricians. The consent was supplemented by the ceremony of confarreation, and the wife passed under the power of the husband and stood towards him in loco filiæ. The children of persons sharing the connubium were in patria potestate. Before the Servian reforms the plebeians not being citizens had not the connubium, and therefore possessed no marriage form. Their marriage or unions were not justæ nuptiæ

* See A History of Matrimonial Institutions chiefly in England and the United States with an introductory analysis of the literature and the theories of primitive marriage and the family (three volumes), by George Elliott Howard, Ph.D., at pp. 239, 240 of vol. I.; pp. 3 and 12 of vol. II., where Dr. Howard refers to Meier-Schömann's Der attische Process (II., 510–13), Geffcken's Ehescheidung vor Gratian, 12 et seq.; Odyssey, X. 58; XXII. 38; Hruza, Die Ehebegründung nach attischem Rechte, 21, 22 (on the unfavourable position of Athenian women), &c.

† De agnoscendis et alendis liberis, Digest 25, 3. Mömmsen, vol. I. p. 736.

‡ Gortyniorum Leges, Tab. II. 45, 46 et seq., 53, 54 et seq. See generally as to the Greek law and practice of divorce the elaborate article by M. E. Caillemer contained in the Dictionnaire des Antiquités Grecques et Romaines d'après les Textes et les Monuments, edited by M.M. Ch. Daremberg et Edm. Saglio avec le concours de M. Edm. Pottier, vol. II, pp. 319-21 (Paris, 1892).

* Isaeus, De Pyrrhi hereditate, par. 28, Didot, p. 253; see also Demosthenes c. Eubulidem, par. 41, Reiske, 1311; c. Neaeram, par. 54 and 86, R. 1362 and 1374; and Lysias c. Alcibiadem, 1, par. 28, D. 136.

† Demosthenes c. Onetorem, I., par. 8, R. 866.

‡ Howard, vol. II., 12.

§ Andocid. c. Alcibiad, par. 14. D. 87; Plut., Alcibiades, 8.

‖ Pollux, Onomasticon III. 7.

¶ Demosthenes c. Spudiam, par. 4, R. 1029; Isae. De Aristarchi hereditate, par. 19, D. 308.

 Leges, XI., 929*e* and 930*a–b*.

†† Geffcken, op. cit., 15.

‡‡ Moyle, J. B., Imperatoris Justiniani Institutionum, 4th edition (1903), lib. I. tit. 10, de nuptiis, pp. 127 et seq.; Roby, H. J., Roman Private Law in the Times of Cicero and of the Antonines, vol. I., pp. 68–71, 133–6.

(5)14918 1250 11/12 E & S

and did not create either manus or potestas, though something analogous to both must have existed before Servius Tullius in 445 B.C. gave the plebeians the connubium (Lex Canuleia: Liv. 14, 6) and invented for them the formal marriage by coemption, which, like the marriage by confarreation, brought the wife under the power of the husband. Before the reforms of Servius and before the Twelve Tables (451 B.C.) we find that formless marriages took place between persons possessing the connubium as well as between plebeians, since the Twelve Tables [VI.] makes it quite plain that such marriages by a species of prescription created manus; and the Tables provided that if a woman desired to retain her independence she must absent herself from her home for three nights yearly. Directly that the Servian reforms gave the connubium to the plebeians this marriage usu (as it was called) was open to the plebeians, and by its means the husband obtained manus. Thus in the fifth century before Christ we have three forms of regular marriage creating manus and potestas, and in addition an irregular form, used by those who had not the connubium, which did not create manus or potestas.

The first form, marriage by confarreatio, is said to have been indissoluble in the earlier ages,* and the fact that the flamen and the flaminia were never allowed a divorce is some evidence of this. But the idea of divorce must have been introduced quite early since Plutarch attributes to Romulus a law forbidding divorce under ruinous penalties except for adultery or for one of two or three other grave causes,† and eventually (in, probably, the time of Domitian) divorce was formally recognised and took place by a religious ceremony called diffareatio.‡ There was divorce also in the case of marriage by coemptio by means of remancipation in a family council including the wife's relations.§ In the second century of our era, by the time of Gaius, a coemptionate marriage might be dissolved by either party by simple repudiation, and apparently the wife, having repudiated the husband, could insist on a remancipation to release his manus over her. Probably, in the case of a marriage in which manus had been created by use or lapse of time divorce could also be had, but we have no evidence as to the way in which it took place. No doubt it could be ended by repudiation, but if so, how did the manus come to an end? Could it end, as it came into existence, by prescription, or more probably, as in the case of a daughter by a single mancipation? The fact that there seems to be no evidence on the point shows that even in early times women rarely allowed the prescriptive period to run so as to give manus to their husbands.

The last question is of considerable importance in the history of marriage, as it is out of the inchoate marriage usu and similar but irregular marriages between those who had not the connubium that the mediæval marriage arose. In the prae-Servian plebeian marriage we find the origin of matrimonium as distinguished from justæ nuptiæ, and, as we have seen, these marriages were not ended by the invention of the coemptionate marriage. Formless unions continued to be made both between those who had and those who had not the connubium, and in the first case manus was prevented from coming, and in the second case manus could not come into existence. Where manus could have come into existence, namely, where the connubium existed, the better opinion is that the father has potestas over the issue of the union, though this had been denied by Dr. Karlowa.‖ Potestas was an incident springing not from manus but from the connubium. Hence the children of such a union were legitimate for all purposes, and when in the beginning of the third century (212 A.D.) the civitas and consequently the connubium had been extended to all free subjects of the Empire the distinction between justæ nuptiæ and matrimonium disappeared for all free persons, and there was practically no significance in the distinction in the time of Justinian.

We have seen how the confarreate and coemptionate marriage could be ended, and it is clear enough that the marriage usu could be ended in some formal way. But the marriage involving manus had actually disappeared (except in some special cases) before the end of the second century of our era, and had practically disappeared far earlier. Though the formless marriage was for a long while only recognised as matrimonium juris gentium, yet it rapidly became common, and after the second Punic War it attained the status of matrimonium justum and was soon the usual form of Roman marriage in ages that were swiftly sweeping away class distinctions and creating aristocracies of merit or of wealth. How then was the formless marriage ended? Apparently from the time of the Twelve Tables it was ended by a formal dismissal before witnesses* by the husband, while the Twelve Tables also show us that the wife, if the manus had not attached, could leave her husband at will. We must also notice that the Greek practice, by which a third party, namely, the father or other ascendant of either party who was in patria potestas, could end the marriage even against the will of the parties, was in force in Rome until the time of Marcus Aurelius.† No doubt the rapid extension of the formless marriage made some such check necessary, and perhaps to this origin we can trace the consent of the parent which under the French code is as a rule a condition precedent to a valid marriage.

With the disappearance of manus marriage became a union dependent for its legality on connubium, pubertas, and consensus of both parties. Justæ nuptiæ of this type could be ended by the voluntary action of either or both of the parties. A divorce by mutual consent was called divortium bona gratia, one-sided action was repudium, but the term divortium was also used (Roby i., 134). The husband and wife in such marriages were placed upon an equal footing. The wife retained full control of her property and had the same right of dissolving the marriage as the husband.‡ No formality of any sort (except a formal declaration of divorce such as Tuas res tibi habeto—or agito, and perhaps the reply Redde meas), nor the intervention of any court of magistrate was required.

Facility of divorce was increased by the Mænian law (167 B.C., 586 A.U.C.). Mr. Muirhead tells§ us that it (inter alia) "displaced the family council as a "divorce court, and transferred its functions in that "matter to a judicium de moribus,—a court of inquiry "nominated by the prætor, and whose duty it was "to decide to what extent there should be forfeiture "of the nuptial provisions in case of separation or "repudiation. The motives of the statute may have "been of the best, but its tendency was injurious; "for not only did it indirectly facilitate divorce, but "it rendered the idea of it familiar, and overthrew "that respect for the domestic council which had "hitherto been a check upon it." So far, indeed, was the theory of absolute freedom carried that Cicero (in the case where a man left his wife pregnant in Spain and without sending her a message of divorce (nec nuntium remisit) married in Rome and died intestate, leaving a son by each marriage) raises the question whether divorce did not arise ipso facto through the consummation of a second marriage of one of the parties or only certis quibusdam verbis.¶ Among causes for agreed divorce were barrenness, old-age, ill-health, service in the army, sacerdotal office.‖

The law of marriage and divorce was fully dealt with by Augustus a little before the opening of the

* Fest. Ep. s. v. flammeo; Gell. Noct.. Att. 10, 15.

† Plut. Rom. 22.

‡ Plut. Rom. 50. (See inscription No. 2648 Orelli.)

§ Gaius. i. 137*a*; James Muirhead's Historical Introduction to the Private Law of Rome, 1899, p. 112. Cf. the public sale of a wife in England and elsewhere, an illicit practice which is a survival of the Roman divorce by mancipation in the case of a coemptionate marriage. As late as the 14th century cases occurred among the aristocracy, and the practice was declared invalid by the King's Court in 1302 (Rot. Parl. i., 140, Pollock and Maitland vol. ii., 395-6). Instances are still reported in remote country districts.

‖ Röm. Ehe, p. 71. Muirhead, 114.

* Cic. Phil., ii. 28, par. 69.; De orat., i. 40, par. 183: Gaius, Dig. XXIV. 2. 2. 1.

† Codex V. 17 fr. 5; Digest XXIV. 1. 32. 19.

‡ Howard, op. cit. 15, 16, where he refers inter alia to Geffcken, op. cit. 11; Tacitus, Annales, IV. 16. But the wife's fortune was penalised in the event of adultery (Ulpian Reg. 6, 9 et seq.).

§ Historical Introduction to the Private Law of Rome, by J. Muirhead, pp. 233–4. Roby, i., 135.

¶ Cicero, De Orat., I. 40, par. 183; see also Roby, vol. i., p. 135*n*.

‖ Dig. XXIV. 1. 60-62.

Christian era. The first of his statutes on this subject was the lex Julia de maritandis ordinibus of the year 28 B.C. This was violently opposed, and did not pass the Comitia till 18 B.C. In the same year the lex Julia de adulteriis coercendis was passed. In the year 4 A.D. the Lex of 28 B.C. was amended, but only accepted in the new form by the postponement of the operation of the Lex for three, and eventually five, years. It came into operation in 9 A.D., in which year a supplement to it was carried by the Consuls M. Papius and Q. Poppæus. This Lex Julia et Papia Poppæa* "a voluminous matrimonial code—" for two or three centuries exercised such an influence " as to be regarded as one of the sources of Roman " law almost quite as much as the XII. Tables or " Julian's consolidated Edict." By the legislation of Augustus† important changes were introduced into the practice of divorce with a view, it would seem, of remedying the inconvenience arising in social life through the uncertainty as to whether persons were single or married, and, if married, to whom. It was accordingly provided that the party requiring a divorce (repudium) should deliver a written bill to the other in the presence of seven witnesses, who must be Roman citizens of full age; otherwise the divorce was to be void. The law also provided for the imposition of pecuniary consequences on divorce, whether by husbands or wives. If the wife was guilty of adultery, her husband in divorcing her could retain one-sixth of her dos, but if of a less offence, one-eighth, while the husband might retain in respect of each child born of the marriage a sixth of the dos, though the whole amount thus retained might not exceed one-half of the dos. If the husband occasioned the divorce, he had to make immediate or early restitution of the wife's dowry. If both parties were in fault, no penalty fell on either.

It is to be observed that this legislation was introduced in the main with a view to publicity, and that there was no intention either to establish a State jurisdiction in matters of divorce, or (except so far as the pecuniary provisions might effect that object) to impose any material restriction upon the freedom of its exercise. One exception to this liberty was indeed imposed by the Lex Julia et Papia Poppæa of A.D. 9; the freed woman might not repudiate her former master had he taken her in marriage.‡ In all other cases divorce, however unjust, was legal; moreover, bargains or penal stipulations against divorce, or for a different penalty from what the general law contained were not held valid. "No modern law of divorce, so far as I know," says Sir John Macdonell in his memorandum prepared for this Commission, "has been so lax as the Roman." That it was largely taken advantage of is not surprising, and the following passage from a well-known modern writer, Sir William Lecky, clearly indicates the looseness to which it led:—

> "We find Cicero repudiating his wife Terentia, because he desired a new dowry; Augustus compelling the husband of Livia to repudiate her when she was already pregnant, that he might marry her himself; Cato ceding his wife, with the consent of her father, to his friend Hortensius, and resuming her after his death; Mæcenas continually changing his wife; Sempronius Sophus repudiating his wife, because she had once been to the public games without his knowledge; Paulus Æmilius taking the same step without assigning any reason, and defending himself by saying, 'My shoes are new and well-made, but no one knows where they pinch me." . . . . Christians and Pagans echoed the same complaint. According to Tertullian, 'divorce is the fruit of marriage.' Martial speaks of a woman who had already arrived at her tenth husband; Juvenal, of a woman having eight husbands in five years. But the most extraordinary recorded instance of this kind is related by St. Jerome, who assures us that there existed at Rome a wife who was married to her twenty-third husband, she herself being his twenty-first wife."*

On the other hand, it is necessary to point out that some check was placed on reckless divorce from the time of Constantine to that of Justinian. "The " acceptance of Christianity as the State religion " brought with it a large amount of imperial legisla- " tion on this subject. On divorce by mutual consent " no restraint was imposed until Justinian,† as a " penalty, forced the parties into the retirement " of a religious house. Constantine‡ enumerated the " grounds on which repudiation should be deemed " justifiable, and additions to the list were made " by his successors. The penalties inflicted on the " guilty parties, as fixed by Honorius, were loss of " dos and donatio propter nuptias respectively. " Repudiation without any such good reason was still " more severely punished with enforced retirement to a " cloister, and forfeiture of the whole property in " favour partly of the cloister, partly of the guilty " person's statutory heirs."§ To this we may add that Justinian forbade persons convicted of adultery to intermarry.‖ "The legislation of Justinian's prede- " cessors and the bulk of his own were levelled at " one-sided repudiations, imposing penalties, personal " and patrimonial, (1) upon the author of a repudiation " on some ground the law did not recognise as " sufficient,—and the lawful grounds varied from reign " to reign,—and (2) upon the party whose misconduct " gave rise to a repudiation that was justifiable."¶ However, we must notice that Justinian introduced a new check upon marriage itself that was destined to be a fruitful source of matrimonial difficulties and nullity suits for a thousand years after his time. This was the doctrine of spiritual affinity (cognatio spiritualis) which extended the bars to marriage implied in certain natural and adoptive relationships to the affinities that were considered to arise from the relationship of god-parent and god-child.

No doubt the extreme views of various Greek and Latin Fathers upon the questions of marriage and divorce were the inevitable reaction from the moral and social results of an entirely corrupt social state in which the most evanescent unions were dignified by the name of marriage. The law of marriage, indeed, had been tightened rather than relaxed, and the abuse of the system of divorce was probably the result rather than the cause of the gradual decline of Roman morals which followed the Punic Wars. It was the desire for, not the opportunities of, divorce that had increased. The intervention of the State by the Mænian law (lex Mænia de dote††) in 166 B.C., which ousted the prehistoric domestic tribunal, indeed, seemed to increase the very evil that it desired to destroy. The inquiry by the prætor under this lex as to the variation of nuptial settlements after divorce did nothing whatever to check the practice of divorce. The age was corrupt, and neither the family nor the State could curb the evil. "A vast wave of corruption " had flowed in upon Rome, and under any system of " law it would have penetrated into domestic life. " Laws prohibiting all divorce have never secured " the purity of married life in ages of great corruption. . . ."‡‡

Such, shortly, was the state of the law of divorce in the Roman world in the first centuries of the Christian era. Before pursuing it into later ages when Roman law was profoundly modified by the doctrine and practices of the mediæval Church, it is necessary to state the Jewish law of divorce and the views as to the teaching of Our Lord on marriage entertained by the

* For account of its provisions, see Rudorff, Röm. RG., vol. i., p. 64, et seq. and Muirhead, 2nd Ed., p. 285. Karlowa (Röm. RG., vol. i., p. 618 et seq.) discusses juristic comments on this law.

† Lex Julia de Adulteriis, Dig. xxiv., 2. 9.

‡ D. xxiii. 2. fr. 45, 46, 48, 50, 51; xxiv. 2, fr. 11.

* Lecky, "History of European Morals," II., 306.

† Novellæ, 117. 10, and 134. 11.

‡ Cod. 6. 13. 1.

§ Moyle, p. 130. (Nov. 134. 11.)

‖ Novellæ, 134. 14.

¶ Muirhead, p. 357; and see Wächter, Ueber Ehescheidungen bei den Römern (p. 184 et seq.).

 Cod. 5. 4. 26; and see Inst. Lib. i., Tit. 10, &c.

†† See Voigt, Die lex Mænia de dote, and criticism by Arndts in the Z. f. RG., vol. VII. (1867), p. 1 et seq.; and Muirhead, p. 234.

‡‡ Lecky, op. cit. II. 308. See also Dill, "Roman Society from Nero to Marcus Aurelius." early Church. We can then pass on to consider later developments under Christian rule of the law and practice of marriage and divorce.

C. The Jewish Practice of Divorce.—By the earliest Jewish law the husband could discard his wife at will. The Pentateuch introduced the formality of the written letter of divorce, and this was a limitation of the earlier freedom of divorce. Divorce, according to the Pentateuch, was the exclusive privilege of the husband, though "in the Babylonian Code of Hammurabi the wife had some power of initiative,"* and Egyptian papyri of the fifth century B.C., written in Aramaic, show that a Jewish woman could under certain circumstances claim, though she could not declare a divorce. Mr. Abrahams states that "This "condition remained unaltered in the first Christian "century." Dr. Driver says, "By the later Jews the "wife was permitted in certain cases to claim a "divorce, viz.: if her husband were a leper, or afflicted "with a polypus, or engaged in a repulsive trade "(Kethuboth VII., 10)."†

If a man ravished a virgin he was compelled‡ to enter into an indissoluble union with her, and if he accused his wife wrongfully of ante-nuptial incontinence, she could compel him to retain her or could accept a divorce. The Mishnah extended these exceptions to the cases where the wife was insane, or a captive, or a minor.§ But though there were only these formal exceptions to the freedom of divorce, yet in Jewish, as in Cretan, Greek, and Roman, law the question of the dowry was used as a practical check. Up to the first century before Christ the wife's father kept her Kethubah or marriage settlement funds, and the husband being free of all financial responsibility could dismiss the wife to her father's house. But in the first century the Pharasaic leader, Simon b. Shetah, enacted that the Kethubah should be merged in the husband's fortune, and since in practice he would have great difficulty in refunding the money, divorce could rarely take place.

The foundation of the formal Jewish law of divorce is to be found in Deuteronomy, chapter 24, verses 1–4:—

(1) "When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness‖ in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement, and give it in her hand, and send her out of his house.

(2) "And when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be another man's wife.

(3) "And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement, and giveth it in her hand, and sendeth her out of his house; or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife;

(4) "Her former husband, which sent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that she is defiled; for that is abomination before the Lord: and thou shalt not cause the land to sin, which the Lord Thy God giveth thee for an inheritance."

Commentators have been much divided upon the meaning of the words, "some uncleanness." Literally the words mean "the nakedness of a thing," and signify most probably some indecent or improper behaviour. The school of Shammai,¶ who lived a short time before Christ, taught that a man could not divorce his wife except for immorality; but the school of Hillel, who was a disciple of Shammai, founding their interpretation upon the word "thing" and the clause "if she find no favour in his eyes," taught that it was permissible to do so for the slightest of reasons: for example, if a wife's cooking was unsatisfactory. This apparently deep inconsistency is fully dealt with by Mr. Abrahams. He says:—

> "Hillel's language: 'Even if she spoiled his food,' is, of course, figurative, and may point to indecent conduct, a sense which similar metaphors sometimes bear. . . . Hillel was a teacher noted for his tender humaneness; it was he who popularised in Pharasaic circles the negative form of the Golden Rule before Jesus stated it positively. Hence it is not just to speak of his view on divorce as 'lax' or 'low,' even if (as no doubt later Rabbinic authority assumed) Hillel used this forcible language to preserve as inalienable the ancient norm that a husband possessed complete right to divorce his wife for any cause. For it must be observed that his 'lax' and 'low' view of divorce was also a more rigid and elevated view as to the necessity of absolute harmony in the marriage state." (Q. 38,397.)
>
> "Still his view (or its interpretation) did produce a condition of subjection in the women's status, and left room for much arbitrariness on the part of the husband. 'Aqiba, who went beyond Hillel in maintaining the husband's arbitrary powers ('even if he find another woman more beautiful'), was in fact no friend of divorce, for he applied the severest rules in estimating the pecuniary rights of the wife under the marriage settlement . . . . it is true, however, that their (Hillel and Aqiba) statement of the law helped to make and perpetuate it for future times. The injurious effect was much mitigated, though never theoretically removed, by subsequent modifications" and customs such as the reforms introduced in the year 40 A.D. by Gamaliel, who ordained that 'the Get or divorce letter must be subscribed by the witnesses.' (Q. 38,397.)

Mr. Abrahams lays stress on the fact that while the wife's consent was necessary to marriage, neither it nor rabbinic sanction was necessary to divorce* at the beginning of the Christian era.

> "The rule in the first century was (Yebamoth, XIV. 1): 'Woman may be divorced with or 'without her will, but a man only with his will.' If, however, the wife contested the divorce, it is highly probable that the husband had to specify his reasons and bring the matter before a regularly constituted Beth Din or Court of three. This was certainly the case if he suspected her of adultery (Sota, I. 3–4). The accusing husband took his wife before the local Beth Din or court of three, and after a first hearing two Rabbis would conduct the accused to the Supreme Court in Jerusalem, which alone could deal finally with such charges. If she confessed, she forfeited her marriage settlement and was divorced; otherwise the ordeal of the waters (Numbers, V.) was applied." The ordeal decided her guilt or innocence. (Qs. 38,387–9.)

"The penalty for proven adultery, when the capital punishment was abolished" (not later than the year 30 A.D., says Mr. Abrahams†), "was mitigated into the divorce of the woman" (the husband having no option since the rabbis forced him to present a Bill); the wife also lost all her rights under the marriage contract and was not permitted to marry her paramour.‡ The husband could, indeed was compelled to, divorce her on suspicion, but her settlements would be intact. The husband, however, had to give some reasonable ground for his suspicions.

> "It would therefore be to his advantage sometimes to prefer a public charge against her. The male adulterer was scourged, but was not compelled to divorce his own wife unless she insisted . . . . other consequences followed from the theory that divorce was the willing act of the husband. The divorce of the insane husband of a sane wife would be impossible (Yebamoth, XIV. 1), as he could not execute the deed of divorce. Nor could the insane wife of a sane husband be divorced by him, because she stood in all the

* Evidence of Mr. Abrahams, Q. 38,385.

† A critical and exegetical commentary on Deuteronomy, p. 271. See also on Jewish law in general, Stubbe, "Die Ehe im alten Testament," 31; and Amram, "The Jewish Law of Divorce."

‡ Deuteronomy, xxii.

§ The Rev. Dr. Hermann Adler, Q. 41,369.

‖ Revised Version, "Some unseemly thing."

¶ See as to these schools "Cruden's Concordance" under 'Divorce." It is not at all certain whether these schools represented the views of their respective masters, nor is there evidence from Talmudic sources to show that acute controversy on the subject of divorce existed in the time of Christ. See the late Dr. Adler's evidence (Qs. 41,433–4).

* Driver, Genesis, p. 270.

† Q. 38,397.

‡ Qs. 38,397A, 38,398; Sota, V. 1.

greater need of his protection. . . . (If the insanity were proved to have existed before marriage, the marriage could be pronounced initially void, for the marriage of the insane was illegal.)" (Q. 38,403.)

As we have seen in certain other cases of disease (though not of mere infirmity), either could claim a divorce, and in certain cases of infirmity (such as when the wife became a deaf-mute or was barren after ten years of marriage) the husband could claim a divorce.

Divorce was a private transaction, but certain formalities had to be observed in connection with the "Get" or Bill of Divorce, and, in case the wife was unjustly repudiated, what answered to her dowry had to be repaid to her from her husband's property.* This, as we have seen, was an effective check on divorce. Moreover, it must be remembered (as Mr. Abrahams points out) that "he could not secure himself against "the divorced wife's claim for maintenance unless he "satisfied the court that the divorce had been properly "executed, and that the wife's just rights had been "satisfied. In that sense, the courts would have a "power to revise his personal acts" even in the first century of our era.†

It would seem that in the time of Christ the best ethical sentiment among the Jews was against great freedom of divorce, and it was the rabbis' duty to effect a reconciliation between husband and wife where possible. Moreover, "the husband was expected to "show every possible considerateness to his divorced "wife. She was, of course, no longer under his "jurisdiction, she was sui juris, and her husband lost "the usufruct of her estate. This last fact was a "constant preventive of arbitrary divorce."‡ Moreover, "the charge on his estate for the settlement went "much further than his own estate; any property he "had ever possessed and had passed into the hands of "third parties might be seized by the wife for payment "of the settlement."§ The husband was expected to preserve the divorced wife from want. The question of the children of the marriage was an additional check on divorce among the Jews. If the wife retained the children, the former husband had not only to maintain his late wife but to pay her for her services to the children. "It is clear that a husband was very reluctant "to divorce his wife if she were also the mother of his "children."‖ There was no divorce for desertion, though the courts offered special facilities for the presumption of the death of the deserter, and every effort, rendered possible by "the excellence of inter-communication between Jewish settlements," was made to trace the fugitive.¶

New Testament Teaching.—The teaching of Our Lord as recorded in the New Testament is fully dealt with elsewhere, and it will be sufficient to set out here the principal passages bearing on the subject, namely, those in the Gospel according to St. Matthew (V., 31 32; XIX., 3–12), the Gospel according to St. Mark (X., 2–12), the Gospel according to St. Luke (XVI., 18), St. Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians (VII., 1–16), and St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans (VII., 2 and 3).

St. Matthew.

V., 31. It was said also, Whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement:

32. But I say unto you, that every one that putteth away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, maketh her an adulteress: and whosoever shall marry her when she is put away committeth adultery.

XIX., 3. And there came unto Him Pharisees, tempting him, and saying, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause?

4. And He answered and said, Have ye not read, that He which made them from the beginning made them male and female,

St. Matthew.

XIX. 5. and said, For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife; and the twain shall become one flesh?

6. So that they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

7. They say unto Him, Why then did Moses command to give a bill of divorcement, and to put her away?

8. He saith unto them, Moses for your hardness of heart suffered you to put away your wives: but from the beginning it hath not been so.

9. And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and he that marrieth her when she is put away committeth adultery.

10. The disciples say unto Him, If the case of the man is so with his wife, it is not expedient to marry.

11. But He said unto them, All men cannot receive this saying, but they to whom it is given.

12. For there are eunuchs, which were so born from their mother's womb: and there are eunuchs, which were made eunuchs by men: and there are eunuchs, which made themselves eunuchs for the Kingdom of Heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

St. Mark.

X., 2. And there came unto Him Pharisees, and asked Him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife? tempting him.

3. And He answered and said unto them, What did Moses command you?

4. And they said, Moses suffered to write a bill of divorcement, and to put her away.

5. But Jesus said unto them, For your hardness of heart he wrote you this commandment.

6. But from the beginning of the Creation, male and female made He them.

7. For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife;

8. And the twain shall become one flesh: so that they are no more twain, but one flesh.

9. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

10. And in the house the disciples asked Him again of this matter.

11. And He saith unto them, Whosoever shall put away his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery against her:

12. and if she herself shall put away her husband, and marry another, she committeth adultery.

St. Luke.

XVI., 18. Everyone that putteth away his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery: and he that marrieth one that is put away from a husband committeth adultery.

I. Corinthians.

VII., 1. Now concerning the things whereof ye wrote: It is good for a man not to touch a woman.

2. But, because of fornications, let each man have his own wife, and let each woman have her own husband.

3. Let the husband render unto the wife her due: and likewise also the wife unto the husband.

4. The wife hath no power over her own body, but the husband: and likewise also the husband hath not power over his own body, but the wife.

5. Defraud ye not one the other, except it be by consent for a season, that ye may give yourselves unto prayer, and may be together again, that Satan tempt you not because of your incontinency.

* See Howard, op. cit., vol. ii., 14, where he refers to Amram, op. cit., 47, 48, 111–31; see also 25, 45, 78 ff. and the evidence of Mr. Abrahams.

† Q. 38,405.

‡ Q. 38,405; T. B. Pesahim, 113*b*.

§ Q. 38,405.

‖ Q. 38,407.

¶ Q. 38,411.

I. Corinthians.

VII., 6. But this I say by way of permission, not of commandment.

7. Yet I would that all men were even as I myself. Howbeit each man hath his own gift from God, one after this manner, and another after that.

8. But I say to the unmarried and to widows, It is good for them if they abide even as I.

9. But if they have not continency, let them marry: for it is better to marry than to burn.

10. But unto the married I give charge, yea not I, but the Lord, That the wife depart not from her husband,

11. (but and if she depart, let her remain unmarried, or else be reconciled to her husband); and that the husband leave not his wife.

12. But to the rest say I, not the Lord: If any brother hath an unbelieving wife, and she is content to dwell with him, let him not leave her.

13. And the woman which hath an unbelieving husband, and he is content to dwell with her, let her not leave her husband.

14. For the unbelieving husband is sanctified in the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified in the brother: else were your children unclean; but now are they holy.

15. Yet if the unbelieving departeth, let him depart: the brother or the sister is not under bondage in such cases: but God hath called us in peace.

16. For how knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband? or how knowest thou, O husband, whether thou shalt save thy wife?

Romans.

VII., 2. For the woman that hath a husband is bound by law to the husband while he liveth; but if the husband die, she is discharged from the law of the husband.

3. So then if, while the husband liveth, she be joined to another man, she shall be called an adulteress: but if the husband die, she is free from the law, so that she is no adulteress, though she be joined to another man.

These passages have been subjected to endless analysis from the days of the Early Fathers to the present time, and from these passages have been derived, in the main, the various teachings of the various branches of the Church on the subject of divorce. The evidence of a series of theological thinkers of the highest eminence and representing many schools of religious thought has presented to the Royal Commission a very great variety of views as to divorce based upon these passages. These views present a continuous line of opinion, from the view that marriage, whether it be undertaken by a Christian or a non-Christian, is absolutely and under all circumstances whatsoever indissoluble, to the view that marriage is not a specifically Christian institution at all and must be dissoluble whenever it has de facto ceased to exist. It will be convenient therefore to trace the evolution of opinion and practice among Christians on the subject of divorce.

D. Early Christian Doctrine and Practice.—The first four centuries of the Christian era were a period of indecision and uncertainty as to the principles that should govern the dissolution of marriage.* The theologians of that age being as yet unprovided with any formulated doctrine on the subject endeavoured to derive principles from the text of the New Testament and were at once met by many of the same difficulties that have been explained by various witnesses before the Royal Commission. The literature of the period extends from Hermas, a writer of the earlier part of the second century, to the age of St. Augustine, who died in the year 430.* The fact that the cause named in St. Matthew for divorce was accepted by many of the most distinguished commentators in this period incidentally gave rise to the acceptance by the Church in this epoch of many causes for divorce. Thus Hermas admits idolatry, apostacy, and covetousness equally with carnal transgressions as grounds for divorce, though he condemns remarriage, and it must be noted that such great thinkers as Origen and St. Augustine took even a wider view. Thus Origen in his Homily on St. Matthew says that "if a woman was guilty of "other crimes equal to or greater than fornication, as "if she were a sorceress, or a murderer of her children, "or the like, that for such crimes she might be law-"fully divorced"; and Augustine says† "that for "unlawful lusts, not only such as are committed by "carnal inclination with other men or women, but also "for any other lusts, which make the soul, by the "ill-use of the body, go astray from the law of God, "and perniciously and abominably corrupt it, a man "may, without crime, put away his wife, and a wife "her husband, because the Lord excepted the cause "of fornication, which fornication we are compelled to "take in the most general and universal sense." The fact that St. Augustine, as will appear directly, changed his view, adds to the general confusion of practice that marks this period. To Hermas succeeds Tertullian (c. 155–c. 222), who in his treatise on monogamy rejected all second marriages as unchristian. In the second book addressed to his wife he retracts this position and allows of remarriage after divorce.‡ It is to be noted that Marcus Minucius Felix, one of the earliest Latin apologists for Christianity, also condemns second marriages, and the notion that there is something blameworthy in successive marriages, the previous spouse or spouses being dead, was developed until fourth marriages were declared to be adultery. St. Augustine repudiated the whole idea as unscriptural. Origen (c. 185–c. 254 A.D.) declares (vii. in Matt.) that some bishops permitted women to marry again while their husbands were living. He condemns the practice as unscriptural. Lactantius Fermianus (c. 260–c. 340 A.D.), in his Divinarum Institutionum (vi. 23, fin.), considers that scripture allows divorce in the case of a man. He is silent concerning women. The Council of Elvira (305–6 A.D., can. viii. and ix.) excommunicates the woman who re-marries after divorcing a guilty husband, but does not attempt to declare a nullity; while the Council of Arles (314 A.D. can. x and [can. xxiv.]) asserts the general principle of indissolubility and advises the youthful husband who divorces his guilty wife not to marry again in her lifetime. A little later, Epiphanius,§ extending the principle laid down by Lactantius, allowed re-marriage when the previous marriage has been dissolved by fornication, adultery, or any such cause. St. Basil (329–379 A.D.) considered that re-marriage by a husband was pardonable, and his second wife not to be condemned; but that the woman is prohibited from re-marriage by the custom of the Church. (Ep. Can. i. can. 9.)

These witnesses forerun a group of great thinkers whose opinions prove that the mind of the Church in the fourth century was absolutely unsettled on the whole subject. St. Jerome (c. 340–420 A.D.), like Hermas, admitted idolatry, apostacy, and covetousness as well as adultery as grounds for divorce. But he considered‖ divorce forbidden to the wife by the passages in the Epistle to the Romans (cap. vii.) and in the First Epistle to the Corinthians (VII., v. 39). The fact that he speaks of the infliction of penance for remarriage as remarkable¶

* It should, however, be noted that Mr. Watkins, in his learned work Holy Matrimony [1895], asserts that "No writer "of the first three centuries is found to advocate or admit "the re-marriage of the innocent husband" (p. 225).

* As to this period, see the Notes of Cotelerius upon Hermas (see Bingham, vi. 249); Selden (ed. 1726, vol. ii., p. 807). "Uxor Hebraica," lib. iii., cc. 26, etc.; Bingham's Origines Ecclesiasticae, vols. vi. and vii.; and the authorities cited in the following works:—A. Esmein, "Le Mariage en Droit canonique," vol. ii. cap. ii. p. 45; Héfélé Histoire des Conciles, Paris 1870; "Le Divorce et la Séparation des Epoux" (Paris, 1891); Holtzendorff's Encyclopædia, article "Kirchen recht," by U. Stutz, vol. ii., p. 811; the authorities cited by Howard, op. cit., vol. ii., p. 24; Burge's Colonial and Foreign Law, vol. iii. (ed. 1911), pp. 4–75, 806–904.

† De Sermo Dom. in Monte, lib. i., c. xvi.

‡ Tertullian, translated by the Rev. C. Dodgson, vol. i. [no other issued], Apologetic and Practical Treatises, Oxford, 1842, p. 421, and note on pp. 431–33.

§ Haer. 59, c. 4, Ed. Colon., 1682, vol. i., p. 496.

‖ Ep. 55, Amand., par. 3.

¶ Ep. 77, Ad Oceanum de Morte Fabiolæ.

seems to show that the Church did not regard re-marriage as a matter for penalties at that date.* He describes such a marriage as "a fault" only (par. 3 and 4), excuses it on the ground of "necessity," and describes it as "the shadow of a miserable marriage." Again, in his Commentary on St. Matthew, he says "the wife is not to be dismissed but only for fornication." This is also the view of St. Ambrose (d. 397).

The views of St. Chrysostom (c. 347–407 A.D.) are somewhat difficult to grasp. In his 17th homily on the Gospel according to St. Matthew he accepts the exception in Matthew V., 32.† He says that Christ "added in good time this corrective, in one way "only giving leave to cast her out, but no other-"wise." But he also declares in an earlier passage of the same homily that "when cast out she continues to be the wife of him that expelled her." This seems to refer to dismissal for causes other than adultery. So when he turns to his 19th homily on the First Epistle to the Corinthians [vii., 1, 2] he asserts that in the case of adultery "the marriage has already been dissolved." The final view of St. Chrysostom seems to have been that marriage is absolutely dissolved by adultery, and this view was also held by Gelasius of Poictiers (c. 367), Theodoret (c. 387–c. 45 A.D.), and Asterius of Amasea (c. 400 A.D.). It is interesting to note that St. Chrysostom specially recognises that the introduction of the Letter of Divorce by the Jews was a step forward; that it was necessary to have a formal divorce to prevent confusion of spouses. Some modern writers have regarded the introduction of the Letter of Divorce as a step away from an earlier stage of indissolubility. St. Chrysostom did not hold this opinion, despite his view of the texts of Genesis. It is perhaps desirable to note the views of the spurious Apostolical Constitutions,‡ a fourth century document, which speaks of the loss of a husband by ways other than death, and those of the so-called Ambrosiaster,§ the pseudo-Ambrose (c. 380), who allowed re-marriage when the heathen party departed (in pursuance of 1 Cor. VII., 15), but considered that in the case of adultery remarriage was permitted to the man alone (in accordance with 1 Cor. VII., 11).

It has already been seen that St. Augustine at one time held not only the view that adultery was a good ground for divorce, but that there were other grounds based on the doctrine of spiritual fornication. He changed his view with hesitation, and adopted the intermediate position, that there can be divorce without the right of remarriage. St. Chrysostom apparently at one time held this view, which had long been held by a section of the Church. Three centuries earlier, Hermas had condemned remarriage as adultery, and St. Jerome, who held practically the same views as Hermas as to the grounds of separation, appears to have adopted his doctrine as to remarriage. Pope Innocent I. (who died in 417), in his third letter to Exuperius, Bishop of Toulouse, has no hesitation in calling remarriage after divorce adultery,‖ and in 407 the Fourth Council of Carthage at last proclaimed the strict theory of indissolubility.¶

Thus as the great fourth century grew to its close the Church was gradually making up its mind after long hesitation and on grounds of expediency that there should be no remarriage after divorce. The corrupt state of the Roman world painted in such bitter and pungent language by Asterius of Amasea (c. 400 A.D.) made some strong step seem necessary, and by this date the Church was free to legislate for itself without the fear of persecution. The action of St. Augustine finally settled the matter. The Papacy was with him, and that fact was not without importance. The long hesitation through which both St. Chrysostom and St. Augustine passed is a most significant fact in the history of theological development. It is difficult to dogmatize upon a question of construction when it is found not only that St. Chrysostom and St. Augustine differed, but that eventually each held the view originally held by the other.

St. Augustine seems to have felt that the solution was a question of statesmanship rather than of construing certain passages of scripture; that the age called for the exercise of what Dr. Sanday has called "the higher expediency." Yet he adopted the strict doctrine of the indissolubility of marriage with great hesitation. He first doubted his own doctrine of spiritual fornication which let in many causes of divorce and slowly came to the position that marriage is a sacrament, that it can only be ended by adultery and that it is not ended in such a fashion as to admit of remarriage. On the mere question of the construction of the scriptural texts he admitted to the last that the question of divorce and remarriage is surrounded with difficulties. He says in the most modest terms that he is really unable to solve the problem: "though "in my humble fashion I have thus investigated and "discussed these matters, nevertheless, I am not "ignorant that the question of marriage is most "obscure and most involved. I dare not profess to "have explained as yet, either in this or in any other "work of mine, all its complexities, nor if urged to "do so am I now able to explain."* Yet he did not hesitate, on the grounds of "the higher expediency," to formulate a law of marriage that has survived since his time. He gave the doctrine of indissolubility of marriage, says Esmein,† "a solid and in a measure a "scientific basis. He gave it a consistency forced "from the sacrament of marriage. He set aside at "one stroke all causes of divorce or of dissolution "other than death admitted by the secular law: "sickness, captivity, or prolonged absence. He was, "one may say, the artisan who gave the final touch "to the theory of indissolubility."

But while the great influence exercised by Augustine must be weighed, it must also be remembered that the final law of the Church as to marriage and divorce was not settled for many centuries after his time, not, indeed, for more than seven centuries after the time of Augustine, in the days of Gratian and Peter Lombard and Vacarius. This fact, coupled with the hesitation of the great Fathers of the Church on the subject, deprives historians of the evidence involved in continuous Church doctrine. There is no post-apostolic tradition with which to deal. We have rather a matter of Church policy that slowly took definite shape, but was not universally formulated until three centuries before the Reformation.

E. Later Roman and Germanic Doctrine and Practice of Divorce.—It will now be convenient to discuss shortly the trend of later Roman legislation. After the lex Julia, which has been discussed in a preceding section, there was little change in the law of divorce until the important edict promulgated by Constantine in 331. This law limited the cases for which divorce could take place without pecuniary penalties to three in the case of both husband and wife. The wife could obtain a divorce without penalties where the husband had been guilty of (1) murder, (2) poisoning, and (3) the violation of tombs. If she divorced her husband for any other reason, e.g., for being a drunkard or a gambler, or for frequenting the society of loose women, the divorce seems to have been good in law, but she forfeited her dowry and was punishable with deportation. The husband could obtain a divorce without penalties in cases of (1) adultery, (2) poisoning, and (3) acting as procuress. If a husband divorced his wife for any other reason, the divorce seems to have been good in law, but he forfeited all interest in his wife's dowry and, if he

* Cf. Bingham, vol. vii., p. 304, and Dodgson, op. cit.

† Oxford ed., 1843.

‡ iii., 1.

§ The unknown author of Commentaria in xiii. Epistolas beati Pauli.

‖ Para. iv. (Sacrosancta Concilia, vol. ii., cols. 1255-6).

¶ Canon 102 in Integer Codex Canonum Ecclesiæ Africanæ (Sacrosancta Concilia, vol. ii, col. 1117). The canon runs as follows: "Placuit, ut secundum evangelicam et "apostolicam disciplinam, neque dimissus ab uxore, neque "dimissa a marito, alteri conjungatur; sed ita maneant, aut "sibimet reconcilientur: quod si contempserint, ad pœniten-"tiam redigantur. In qua causa legem imperialem petendum "est promulgari."

* "His ita pro meo modulo pertractatis atque discussis, "quæstionem tamen de conjugiis obscurissimam et implicatis-"simam esse non nescio. Nec audeo profiteri omnes sinus ejus, "vel in hoc opere, vel in alio me adhuc explicasse, vel jam "posse, si urgear explicare." De conjugiis adulterinis ad Pollentium, lib I., cap. XXV. (end), paragraph 32, in Paris ed., 1839, vol. VI., col. 680; Basle ed., 1556, tome 6, col. 854.

† II., 53.

married again, the divorced wife was authorised to seize the dowry of the second wife.*

In 449 Theodosius II. and Valentinian introduced further legislation. The following principle was laid down: "Consensu licita matrimonia posse contrahi, contracta non nisi misso repudio solui præcipimus. Solutionem etiam matrimonii difficiliorem debere esse favor imperat liberorum. The following were the grounds for divorce. The wife could obtain a divorce for the following offences:—(1) treason; (2) adultery; (3) homicide; (4) poisoning; (5) forgery; (6) violating tombs; (7) stealing from Church; (8) robbery or assisting, or harbouring robbers; (9) cattle stealing; (10) attempting a wife's life; (11) beating or whipping wife; (12) introducing immoral women into the house. The husband could obtain a divorce for any of the above except, of course, Nos. 11 and 12, and also for additional reasons:—(1) going to dine with men other than her relations without his knowledge or against his wish; (2) going from home at night against his wish without reasonable cause; (3) frequenting the circus, &c., after having been forbidden by him to do so.†

The importance of this last enactment lies in the fact that it remains at the present day with certain modifications the law of Greece, and is accepted by the Greek Church.‡

Thus under the growing influence of the Church Justinian forbade by the 22 Novel (6 and 7) and the 134th Novel (39) divorce by mutual consent, with the three following exceptions: (1) when the husband was impotent;§ (2) when either husband or wife wished to enter a monastery;‖ (3) when either was in captivity for a certain length of time.¶ By chapter 11 of the 127th Novel Justinian practically abolished divorce by mutual consent, and enacted that all who dissolved their marriages in this way should forthwith retire into monasteries and should forfeit the whole of their estates. It is interesting to note that on this forfeiture if there were children, one-third, if there were only ascendants, two-thirds, and if neither, the whole of the estate of the parties was to pass to the monastery.

Justinian's successor, Justin, found it necessary, however, to repeal the prohibition of divorce by mutual consent, for, says this Novel of Justin II. (566 A.D.), "it was difficult to reconcile those who once "came to hate each other and who, if compelled to live "together, frequently attempted each other's lives." It will be noticed that throughout this legislation the strict principle of the indissolubility of marriage already conceived by the Church is completely ignored. Mr. Watkins shows* that by the Eclogue of Leo III. (the Isaurian) and his son Constantine (740 A.D.) a civil statute of the Empire abolished the licence of divorce by consent, and a little later (776–780 A.D.), under the Emperors Leo IV. and Constantine, every divorce effected by "vicious agreement" (κακῇ συμφωνίᾳ) was forbidden under the penalty of a sensible fine, and carried with it the annulment of any subsequent marriage. But by the beginning of the ninth century (806–815 A.D.) the canons of the Patriarch Nicephorus recognise that divorce by consent is again good before the secular law, and by the time of Basil the Macedonian (867 A.D.) divorce by consent is clearly recognised as valid. But the law changes again, and by the Prochiron of 870 A.D., the Epanagoge of the Emperors Basil, Leo and Alexander (c. 884 A.D.), and the Basilica (905–11) divorce by consent is forbidden.

It seems certain that the Roman law as enunciated from Constantinople affected in some measure the law of divorce that became operative in Constantinople from the date of its occupation by the Turks in 1453.

Sir Edwin Pears has given us a brief account of the Mahometan law of divorce that may be quoted here:—

> "Under a system of law which recognises polygamy and the practice of making marriages without consulting both parties, easy divorce was a necessity. Accordingly Mahomet provided a regular and systematic legal manner of obtaining it. But in Mahometan countries generally, and certainly in Turkey, this method was found much too slow, and in its place 'repudiation' has been substituted. The husband pronounces three times a simple formula by which he puts his wife away, and then, without the intervention of any kind of law-court, the woman ceases to be his wife. Eminent Moslem legal authorities, both of Turkey and India, recognise that the practice of repudiation is an abuse, but it exists; it is adet (custom), and has the force of law. I believe that in Turkey there are no cases of divorce, at least I never heard of one. The wife is simply put away . . . . The abuse in past years became so great that the lawyers who have generally been the defenders of women's rights came to their aid and invented a method which to some extent prevents the abuse of repudiation. When a Turk of any position marries, he now usually gives a bond to the wife or her father to the effect that if he repudiates her he shall forthwith pay a fixed sum as liquidated damages. In addition to such sum, the fact that the wife's property is safe from her husband's grasp makes a husband hesitate before he repudiates his wife. . . . . Moslems took much of their law from that of New Rome, which was more favourable to women than that of mediæval Europe. Probably also the system of polygamy rendered it necessary to strengthen the wife's hold over her property. Thus it comes about that upon repudiation the husband, with the aid of the lawyers, is compelled to give up all the property which his wife may have voluntarily brought into the common stock, and to pay the amount of the bond which he has signed."†

F. The Romano-Germanic Law of Divorce.—It would seem that among the Teutonic races marriage was in the earliest times a matter of purchase, under which the wife at first in fact, and later in theory, became the husband's chattel. With regard to the primitive law of divorce "it is highly probable that "among the German nations, so long as they were "heathen, the husband and wife could dissolve the

---

* III. Cod. Theod. Tit. xvi. 1 (de Repudiis) (ed. Jacobi Gothofredi, 1665, vol. i., p. 310).

† See Codex Justinianus, V., 17, 8. See also Legum Novellarum Divi Theodosii, lib. i., tit. xvii. (Gothofred. vol. VI., app., p. 9). In Cod. V., 18, the law as to the rights to property on divorce is laid down. See also Legum Novellarum Divi Theodosii, lib. I., Tit. xvii. (Gothofred. vol. VI., app., p. 9).

‡ The law of divorce under the Greek Church is fully discussed in vol. III. of Burge's Foreign and Colonial Law (published in 1911), pp. 54–64; (The Eastern Canon Law) on pp. 840–844 (Divorce). In Russia, members of the Orthodox Church may seek divorce for (1) adultery; (2) impotence; (3) loss of civil rights and deportation under certain limitations; (4) desertion for five years. In Servia the old law given above is more closely followed. In Greece Novel. 127 of Justinian is mainly followed. In the Eastern Church there is no separation a mensâ et toro.

§ Cod. Jus., V. 17. 10, and Novella, 22. 6.

‖ Novella, 134. 39.

¶ Novella, 22. 7.

 See G. E. Heimbach's edition of the Novels (Leipzig, 1851). Novels 22 (de nuptiis), 127 (cap. 10 and 11), and 134 (cap. 39). Novels 117 (cap. 10) and 134 (cap. 11) are referred to in various text-books as authorities on this point, but in Heimbach's edition of the Novels Novel 117 has only four chapters, and the 11th chapter of Novel 134 does not deal with the subject. Chapters 10 and 11 of Novel 127 are the important enactments. If we adopt the text of the Corpus Juris Civilis followed by Dionysius Gothofredus, we find that the following was the order of legislation: Lex 9 of the section of the Code entitled De repudiis (liber v. Tit. xvii.), and Novella 22 (De nuptiis), cap. iv., allowed divorce by mutual consent. Novella 117 contained the following chapters dealing with divorce:—c. 8, De justis divortiorum causis marito permissis; c. 9. De justis divortii causis mulieri concessis; c. 10. Ut non liceat consensu matrimonium dissolvere, nisi ex causa probabili. cc. 11 and 12 give the exceptions to this rule. The provisions of chapter 10, forbidding divorce by mutual consent, were reinforced by Novella 127, chapter 4, Matrimonium sine causa dissolvendum non esse, and Novella 134, chapter 11, Pœna injusti repudii.

The effect of this legislation was to prohibit divorce by mutual consent, except in the three cases mentioned in the text, and to impose property penalties if the rule was infringed. This rule was reversed by Novella 140, chapter 1. ut consensu matrimonium solvi possit, passed by Justin, Justinian's successor. (Corpus Juris Civilis, ed. 1663, vol. 2.)

* Holy Matrimony: a treatise on the Divine Laws of Marriage, by Oscar D. Watkins, pp. 349–352.

† Turkey and its People, by Sir Edwin Pears (pp. 69–70).

" marriage by mutual consent, also that the husband " could put away his wife if she was sterile or guilty of " conjugal infidelity or some other offences and could " marry another woman."* The Roman law with its ancient doctrine of divorce by mutual consent springing as we have seen out of the inchoate marriage usu was gradually amalgamated with these local customs as Roman control was extended.

Thus the Burgundian law says: "Consensu partis " utriusque repudium dari et matrimonium posse " dissolvi"; and the Bavarian laws†: "Si quis liber " uxorem suam sine aliquo vitio per invidiam di- " miserit, cum 40 et 8 solidis componat parentibus." But the Burgundian laws sharply distinguish between the rights of husband and wife thus: "(1) Si qua mulier " maritum suum, cui legitime est juncta, dimiserit, " necetur in luto"; and "(2) si quis uxorem suam sine " causa dimiserit, inferat ei alterum tantum, quantum " pro pretio ipsius dederat, et multa nomine sol. 12."‡ There has also to be taken into account the compromise with Christian doctrine. It is clear that marriage after divorce was not absolutely prohibited, but the severity of the penalties for putting away a wife unjustly, show the influence of the Church. Accordingly, though a one-sided divorce on the part of the husband is not entirely taken away, the grounds upon which he may act are more or less restricted in harmony with Roman ideas, and the wife is herself given the rudimentary right of one-sided repudiation where the husband is guilty of very grave crimes. These modifications are derived from the Theodosian Code, and are preserved in MSS. such as the Epitome Codicis Guelpherbytani or the Epitome Monachi. In the Law of the West Goths, for instance, where Christian influence is more marked than in other Codes before the close of the 8th century, the right of the man to put away his wife is restricted to cases of adultery, and malificia or certain other offences, while for three scandalous wrongs (murder, malificia, or violation of tombs) the woman may repudiate the husband and (according to some MSS.) contract another marriage:§ but the manuscripts vary on several points, the authorities are obscure, and all that can be said is that these laws show a growing strictness both as to divorce and remarriage which reflects the same movement in Roman law that became noticeable from the time of Theodosius in the mid-fifth century.

It appears that in Ireland, Wales, and England the doctrine of dissolubility had a prolonged struggle with the Church with, however, the same tendency towards restriction of divorce which was visible elsewhere. In Ireland "there were seven cases in which " the wife could legally separate from her husband " and retain the whole or part of her Coibche, and " obtain special damages for injury."‖ The Roman influence seems plain in England: "the dooms of our " own Æthelbert. Christian though they be, suggest that " the marriage might be dissolved at the will of both, " or even at the will of one of the parties to it."¶

"The Anglo-Saxon and Frankish penitentials allow a " divorce a vinculo matrimonii in various cases:—if the " wife is guilty of adultery, the husband may divorce " her and marry another and even she may marry " after five years of penance; if the wife deserts her " husband, he may after five years and with the " bishop's consent marry another; if the wife is " carried into captivity, the husband may marry another, " 'it is better to do so than to fornicate.'"* In the case of Wales it is also possible to recognise the Roman influence, surviving, it may be, from the Roman occupation of Britain. There was freedom of divorce to either party for definite causes, but settlements and fines, in fact, checked divorce at every turn.†

G. The Later Church and Canon Law of Divorce.—It will now be convenient to consider the attitude of the Church onward from the time of Augustine, where it was left for the sake of following some rough order of chronology, and to trace it, through the final settlement of the Christian doctrine of divorce in the Canon law, down to the Reformation.

From the time of the decree of Innocent I. and the Council of Carthage there is more or less wavering on the part of the ecclesiastical authorities, but in general the tendency is to uphold the strict doctrine of indissolubility. This is shown by the Councils of Angers (453), Canon VI.; Irish Synods under St. Patrick (c. 453), Canon 19 (first Synod), Canon 26 (second Synod); Orleans (533), cap. XI., forbidding divorce at will (cap. 19 forbids marriages between Jews and Christians); Nantes (658 A.D. Can. 12); the Synod of Aix la Chapelle in 789 (43) forbidding re-marriage in the lifetime of the other spouse. The Diet of Worms of 829 adopted the same position (Héfélé, v. 270–3); as also Friuli (796 A.D.), Canon 10; Paris (829 A.D.), Canon 2. The second Council of Toletana in 531 forbade the marriage of close relatives. The third Council of Paris (557 A.D.) forbade marriage with deceased wife's sister or brother's widow, following the Theodosian Code and the Council of Agde (505) and the first Council of Orleans (511).‡ On the other hand, the Council of Vannes (465 A.D.), Canon 2, expressly exempts from anathema those men who marry again after putting away their wives for adultery, and the Council of Agde (505 A.D.), Canon 25, while expressly allowing more than one cause of separation a vinculo, threatens with excommunication only those secular persons who repudiate their wives for the sake of remarriage "without establishing in " advance before the bishops of the Province the " causes of their divorce." In 692 Canon 87 of the Council in Trullo (692), following the 57th Canon of S. Basil, made second marriage after abandonment the ground of penance for four years; in 726 A.D. Gregory II., in a letter addressed to St. Boniface, permits a man to contract a new marriage because his wife by reason of infirmity is unable to perform her conjugal duty. This, however, is contrary to a previous decision of the same pontiff, and is suggested by Freisen§ to have been a permission in a case of a marriage void ab initio.

In 744 A.D. the Synod of Soissons (Canon IX.) again forbids divorce, except that it allows the husband to put away a guilty wife on scriptural grounds, but nothing is said as to remarriage (and see Epis. vii. cap. 12 of Pope Zacharie c. 743). The Synods of Verberie (752 A.D.) and Compiègne (757 A.D.),‖ however, proclaim again the more tolerant view. According to the former, the man whose wife plots against his life may put her away and take another spouse, but the divorced woman may not remarry¶; so also a man may form a new marriage if his wife refuse to accompany him on flight from danger, or if he has to follow his lord into another duchy or province, but the woman

* Geffcken, op. cit., 33. 34, 45, 44; Freisen, 778–80; Heusler, Institutionen, II., 291; Pollock and Maitland, History of English Law, II., 392, 2nd ed.; and the additional references given by Sir John Macdonell in his Memorandum: Schröder. 316; Löning, 617; Wessel's History of Roman Dutch Law, 467.

† Pertz. XV., 300; see Memorandum by Sir John Macdonell, entitled, "Some Notes on the Legal History of Divorce."

‡ Memorandum of Sir John Macdonell.

§ The various folk laws are reviewed by Meyrick, "Dictionary Christ. Ant.," II., 1111. The Codes are discussed by Freisen, "Geschichte des canonischen Eherechts," 776–8, and Geffeken, op. cit., 35, 39, 41. See lex Romana Visigothorum in the very learned edition of Gustavus Hänel (Leipzig, 1849), pp. 92–95. See also the laws derived from the sentences in Paul as to the right to kill a wife taken in adultery (p. 372). See also the Memorandum by Sir John Macdonell, p. 33.

‖ O'Curry, "Manners and Customs of the Ancient Irish," I. CLXXV.

¶ Pollock and Maitland, II., 393 (2nd ed.).

* Pollock and Maitland, II., 393; Theodore's "Penitential" (Haddan and Stubbs' "Councils," iii. 199–201); Holdsworth's "History of English Law," II., 78.

† See "Welsh Mediæval Law" (The Laws of Howel the Good), by A. W. Wade-Evans (pp. 235–240), ed. 1909.

‡ "Marriage with a wife's sister or a brother's wife was " held lawful until Constantine's law of A.D. 355 (Cod. " Theod. iii. 12)." Roby, vol. I., p. 129.

§ Op. cit., 331, ff., 782. See Sac. Conc., vol. VI., col. 1448.

‖ These dates are uncertain. See generally as to these Synods, Freisen, op. cit., 782-4; Geffcken, op. cit., 55–7; Esmein, op. cit., II., 64–9. A Canon (XV.) of 755 Concilium Vernense directs all marriages to be public.

¶ Si qua mulier mortem viri sui cum aliis hominibus consiliavit, et ipse vir ipsius hominem se defendendo occiderit, et hoc probare potest, ille vir potest ipsam uxorem dimittere, et si voluerit aliam accipiat (Concilium Vermeriense, Canones V. et VI.; 752 A.D. Pippinus Rex Franc., Sacrosancta Concilia, vol. VI., col. 1657; and Concilium Compendiense, Canons VIII. and X., 757 A.D.; Sac. Conc., vol. VI., col. 1696). The Statutes of St. Boniface (2nd collection, 35) appear to recognise divorce by mutual consent in two cases (Héfélé, vol. 4, pp. 491–2).

must remain unmarried while her husband lives. Again, if either party in the course of wedded life falls into slavery the other is free to marry again. The Council of Compiègne (Canon XIII.) has also a decree to the effect that where by agreement either party enters the cloister the other has the right of remarriage.

So far as England was specially concerned, the Council of Hertford (673), Canon 10, decreed that divorce should not be permitted except on the ground assigned by the Holy Evangel, but should a man "put "away the wife united to him in holy wedlock, and "if he wish to be rightly a Christian, let him not be "joined to another, but remain as he is or else be "reconciled to his wife."* This must be compared with the "Answers of Ecgbriht" (740 A.D.), question 13: "If a lawful marriage be dissolved, by consent of both "parties on account of the (temporary) impotency of "the man or woman, is it lawful for the sound party "(being incontinent) to marry, the impotent party "giving consent, and promising to live in perpetual "continency? The answer was doubtful, but probably "'Yes.'"† The Synodus Romana of 826 (Pope Engenius II.) allowed divorce and remarriage in the case of adultery (Can. 36, Sac. Conc. vol. viii. col. 112).

Nearly a century and a half (950) later the rule of indissolubility is proclaimed by the "Laws of the Northumbrian Priests" (54); the Penitential Canons of 963 (27) are equally strong, and subsequently the Council of Eanham (1009) and others decreed the indissolubility of marriage.‡

By the Ecclesiastical Laws of Howell the Good, of Wales (928),§ however, much more latitude is shown, and the curious regulations as to compensations and fines there laid down show the compromise which force of circumstances compelled the Church to make with the barbarians.

At the Synod of Bourges in 1031 it was declared (Canon 16) that there was no right of remarriage except in the case of adultery (Héfélé, vi., 272); at the Synod of Reims in 1049, this ground was abandoned (Canon 12, ibid., p. 309), but the Synod of Tours of 1060 (Canon IX., ibid., p. 401) seems to allow the Bishop to grant a divorce with a right of remarriage.

There is, moreover, a curious class of evidence as to actual practice in daily life, apart from the decrees laid down by Councils, in the Pœnitentials, namely, the Manuals designed for the guidance of priests in their daily ministrations. One of the most important of these, that by Theodore of Tarsus,‖ Archbishop of Canterbury and the President of the Council of Hertford, by which as has been seen the strict rule as to the indissolubility of marriage was announced, allows divorce on various grounds. Johnson comments on this inconsistency and says that perhaps in the Pœnitential Theodore speaks of what may be done without direct sin, while in the Canons of the Council the conduct that best becomes a Christian is explained. Theodore, like Chrysostom and Augustine, has two minds on the subject; indeed, like Ecgbriht, he was "very loose as to the point of matrimony."¶

According to Theodore's Pœnitentials in the case of adultery, the husband may repudiate the wife, and, if it be a dissolution of the first marriage, he may remarry at once; even the guilty wife may remarry after a penance of five years, but a wife is forbidden to send an adulterous husband away except to enter a monastery. Again, for malicious desertion on the part of the wife the man may contract a second marriage with the consent of the bishop, and a woman whose husband is in prison can remarry after a year if it be the first marriage that is dissolved. Remarriage is also allowed in case either party is captured in war, and amongst other grounds of divorce the right is given to anyone who has ignorantly married a person in servile condition. Divorce by mutual consent is also recognised. A number of other Pœnitentials containing similar regulations are also known.*

The practice of the Church in England even appears to have extended so far as to recognise divorce by mutual consent: legitimum conjugium non licet frangi sine consensu amborum (Pœnit., Theodore, II., c. 12, 7).

This evidence must be borne in mind, because, though the Pœnitentials have not necessarily official sanction, and though the statements in them were sometimes condemned by Councils, yet, as Sir John Macdonell has pointed out, they record the actual practice of the time; and show in a striking way that up to the 9th century the Church permitted in practice great laxity in divorce, in spite of the weighty Councils which decreed the indissolubility of marriage, and divorce a vinculo for adultery still is found in the late Eleventh Century.

With the growth of the Canon law† the various decrees of Councils and utterances of Popes and Fathers on the subject of marriage and divorce were being gradually worked into a system of jurisprudence and the more stringent rules laid down gradually assumed their final form, allowing divorce a mensâ et thoro, i.e., judicial separation only, for (1) adultery, (2) heresy and apostasy, and (3) cruelty, and abolishing, theoretically at least, all absolute divorce from the Western Church.

The Church also assumed control of divorce procedure which hitherto, it is important to bear in mind, had been a private transaction. It would seem by the 11th century that the Court of the Bishop was gradually becoming the ordinary tribunal for divorce cases.‡ "That eminently Christian king Cnut legislated about "marriage in an ecclesiastical spirit. The adulterous "wife, unless her offence be public, is to be handed "over to the bishop for judgment. The adulterous "husband is to be denied every Christian right until "he satisfied the bishop. The bishop is becoming "the judge of these sinners, and the judge who "punishes adultery must take cognizance of marriage."§ After William the Conqueror had separated the spiritual and lay courts the ultimate result was not in doubt; but there was no haste. In Henry I.'s time the King's Court had still some voice, and it was not until the middle of the 12th century that marriage and divorce were fully under the Canon law. Gratian and Peter Lombard, the masters of the Canon law, finally elaborated the strict ecclesiastical doctrine of divorce, and we see the system at work in England in Richard de Anesty's suit in 1143.

In practice it will be seen that under the Canon law marriages were still dissolved, and the method and subterfuge by which this was done will require to be considered at some length. Richard de Anesty's case in which "a marriage solemnly celebrated in church, a "marriage of which a child had been born, was set aside "as null in favour of an earlier marriage constituted "by a mere exchange of consenting words," proves this. First, it is to be observed that though, as has been stated, divorce a vinculo was eliminated from the law of the Western Church, the word "divorce" was still used in the Canons and in two different senses:

* Haddan and Stubbs, "Councils," III., 120-1. See also Johnson's English Canons, vol. I., p. 95.

† (Johnson, vol. I., p. 170; Latin text, Wilkins, vol. I., p. 82; Thorpe, p. 320). The Excerptions of Ecgbriht (111-130) are important. The excerption 122 apparently permits in the case of desertion by the wife the husband to remarry with the Bishop's consent after five or seven years.

‡ For details of the Canons of many of the Councils and observations thereon see Watkins, p. 364. 394. See also Lyndwood's Provinciale (ed. Oxford, 1679), lib. IV., tit. i., de Sponsalibus et Matrimonio (p. 270). Lyndwood, writing early in the 15th century, lays stress on the fact that marriage is a sacrament.

§ Haddan and Stubbs, op. cit., I., 246: Wade-Evans, op. cit., pp. 235-240

‖ This is contained in Haddan and Stubbs, op. cit., III., pp. 173-213.

¶ Johnson's English Canons, p. 171.

* References to them are given in Howard, vol. ii., 45. The material sentences of two books of the Pœnitential of Theodore will be found in Haddan and Stubbs (Councils, &c., vol. III., p. 199), who have taken their copy from the existing documents in the library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. Johnson also prints these passages (English Canons, Part I., p. 94).

† For an account of the growth of the Canon law generally, see Maitland's article in "The Encyclopædia of the Laws of England," II., 541; the evidence of Sir Frederick Pollock; and Pollock and Maitland's History of English Law.

‡ Pollock and Maitland, II., 367 (2nd ed.); Cnut, II., 53. 54.

§ Geffcken, op. cit., 77-79. Pollock and Maitland ("History of English Law," II., 367) think that the complete ecclesiastical jurisdiction was established in England about the middle of the 12th century.

(1) It was used to designate the judicial declaration of nullity of a marriage which, on account of some impediment, was void or voidable from the beginning.* (2) It was used to designate the "judicial separation" for the three causes above mentioned.†

With regard to the theoretical prohibition of all divorce a vinculo by the Canon law, two exceptions always existed. First, if a Christian convert is abandoned by his partner, he is allowed to contract a second marriage‡; and secondly, the theory is evolved that an unconsummated marriage may be dissolved through papal dispensation, or, ipso facto, by taking Orders.§ But it was through the abuse of the power to dissolve a marriage on account of some supposed invalidity for consanguinity or affinity that the doctrine of indissolubility was evaded by those who were in a position to do so. Thus throughout the Middle Ages from the time of Gratian there existed a very wide liberty of divorce in our modern sense. Moreover, it must be noticed that, at any rate till the middle of the fourteenth century, the children of a divorced pair could be and frequently were held to be legitimate and capable of succeeding to land.‖

Hence in pre-Reformation times there was in fact the exact modern position: A marries B and has issue; B is divorced and A remarries and has children in the lifetime of B. The issue of both marriages are legitimate. The following cases illustrate the mediæval position. Joan Cryspyn, seised in her own right of certain lands, had two children, Roger and Joan. Roger married Margaret and had a son, Thomas. Five years later a divorce from Roger "was celebrated at the suit of the said Margaret," and then Roger died in the lifetime of his mother. His sister Joan, the wife of Walter de Badeston, on the death of her mother claimed the lands, alleging that Thomas in consequence of the divorce was a bastard. The question was referred to a jury and inquisition made. On 25th October 1320 the Bishop of Bath and Wells in answer to a writ declared that Thomas "was and is the lawful son of the said Roger" and not a bastard.¶

Hence the divorce, though made on the basis of nullity, had the precise effect of a modern divorce. Another case of about the same date illustrates this. Margaret, the daughter of John de Wygeton, claimed her dead father's lands as next heir. Other persons claimed to be next heirs because "a divorce was "pronounced between the said John and Denise his "wife, mother of the said Margaret, because of her "pre-contract with John Paynel." Hence it was argued at the inquisition that Margaret was a bastard. In answer to a writ, the Bishop of London held (on St. John Baptist's Day 1320) that Margaret was the lawful daughter of the said John. "This record was "delivered into the Chancery at Westminster July 24th "in the 14th year (of Edward II.) by the hands of Sir "Henry de Scrop, Chief Justice." Here we have a case in which marriage was held null and void because of a previous contract of marriage, and yet the issue of the second marriage was held legitimate for the purpose of succession to land. No modern State has gone so far as this, even in America. But there was no certainty in the administration of the law. Thus in 1268 Walter de Beauchamp married, in the diocese of Worcester, Alice de Tovy, who was related to him within the fourth degree of consanguinity. Bishop Giffard held that, since at the date of the contract the parties were ignorant of the impediment, the marriage was valid, and the issue legitimate.*

Canon II. of Hubert Walter's Canons, passed at Westminster in the year 1200, shows how narrow the compass of legal marriage was becoming. It says: "Let "not a man contract with a relation of his former wife, "nor a woman with a relation of her former husband; "nor a godson with a daughter of the baptizer, or of "the godfather, whether born before or after."†

The age, indeed, was comparable with the worst Roman period. Indeed in the days of Edward II., a satirist describes the "prodigious traffic" in divorces; any husband having "selver among the clerkes to send" could rid himself of his wife, "bringing her to the constery" with two false witnesses to support his declaration.‡ Sir Frederick Pollock and Professor Maitland, in their History of English Law, state that "spouses who had quarrelled began to investigate their "pedigrees and were unlucky if they could discover "no impedimentum dirimens" which would invalidate the marriage;§ and Thwing writes, "The canons "prescribing the prohibited degrees of relationship "were marvels of ingenuity. Spiritual relationships, "those gained in baptism, were recognised no less than "natural relationships, and equally with them served as "barriers to legal marriage.‖ Marriage was prohibited "within seven degrees of relationship and affinity; "and none but the astutest students of the law were "able to unravel so complicated a system. The "annulling of marriages, which had been contracted "within the prohibited degrees, became a flourishing "business of the Church. No exercise of its power "yielded more money, or caused more scandal. So "tangled was the casuistry respecting marriage at the "beginning of the 16th century, that it might be said "that, for a sufficient consideration, a canonical flaw "could be found in almost any marriage."¶

It has, however, to be remembered that, if the marriage though bad was not in fact dissolved, the issue were legitimate. After the Reformation this principle was acted upon, and in the reign of James I. it was held by the courts that the nullity action must be brought in the joint lives of the spouses. This law made the marriage with a deceased wife's sister possible till the passing of Lord Lyndhurst's Act of 1835. That Act abolished voidable marriages in England and Ireland. Such marriages were never recognised in Scotland.

The Council of Trent (1545 to 1563) finally settled the Canon Law of Divorce; and while preserving the essential features of that law abolished in a large measure from the continent of Europe the scandal of the clandestine marriage or pre-contract as a ground of divorce.

One incident at the Council requires separate mention. The Greek Church (separated finally from the Western in 1054, just after the completion of the Canon Law) has always permitted divorce for the causes with modifications laid down by the Edict of Theodosius II. and Valentinian in 449. The Council of Trent, out of respect, as it is stated, to the views of Ambrose and other Greek Fathers, modified the anathema pronounced against those who taught that marriage could be dissolved and limited, such pronouncement being made only against those who, like the Lutherans, maintained that the Church erred in teaching that marriage could not be dissolved. It should be stated that this modification was made at the instances of the Envoys of Venice, which at that time ruled islands in the Adriatic and Mediterranean inhabited by Greek Christians who had contracted

* See Kenn's case, 7, Co. Rep. 42*b* (1607).

† See as to this Esmein, op. cit., II., 73, 85–9. We find this as late as the fifteenth century. In 1433 we read (in the Oratio Joannis de Ragusio O.P. de Communione sub utraque specie: Sacrasancta Concilia, vol. XII. 1152*b*), after a reference to the phrase "Nisi ob causam fornicationis," this passage: "Et nihilo minus sancta ecclesia catholica non solum ex hac "causa, sed ex pluribus aliis permittit et facit rationabiliter "divortia fieri, ut patet infrigidis et maleficiatis, de affinibus, "ex causis hæresis, et pluribus aliis causis."

‡ Decret. Grat. II. caus. XVIII. qu. 2 C. 2; and Decretals IV. 19. de divortiis. c. 7. (Howard, vol. ii., 54.)

§ See as to this, Freisen, op. cit., 826.

‖ See Pollock and Maitland, vol. II., pp. 374–7.

¶ See Calendar of Inquisitions. Rolls series (233), 14 Edw. II.

 Inquisitions: Rolls Series (531) 8 Edw. II. Cf. the writ Cui ante Divortium, which when issued by the heir assumed the legitimacy of the issue of the marriage, (See Rastall's Entries.)

* See Worcester Episcopal Registers (1268–1301, vol. i., p. CXXXIV., J. W. Willis Bund).

† Johnson's English Canons, vol. II., p. 91.

‡ Percy Society's Publication. (Howard, vol. ii,, 58.)

§ Op. cit., II., 393., note 5. As instances of the mediæval divorces, see—

(1) Exch. King's Remembrancer, bundle 7/4, anno 1333.
(2) Chancery Miscellanea. Bundle 15, file 4, &c.

‖ As we have seen above, the conception of spiritual affinity (Cognatio spiritualis) was introduced (Cod. V. 4. 26) by Justinian and adopted by the Church.

¶ Thwing, C. F. and C. F. B., "The Family," 83. For an instance of a so-called divorce by writ and inquisition in the year 1495–6, see the case of Margery Wellesbourne (Calendar of Inquisitions, Hen. VII. vol. I., pp. 426–7, Rolls series).

 See Howard, vol. II., pp. 94–6. Fraser on Husband and Wife according to the Law of Scotland. 50.

second marriages after divorce, in accordance with the law of their Church.*

The position taken by the Roman Catholic Church at the present day is thus stated by Monsignor Moyes, who gave evidence before the Royal Commission at the request of the Archbishop of Westminster:—

"The whole doctrine of the Catholic Church to which I belong may therefore be further summarised in the three following statements. 1. Christian marriage ratified and consummated is one and indissoluble except by the death of one or other of the parties. 2. Christian marriage, ratified verbally, but not consummated, may be dissolved by Church authority. 3. Non-Christian marriage is dissoluble in cases in which one of the parties is converted and the other refuses to dwell peacefully with the convert."†

The Abolition of Papal Authority in England.—The series of Statutes in the reign of Henry VIII. that abolished Papal appellate authority in England in all matters, including all questions of marriage and divorce, forms an important stage in the history of divorce in England, and it is therefore desirable to set out somewhat fully the Statutes in question. The first Act, that of 1532–3 (24 Hen. VIII. c. 12, which is still in force), provides that appeals to Rome in "causes testamentarie, Causes of Matrimony, and Divorces" should be within the King's authority and supplies the appellate machinery. This was followed by an Act of 1553–4 (25 Hen. VIII. c. 19, which is still in force) inter alia providing that there should be no appeals to Rome, and that appeals in "causes of matrimonye" should be made in accordance with the Act of 1532. A further Act of 1533–4 (25 Hen. VIII. c. 21, which is still in force) forbids any person to sue for dispensations or licences from the Pope, and substitutes the Archbishop of Canterbury for "causes not being "contrary or repugnant to the holy scriptures and "lawe of God," and a further statute of the same year (25 Hen. VIII. c. 22) regulating the succession to the Crown, in its third section gives a list of the "degrees of mariage prohibited by God's lawes."

The Act 25 Hen. VIII., c. 19 (s. 2), which abolished appeals to Rome, provided machinery for a revision of the existing Canon Law. Acts of 1535–6 (27 Hen. VIII. c. 15) and 1549 (3 & 4 Edw. VI. c. 11) provided commissions to examine the canons in accordance with the Act of 1533–4, and the last of these commissions revised or actually produced the draft code of law known as the "Reformatio Legum Ecclesiasticarum." In 1540 the Marriage Act (32 Hen. VIII. c. 38) inter alia abolished the existing law of pre-contracts and declared that consummated marriages between lawful persons were indissoluble notwithstanding any unconsummated pre-contract of matrimony. The law of pre-contracts was revived by an Act of 1548 (2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 23, which is still in force), and was only abolished (if it is abolished) by implication by Lord Hardwicke's Act in 1753 (26 Geo. II. c. 33).

The pre-contract survives in Scotland where the principles of the Canon Law are still in force, "subject "only to such modifications as it has undergone from "time to time by the application of the rules of "evidence established in that country, and the course "of judicial decisions,"‡ and subject to the provisions of the Scottish Marriage Act of 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 96), making it necessary to the validity of the contract that one of the parties have been resident in Scotland at least 21 days next preceding the ceremony. Subject to this rule, there are three kinds of marriage still recognised in Scotland: (1) Regular marriages before a minister according to custom or Statute and according to the forms for a civil marriage, (2) the marriage per verba de praesenti, and (3) the marriage per verba de futuro, subsequente copulâ. In this last case the contract must be written or proved by confession on oath. After the Reformation the Commissary Court—representing the old Ecclesiastical Courts—without any statutory authority, began to grant divorces a vinculo, and the right to do this was recognised by Statute in 1563. The statutory right to divorce for desertion (which, however, professed only to declare a common law right) followed in 1573.§

The following are the Statutes of the reigns of Henry VIII. and Edward VI.:—

The Statute of 1532–3 (24 Henry VIII. c. 12) recites that appeals to Rome in "Causes testamentarie, Causes of Matrimony and Divorces," &c. having caused great trouble and cost, henceforward all causes determinable by any spiritual jurisdiction shall be adjudged within the King's authority (s. 1). Appeals from the archdeacon or his official shall be to the Bishop diocesan of the See. If the case is begun before the Bishop, then the appeal is to the Archbishop of the Province. If the case is begun before the Archdeacon, or the Archbishop, or his commissory, the appeal is to the Court of Arches or audience of the Archbishop and thence finally to the Archbishop. If the case is begun before the Archbishop there is no appeal. In cases touching the King there is a final appeal to the spiritual prelates, abbots, and priors of the Upper House of Convocation (s. 3).

The Act of 1533–4 (25 Hen. VIII. c. 19) is entitled "The submission of the clergie to the Kynges Majestie." It recites that the clergy have acknowledged that the convocations can only be assembled by the King's writ, and can only promulgate canons, &c. by the King's assent and authority; and that existing canons, &c. should be submitted to the judgment of the King and 16 from the Houses of Parliament with 16 of the clergy all to be chosen by the King, who should abolish such as they thought proper. The Act goes on to make the necessary statutory provision for this and provides that no canon shall be put into execution which is contrary to the prerogative or the law of the realm. The Act further provides that there shall be no appeals to Rome, and that appeals in "causes of matrimonie," &c. shall be made in accordance with Statute 24 Hen. VIII. c. 12. All appeals from the Archbishop's court and certain other courts are to be made into the Court of Chancery. Section 7 of this Act runs as follows:—

> "Provided also, that such canons, constitutions, ordinances, and Synodals provincial being already made, which be not contrariant or repugnant to the laws, statutes, and customs of this realm, nor to the damage or hurt of the King's Prerogative Royal shall now still be used and executed as they were afore the making of this Act, till such time as they be viewed, searched, or otherwise ordered and determined by the said two and thirty persons, or the more part of them, according to the form tenor and effect of this present Act."*

A further Statute of the same year (25 Hen. VIII. c. 21) forbids any person to sue for dispensation or licence to the Pope and substitutes the Archbishop of Canterbury for the Pope "for causes not being contrary "or repugnant to the Holy Scriptures and lawes of "God," (s. 2) provided that in "causes unwonte" dispensations shall require the approbation of the King or his council.

Section 4 provides that "all children procreated "after solemnization of any marriages to be had or "done by virtue of such licences or dispensations shall "be admitted, reputed, and taken legitimate in all "courts, as well spiritual as temporal," with full power of inheritance.

A third Statute of 1533 (25 Hen. VIII. c. 22) goes on to give (section 2) a list of "the degrees of mariage prohibited by God's lawes." Persons can have no dispensation to marry within the degrees, and if any are already married they shall be separated "from the bondes of suche unlawfull mariage by sentence of the ordinary."

An Act of 1535–6 (27 Hen. VIII. c. 15) gives the King power to name 32 persons (16 spiritual and 16 temporal) to examine the canons and constitutions according to the Statute 25 Hen. VIII. c. 19. This was repealed by an Act of 1543–4 (35 Hen. VIII. c. 16), by which the King was given authority during his life to name two and thirty persons, viz., sixteen spiritual and sixteen temporal, to examine all canons, constitutions, and ordnances, Principal and Synodal, and to establish all such laws ecclesiastical as should be thought by the King and them convenient to be used in all Spiritual Courts. In pursuance of a third Act on the subject passed in 1549–50 (3 & 4 Edw. VI.

---

* See Sarpi's History of the Council of Trent (Courayer's translation, Vol. II., 562–3).

† Q. 22,921.

‡ Hammick. 221. Fraser on Husband and Wife according to the Law of Scotland (322, 358, 360).

§ Lord Salvesen's evidence (Q. 6327, &c.).

* This Act was repealed by 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 8 and revived by 1 Eliz. c. 1, s. 2.

c. 11) the commission was appointed which issued the Reformatio Legum Ecclesiasticarum, a revised version of the Code (not now extant) prepared under the Act of 1543. The Reformatio Legum is dealt with at length by Sir Lewis Dibdin in the paper that he has prepared on the subject for this Commission.

In 1540 (32 Hen. VIII. c. 38) was passed the Act "For marriages to stand notwithstanding pre-contracts." The preamble runs as follows:—

> "Whereas heretofore the usurped power of the Bishop of Rome hath always intangled and troubled the mere jurisdiction and regal power of this realm of England, and also unquieted much the subjects of the same, by his usurped power in them, as by making that unlawful which by God's word is lawful, both in marriage, and other things, as hereafter shall appear at more length; and till now of late in our Sovereign Lord's time, which is otherwise by learning taught than his predecessors in times past of long time have been, hath so continued the same, whereof yet some sparks be left, which hereafter might kindle a greater fire, and so remaining, his Power not to seem utterly extinct.
>
> "II. Therefore it is thought most convenient to the King's Highness, His Lords Spiritual and Temporal, with the Commons of this realm, assembled in this present Parliament, that two things specially for this time be with Diligence provided for, whereby many inconveniences have ensued, and many more else might ensue and follow."

The Act goes on to say that many marriages that were apparently perfect, valid, and blessed with children—

> "have nevertheless, by an unjust law of the Bishop of Rome, which is, that upon pretence of a former contract made, and not consummate by carnal copulation (for proof whereof two witnesses by that law were only required) been divorced and separate, contrary to God's law and so the true matrimony, both solemnized in the face of the Church, and consummate with bodily knowledge, and confirmed also with the fruit of children had between them, clearly frustrate and dissolved."

The Act further attacks the Roman system of prohibitions and dispensations ("for their lucre by that Court invented") in respect to kindred and affinity since it had led to discord among married persons, "and many just marriages brought in doubt "and danger of undoing, and also many times undone, "and lawful heirs disherited," and—

> "marriages have been brought into such an incertainty thereby, that no marriage could be so surely knit and bounden, but that it should lie in either of the parties' power and arbiter, casting away the fear of God, by means and compasses to prove a pre-contract, a kindred and alliance or a carnal knowledge, to defeat the same, and so under the pretence of these allegations afore rehearsed, to live all the days of their lives in detestable adultery, to the utter destruction of their own souls, and the provocation of the terrible wrath of God upon the places where such abominations were suffered and used.
>
> "Be it therefore enacted . . . . that . . . all and every such marriages as within this Church of England shall be contracted between lawful persons (as by this Act we declare all persons to be lawful, that be not prohibited by God's law to marry), such marriages being contract and solemnized in the face of the Church, and consummate with bodily knowledge, or fruit of children or child being had therein between the parties so married, shall be . . . . deemed judged and taken to be lawful, good, just and indissoluble, notwithstanding any pre-contract or pre-contracts of matrimony not consummate with bodily knowledge, which either of the parties so married, or both shall have made with any other person or persons before the time of contracting that marriage which is solemnized and consummate, or whereof such fruit is ensued, or may ensue, as afore; and notwithstanding any . . dispensation, prescription, law, or other thing granted or confirmed by Act or otherwise; and that no reservation or prohibition, God's law except, shall trouble or impeach any marriage without the Levitical degrees; and that no person of what estate degree or condition soever he or she be, shall . . . be admitted in any of the Spiritual Courts within this the King's realm, or any his Grace's other lands and dominions, to any process, plea or allegation, contrary to this foresaid Act."

This Act "concerning pre-contracts and degrees of consanguinite" was repealed by 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 23. and 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 8. s. 4. and in part revived by 1 Eliz. c. 1. s. 3. as to so much as was not repealed by 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 23. Statute 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 23. s. 2 repealed so much of Statute 32 Hen. VIII. c. 38 as made indissoluble a consummated marriage which has been solemnized in the Church. In fact, the Act of 1548, in combination with 1 Eliz. c. 1. s. 3, restored the whole doctrine of pre-contracts and directed the ecclesiastical courts to enforce them. Lord Hardwicke's Act of 1753 (26 Geo. 2. c. 33) apparently abolished by implication this doctrine of pre-contracts in England, but, as we have seen, it still survives in Scotland if followed by consummation.

The Survival of the Law of Nullity.—At this point it will be convenient to set out Sir Edward Coke's view of the effect of the Statute of 1540 (32 Hen. VIII. c. 38) on the law of marriage.

In his notes upon Littleton (235*a*) Coke has the following passage:—

> "There bee two kinde of divorces, viz., one a vinculo matrimonii, and the other a mensâ et thoro. . . . Divorces a vinculo matrimonii are these: causa precontractus, causa metus, causa impotentiæ seu frigiditatis, causa affinitatis, causa consanguinitatis, &c. . . . . It is further to be understood, that many divorces that were of force by the canon law when Littleton wrote, are not at this day in force; for by the Statute of 32 Hen. VIII. ca. 38 it is declared that all persons be lawfull (that is, may lawfully marry) that be not prohibited by God's law to marry, that is to say, that be not prohibited by the Leviticall degrees."
>
> "Sir Edward Coke also in his Institutes (II. 683) gives us 'an exposition upon the Statute ' of 32 Hen. VIII. cap. 38. concerning what ' Marriages be lawful, and what not.' He says that since the Act various causes of nullity have disappeared, such as:—
>
> (1) Fornication before marriage with kindred of the wife (Chadworth's case, 30 Edw. I.).
>
> (2) Godfather to cousin of wife or godmother to cousin of husband.
>
> "Divorces causa conpaternitatis et commaternitatis (called in 1 & 2 P. and M. c. 8 cognatio spiritualis).
>
> (3) Causa professionis.
>
> (4) Causa cognationis legalis, i.e., jure adoptionis et sic de similibus.
>
> (5) Causa præcontractus: but this was restored as a cause for nullity by 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 23 and 1 Eliz. c. 1."

Coke then discussed the legality of the marriage of ecclesiastical persons and holds that the Statutes 2 Edw. VI. c. 2 and 5 Edw. VI. c. 12 making the marriages of such persons lawful are still in force. Before the Reformation the marriage of a priest was voidable causa professionis, but that of a monk or nun was absolutely void on account of the vow of chastity.

It is interesting to compare with this view the view of the law contained in an undated and unprinted paper of the reign of Queen Elizabeth at the Record Office.* The paper which is entitled "Devorce" deals with the question of the wife's property after divorce, and concludes with the following statement as to causes:—

> "Devorce propter causam castitatis. Roe in le cace.

* State Papers, Domestic Series. Elizabeth, vol. 288. Undated papers, No. 10.

"Devorce propter rixa et jurgia. Roe in le cace de Bek et sa feme.

"Devorce a mensâ et thoro propter fornicationem. Roe in le cace W. Shiard et sa feme.

"Devorce propter pre-contract.

"Devorce propter consanguinity."

The instances of grounds for nullity of marriage given by this anonymous writer and by Sir Edward Coke are important as being the sources of the voidable marriages that existed in English law until 1835. But they also make it necessary to lay stress on the fact that the mediæval system of divorce, the so-called nullity divorce which, as we have seen, was not inconsistent with the legitimacy of the first as well as the second family, long survived the Reformation. This becomes clear when the Visitation articles and Injunctions from 1547 onwards are examined. The following articles are salient but not exhaustive examples of the position between 1547 and 1569. Nor did this system end with the last year mentioned as will appear from the instance of a divorce and remarriage in 1576 given below after the following articles:—*

1. Royal Articles of Edward VI., 1547:—

(61) Whether you know any to be married within the degrees prohibited by the law of God; or that be separated and divorced without any just cause, approved by the law of God. And whether any such have married again.

(This apparently refers to the Act of 1533 prohibiting marriages within the degrees named in Leviticus and forbidding dispensations within these degrees.)

2. Archbishop Cranmer's Articles for Canterbury Diocese (1548). Art. 81 (the same as the article above of 1547).

3. Queen Mary's Articles (1554):—

(9) Item that every bishop, and all other persons aforesaid, do foresee that they suffer not any religious man having solemnly professed chastity, to continue with his woman or wife, but that all such persons, after deprivation of their benefice or ecclesiastical promotion, be divorced, every one from his said woman, and due punishment otherwise taken for the offence therein.

4. Cardinal Pole's Articles for Canterbury Diocese (1557):—

(Art. 17.) Item Whether any of them (priests) that were under the pretence of lawful matrimony, married and now reconciled, do privily resort to their pretensed wives, or that the said women do privily resort unto them?

5. Interrogatories of 1560 (no Ordinary named):—

(Art. 13.) Whether that any minister or priest, in the time of trouble, hath divorced himself from his wife; and whether his wife hath married to another man since, or no?

6. Archbishop Parker's Diocesan Articles of 1560 and 1563. Parker's Articles of 1560 asked:—

(Art. 21.) Item Whether there be any in these parts that have married within degrees of affinity or consanguinity, by the laws of God forbidden; any man that hath two wives, any woman that hath two husbands (the Articles of 1563 add here, "any that being divorced or separated aside have married again"); any married that have made pre-contracts; any that have made privy or secret contracts; any that have married without banns thrice solemnly asked; any couples married that live not together, but slanderously live apart; any that have married in times by the laws prohibited, or out of the parish church where they ought to have the same solemnized.

7. Guest's Articles for Rochester Diocese, 1565:—

(Art. 11.) Item Whether ye know any to be married within the degrees of affinity or consanguinity exhibited by the laws of God or that be separated or divorced without the degrees prohibited in the laws of God and whether any such have married again.

8. Parkhurst's Injunctions for Norwich Diocese, 1569:—

(Art. 42.) Whether there be any that hath two wives, or woman that hath two husbands, any married where a pre-contract was to any other, any divorced, or otherwise separated, that married again.

It will be noticed that the first and second of these articles speak of separation or divorce "without a just cause approved by the law of God," and ask if any persons so divorced have married again; that the third article separates a married religious; that the fourth declares by the use of the word "pretensed" that the marriage of priests is a nullity; that the sixth deals in detail with the causes of double marriages. The article of 1565 institutes an inquiry into cases of divorce where there has been no nullity, while that of 1569 again deals with the question of double marriages. It is plain that the pre-Reformation practice had led to a great confusion and that in the second half of the sixteenth century there were grave doubts as to what marriages were binding and what were not binding. The close inquiries made by the bishops and the Crown in all parts of England show that the problem was one of serious difficulty in the daily life of the people. It is clear, moreover, that in certain cases—and it seems possible that these were not only nullity cases—the Church Courts formally divorced married couples a vinculo.

The following instance recorded in the register of S. Michael le Belfrey York* is of some importance. First we have in the Wedding Book the following entry:—

"1568. Rychard Cowpland and Bettris Atkinson, the xvj day of Januarie Devorsed by order of lawe, 1576, in the deane and chapt'r courte of the Cathedrall church of Yorke; me Rob'to Burland occulat. teste hmo repudii."

This is followed by an entry as to the remarriage of Beatrix:—

"Thomas Cooke s'vaunte to Mr. Anthony Rookbye. and Beatrix atkinson als Couplande weare maryed together in this p'ish church at lawfull tyme of the day, the bannes first lawfully asked the xxvij th day of January, 1576, the said beatrix being first devorced from Richard couplande, by lawe, and lycensed to marye."

The wife apparently had issue by both marriages (Kateren, christened April 2nd, 1574; and Susane, christened 14th June 1577; Frances, christened 27th July 1578). Beatrix died in June 1619. It is not clear on what ground the second marriage was allowed, though the fact that there were two families by marriages solemnized in church would seem to suggest two good marriages. If this was not a divorce a vinculo after a lawful marriage then it must have been an instance of nullity. In considering the nature of divorce it is necessary to keep in mind the fact that the mediæval doctrine of nullity, which had such a wide area of operation before 1535, did not disappear with the Reformation, but existed for some time side by side with the system of parliamentary divorce, and apparently had a far wider vogue than the modern doctrine of nullity. But on the whole the York case of 1576, in view of the facts that the parties were apparently in a humble position, and that the wife had a family by each husband, almost seems to be a case of divorce a vinculo. This view is strengthened by a case, the particulars of which appears in the Register (Marriage) of Christchurch, Newgate, Street (1538–1754). It is the entry of a marriage solemnized on November 2nd, 1579, and runs as follows†:—

"John Skynner and Margery Conaway from St. Andrewes in the Wardrap, and having another wyf alive, did penance at Poles Crosse."

This entry seems to suggest that the Church performed the second marriage with full knowledge of a

* See Visitation Articles and Injunctions of the Period of the Reformation. Edited by G. Walter-Howard Frere (1910).

* Full particulars of which have been supplied by the vicar, the Rev. George H. Stock; the text is also printed in the publications of the Yorkshire Register Society, and this particular entry has appeared in Notes and Queries for March 25, 1911. See also Notes and Queries for June 17, 1911, and Athenæum, May 27, 1911, as to the second marriage of John Stawell in 1572.

† Harleian Society Registers, vol. 21, p. 203.

previous marriage, and imposed penance, but did not refuse to marry the parties.

In this period such cases were not uncommon, if we may judge from register entries, in which a man married "the former wife" of another man (this can hardly mean "widow," as the word "widow" is frequently used on the same page as the phrase "the former wife"). Such cases suggest a great confusion in practice between the years 1550 and 1660. To this confusion later reference will be made. It will, however, be convenient to add in this place an item of evidence as to the practice of marriage after divorce in Elizabethan times; this is an attack on the existing practice by Edmund Bunney (1540–1612) in the year 1595. In the year 1610 he issued from Oxford—and a second edition followed in 1613—"a "Treatise of divorce and marrying again, that there "is no sufficient warrant to do so." He was violently opposed to any such practice, and therefore is a credible witness of the practice. The book is dedicated to the Archbishop of Canterbury. In the preface dated from Bolton—Derby, December 13, 1595—he says: "6. Hereupon, when time was, in a Sermon I "briefly noted, and the present occasion did so require, "that the libertie, that in these our daies many doe "take of divorcing their wives for adulterie and "marrying of others, had not such warrant in the "worde of God as they thought that it had." The "Advertisement to the Reader" gives certain instances and a remarkable example of the views of those in high places. It says that a certain "honourable personage, who then was in chiefe place for "the execution of justice here, said the laws of "our country allowed of it, and was contradicted by "some of the council." In view of such a difference of opinion, the ignorant laity and even some church courts might well have regarded divorce a vinculo as legal. Bunney was not the only writer. John Reynolds, in 1610, appeared (in a second edition) on the other side, and issued a "defence" of great learning "of the judgment of the Reformed Churches, "that a man may lawfullie not only put away his wife "for adulterie, but also marrie another." It has to be remembered in considering the English practice and the possibility of the church courts granting divorces a vinculo without statutory authority that this actually happened at this very time in Scotland. Lord Salvesen in his evidence states that divorce a vinculo for adultery was introduced after the Reformation partly by the Scottish courts "and by "public opinion treating the bar which previously "existed to the dissolution of marriage as non-exis"tent, in consequence of the triumph of the re"formed principles."* This practice was recognised by Statute in 1563 as an existing institution. In England what seems like a similar practice was gradually suppressed.

The Reformers and Divorce.—With the Reformation the rejection by Protestants of the sacramental theory of marriage brought about a great change in the prevailing ideas upon the subject of divorce.

The charges against the Church which we find among the writings of the Reformers were: (1) the fostering of vice by the profession of a too severe doctrine of indissolubility; and (2) the abuse of a jurisdiction exercised by the Church with regard to the annulment of marriages on the ground of having been contracted within so-called forbidden degrees, the effect of which was to open for the rich and powerful an easy door to divorce.†

The Reformers were not, however, by any means agreed upon the remedy for this state of things. It is necessary to consider the views of some of the leading continental Protestants, then those of English birth, which will lead to the discussion of the futile attempt which was made at legislation; some leading cases which arose during the 16th and 17th centuries; and the rise of the practice of private Acts of Parliament, which remained the only means of absolute divorce in England down to 1857.

The Protestant doctrine of divorce was shaped, like the Protestant doctrine of marriage, mainly by Luther. He admitted divorce a vinculo upon the two grounds only of adultery and desertion; he also sanctioned temporary separations. The theologians, Brenz, Bugenhagen, Chemnitz, Calvin, and Beza, with the jurists, Kling, Beust, and Schneidewin, all agree with him that absolute divorce should be granted for adultery, but some, like Chemnitz, would discriminate against the woman; malicious desertion is also generally admitted as a cause for dissolution.*

On the other hand, Erasmus, Zwingli, and Bullinger, with Melancthon and others, favoured the more liberal view. All accept the two grounds mentioned, and each admits several other grounds. Zwingli and Bullinger argue that in admitting adultery as a cause of divorce the Scriptures sanction as such all equal or graver offences†; and, according to the Zurich Marriage Ordinance of 1525, "adultery, malicious "desertion, and plotting against the life of a consort "are not regarded as the only causes, but rather as the "standard causes of divorce, and to the judge it is left "to decide what others shall be put by their side. And "not only this, but cruelty, madness, leprosy, are "mentioned as causes which the judge can take into "account."‡ Lambert, of Avignon, holds that when a wife is forced by intolerable suffering to leave the husband who mistreats her, this should be counted as repudiation by the man and not as desertion by the woman.

With no exception remarriage is allowed to the innocent party, but with regard to the guilty party the Protestant reformers were not agreed, and several advocate the summary solution to the question by putting him or her to death.§ The legislation in Protestant countries on the Continent followed in the main the stricter view, allowing divorce usually only for adultery and desertion, but in some instances only for adultery.‖

The English reformers accept the stricter doctrine of the continental theologians above cited, but most of them agree that marriage should be absolutely dissolved for adultery;¶ that this should carry with it the right of remarriage, at least for the innocent party; and that "judicial separation" should be abolished. The following opinions quoted by Sir John Macdonell in his memorandum may be referred to:—Henry Smith, "Preparative to Marriage," 1591: "Divorcement, "which is the rod of marriage, and divideth them which "were one flesh, as if the bodie and soul were parted "asunder. But because all performe not wedlocke "vowes, therefore He which appointed marriage hath "appointed divorcement, as it were, taking our privi"ledge from us when we abuse it. . . . The "disease of marriage is adultery, and the medicine "thereof is divorcement. Thus, He which made mar"riage did not make it inseparable."

Tyndale, in his "Exposition and Notes," says: "If "he may not find in his heart (to forgive his wife) "he is free no donbt to take another, "while the law interpreteth her dead; for her sin "ought of no right to bind him."

Hooper's opinion is thus expressed: "Thou seest that "the Lord (Matthew, v. 19) giveth licence to divorce for "adultery, and marry again, one soul for infidelity."

Milton's views on the subject are well known, and the famous theologian, Martin Bucer, of Strassburg, who, as a professor at Cambridge, may perhaps be treated as a representative of English Protestant thought, dedicated a book on divorce to Edward VI., in which he advocated an even more liberal system. A translation of this work by Milton is to be found in Milton's Prose Works.

* Lord Salvesen's evidence, Q. 6327.

† Howard, II., 60, 61, where he quotes from "The Judgment of Martin Bucer" in Milton's "Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce," Prose Works.

* The references are given in Howard, op. cit., vol. ii., 62 ff., and see also the Memorandum by Sir John Macdonell, p. 34.

† He puts the question, "What," &c. (Werke, VI., 516). Evidence, p. 34.

‡ For Ordinance, see Richter, "Beiträge," 6, 7. Howard, op. cit., 64, 65.

§ Richter, op. cit., 45, 46.

‖ References to such legislation are given in Howard, op. cit., 67, 68.

¶ John Howson (1557?—1632, Bishop of Durham), in 1602, however, issued from Oxford a powerful plea for absolute indissolubility, except in case of adultery, entitled "Uxore "dimissa propter fornicationem aliam non licet superin"ducere" (Copy at Middle Temple Library), and argues that it is not lawful for a divorced wife to remarry. This seems to suggest that the Bishop was attacking an existing practice.

THE REFORMATIO LEGUM ECCLESIASTICARUM AND THE PRACTICE OF DIVORCE, 1550–1600.

Of more importance, perhaps, than the views of these learned persons are the positive recommendations of the commission appointed under the provisions of 3 & 4 Edward VI. cap. 11 to examine the Canons, Constitutions, and Ordinances, with a view of seeing what ought to be retained. The result of the labours of this commission, which was presided over by Archbishop Cranmer, and included Peter Martyr amongst its members, was a draft code, entitled "Reformatio Legum Ecclesiasticarum." This provided amongst many other things, that absolute divorce should be permitted in cases of adultery, desertion after two years, long absence, and "the constant perverseness or fierceness of a husband to his wife." It also proposed that separation a mensâ et thoro should be abolished, and provided that no divorce should be allowed without the sentence of an ecclesiastical court. This code never became law. But, whatever the cause, the document remains, in Dr. Cardwell's words, "the mature sentiments of Archbishop Cranmer on the avowed constitution of the Church of England at that period"; and has been regarded by some as a statement of what, in the official view of a body of opinion in the Church in England at that time, ought to have been the law on the subject of divorce. On the other hand, Sir Lewis Dibdin, in the memorandum that he has presented to the Royal Commission, says, "the conclusion seems to me to be inevitable that the Reformatio Legum, as we have it, so far as the section on Divorce is concerned, is merely a literary relic representing the views derived from continental sources of certain individual Churchmen of great eminence and influence. These views were no doubt also adopted by the rank and file of a section of extreme Protestants in this country, but, except during a few years of Edward VI.'s reign, were never dominant in the Church of England. On the other hand, the opinion that adultery was on biblical grounds a valid reason for the complete dissolution of marriage seems to have been widely, I should even say generally, held by English divines in the latter half of the 16th century."

Whether the principles represented by this draft code were ever at any period carried into practice in this country as they were in Scotland by the granting of absolute decrees of divorce has been and is much disputed. Sir Lewis Dibdin answers the question in the negative and holds "that the law of the Church of England as to the indissolubility of marriage and the corresponding practice of the Church courts remained unchanged throughout the period under notice, that is, from before the Reformation until after the present Canons in 1603–4 came into operation." On the other hand, there are opinions and evidence contrary to this weighty view.

On evidence which can hardly now be considered as conclusive, unless it is amply supplemented, the Divorce Commissioners appointed in 1850 answered the question in the affirmative as regards the period from 1550 to 1602. In arriving at this conclusion, the Commissioners appear to have been impressed with the evidence of Sir John Stoddart given in 1844 before a Select Committee of the House of Lords appointed to consider Lord Brougham's Bill to amend the constitution of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, in the course of which, on page 52,* he says: "Therefore I apprehend that the Reformatio Legum, having been published as a work of authority, although not of absolute legislative authority, it must have been, and in all probability was, followed, and that for that reason in the spiritual courts there were dissolutions of marriage, because I believe that from about the year 1550 to the year 1602 marriage was not held by the Church, and therefore not held by the law, to be indissoluble." They also cite, in support of their conclusion, the Marquis of Northampton's case referred to below, and the Canons of 1603.

The 105th Canon is as follows:—"Forasmuch as matrimonial causes have been always reckoned and reputed among the weightiest, and therefore require the greater caution when they come to be handled and debated in judgment, especially in causes wherein matrimony is required to be dissolved or annulled. . . . . ." The Commissioners lay stress on the words "dissolved or annulled" as supporting their conclusion.*

The 107th Canon is as follows:—"In all sentences pronounced only for divorce and separation a mensâ et thoro there shall be a caution and restraint inserted in the act of the said sentence, That the parties so separated shall live chastely and continently, and neither shall they, during each other's life, contract matrimony with other persons. And for the better observance of this last clause the said sentence of divorce shall not be pronounced until the party or parties requiring the same have given good and sufficient caution and security into the court that they will not any way break or transgress the said restraint or prohibition." The Commissioners lay stress on the fact that enjoining a prohibitory bond implies that the marriage which the bond was intended to prevent would have been valid.

They refer to the Statute of Bigamy, 1604 (1 Jac. 1. cap. 11), which makes that offence a felony, but in addition to section 2, which deals with an exception in cases of seven years elsewhere, section 3 expressly provides that the Act shall not extend to any person divorced by sentence of the Ecclesiastical Court. Upon this the Commissioners say: "We can hardly suppose that the Legislature intended to declare in one and the same breath that bigamy was felony, and yet that a second marriage after divorce, living the first wife, was not to be considered in that light, unless it conceived that the sentence passed in the Ecclesiastical Court had worked a dissolution of the marriage contract."

It has been conjectured, upon evidence which the Commissioners considered too loose to be authoritative, that the Court of Chancery in early times granted divorces a vinculo†; and Sir John Macdonell has collected a few cases of the 17th century where the courts of law, in deciding other matters, seem to have felt some doubts as to absolute divorces.‡ In view of these differences of opinion it will be convenient to consider shortly the legislation, the attempted legislation and law cases, marriage registers, and other evidence bearing upon the question of divorce between 1532 and the beginning of the 18th century. First, attention must be drawn to the Acts dealing with the numerous marriages of King Henry VIII. In 1532 (25 Hen. VIII. c. 22) the marriage with his first wife, Katherine, was "declared void and their separation valid." In 1535 (28 Hen. VIII. c. 7) the marriage with Anne Boleyn was found to be "utterly voyde and of non effecte; By reason whereof your Highness was and is lawfully devorced and separated from the bonds of the said marriage in the lyffe of the said Lady Anne." In 1539 there is "The dissolution of the pretensed marriage with the Lady Anne of Cleves" (32 Hen. VIII. c. 25). It was declared to be "Itselfe nought and of noo force," and the parties were at liberty and pleasure "to contracte matrimony and marry." These divorces were all in form nullity suits, but in fact they were nothing of the sort, and needed an Act of Parliament. In two other cases Henry cut the knot differently, and at his death his then wife survived him.

In 1542 there were two bastardy Acts, which should be compared with the Roos case mentioned later: these were an Act (34 & 35 Hen. VIII. cap. XL.) (No. 32) "for the declaration of Elizabeth Burgh's children to be bastards"; and an Act (34 & 35 Hen. VIII. cap. XLIV.) (No. 40) "whereby the Ladye Parre's children be made bastards." The last Act is the first stage of the famous Northampton case. These private Acts were certified into Chancery, and the originals are in the Record Office (the Rolls Chapel Series, Bundle 3 (44 & 50).)

Sir Ralph Sadler's Case (1545).

In 1528, Matthew Barr of Sevenoaks, in Kent, married at Dunmow, in Essex, Elene, daughter of John Michel of Dunmow. There were two daughters born of the marriage. In 1530 Matthew deserted his wife

* Divorce Commission Report.

* Sir Lewis Dibdin lays stress on the Latin as well as the English text of the Canon.

† Report 7.

‡ One of these is "Porter's Case" (1637, Crok. Car. 461).

and wandered away to Wales and Ireland. Elene heard from him three months after his departure, but not again. For a year she worked to earn her living, and then hearing that Matthew was dead she took shelter in Clerkenwell Nunnery. But the Prioress refused to allow her to become a nun, and placed her in the service of Mistress Prior, mother-in-law of the Earl of Essex. There she met Ralph Sadler, who was in the service of the earl. They satisfied themselves after many inquiries that Matthew was dead, and married about the year 1534. In all they had nine children. Two years after the marriage Matthew came to London, and in 1541 he disclosed the fact that he was the first husband. The facts slowly became public, and in 1545 a Commission, consisting of the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishops of Worcester and Chichester was appointed "to inquire "into and settle the matter of the marriage of Sir "Ralph Sadler and Helen his consort, which by reason "of a previous marriage between her and one Matthew "Barr is rendered doubtful." (Pat. Roll 785, memb. 18.) This was followed by an Act in the same year to legitimise the issue of Elene and Ralph, and this Act provided that if any divorce should be made between the said Elene and Matthew, she should be reputed a woman sole, as if her marriage with him "had never bene made ne solempnised and as if there "had never bene any contracte of matrimony between "the said Elene and Matthew," and as Elene Michel be enabled during the life of the said Matthew to hold lands in fee simple and all manner of goods and chattels. (Parliament Roll 153(19). 37 Hen. VIII. cap. XXX.* It is suggested that this Act was the model for the Northampton Act and all subsequent private legislation.

We next have on January 9th, 1548, a Bill dealing with adultery which was introduced into the Commons, but it proceeded no further. On March 6th, 1549, a Bill for divorce vinculo matrimonii in causes of adultery was introduced, but was not carried forward. In the meantime the Marquis of Northampton's case came up, and pending the discussion legislative action was suspended.

The Marquis of Northampton's Case (1548).

The Marquis of Northampton, brother of Queen Catherine Parr, obtained a decision from the Ecclesiastical Court separating him from his wife. The ecclesiastical divorce was based on the adultery of the wife, who had confessed that her children born since the marriage were not her husband's children. In 1547 or 1548 Lord Northampton petitioned King Edward VI. for a commission of learned men to determine whether he might lawfully marry again, his first wife, the Lady Anne Bourchier, from whom he had been divorced, being still alive.† We have seen that in 1543 his first wife's children ("The Lady Parre's children") had been declared illegitimate by Act of Parliament. Lord Northampton did not wait for the appointment of the commission, but at once contracted another union with Elizabeth, daughter of Lord Cobham. Subsequently a commission of delegates, headed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, was appointed and declared the second marriage valid "because the former contract had been absolutely destroyed" by the first wife's infidelity, and in 1552 this decision was confirmed by an Act of Parliament, "An Acte touching the marriage of the Marquis of "Northampton and the Lady Elizabeth his Wief" (1551–2, Edw. VI. An. 5 & 6)‡; which declared the marriage valid "the former marriage and any decretal, "canon constitution ecclesiastical law statute usage "prescription or custom of this realm to the contrary "in anywise notwithstanding," and "theire children legittimate." It will be noticed that this Act did not divorce the parties, but merely declared them to be already divorced by the ecclesiastical sentence sufficiently to admit of the Marquis marrying again ["being "seperate divorsed and at libertie by the Lawes "of god to marrye."] This Act was subsequently repealed when the Roman Catholic religion was re-established under Queen Mary,* but the second marriage was not invalidated. On the whole the Northampton case is some evidence that the Church could and did sanction remarriage after divorce for adultery.

On 9th March 1552 there was introduced into the House of Lords and read the first time a Bill to the effect that "no Man shall put away his Wife, and marry "again, unless he shall be lawfully divorced before "some competent Ecclesiastical Judge." On 17th March 1552 the Bill was read a second time and committed, and on Sunday, March 19th, it was read the third time and passed, Thomas Thirleby, then Bishop of Norwich, dissenting. On the same day the Bill was brought into the Commons from the Lords (with the Marquis of Northampton's Bill) by Mr. Broke and the Solicitor-General. It was read the first time on March 22nd, 1552, the second time, on the motion of Sir Thomas Smith, on the 30th March. It was re-introduced into the Commons and read the first time on April 5th, 1552, the second time on April 7th, and the third time on April 11th, and passed. It was re-introduced into the Lords on April 12th and read the first and second time, and then it was dropped. This Bill appears to throw some light on the general question in dispute. It assumes that a lawful divorce could be made, involving a right of remarriage, by an ecclesiastical court, and appears to explain the case of Richard Coupland and Beatrix Atkinson and the case of John Skynner and Margery Conaway and the other cases referred to above, as well as the Northampton case, and to confirm Salkeld's note in Foljambe's case. The fact that the Bill was introduced with the Northampton Bill cannot be overlooked.

In 1558–9 (1 Eliz., No. 31) there was "An Act for the "ratification of the marriage between the Duke of "Norfolk and Lady Margaret now his wife and for "the assurance of certain lands for her joynture." In 1585 it was decided in Bunting v. Lepingfield, 4 Rep. 29a, that a contract per verba de præsenti, though not attended by consummation, was sufficient to avoid a second marriage though followed by consummation. In Webber v. Bury, 5 Rep. 98b (1598), it was held that if a man divorced by reason of perpetual impotency in himself marries again, the issue of the second marriage is legitimate, for the first marriage was dissolved a vinculo matrimonii. A voidable marriage continues a marriage till it is dissolved. In 1594 it was decided in the case of Barrow v. Butten (Tothill, page 81) that in such a case the wife could recover her marriage portion. (See also Dyer, 13a.) Henry Rolle (1589?–1656) in his Abridgment (pp. 680–1) states (on the authority of year book 47 Edward III., plea 78) that a wife has no right to dower where a divorce is granted on the grounds of pre-contract, consanguinity, affinity, or physical incapacity, but that she has a right to it if the marriage is dissolved causa professionis. And he states, moreover, that adultery is a bar to dower, though it does not by the Canon Law or the law of "our church" dissolve the marriage bond. He is clearly basing his view on pre-Reformation law, and it is therefore strange, in view of the decision in Powel v. Weeks (infra), that he should say that divorce for adultery bars dower. It would seem to show that the later view as to the effect of adultery weighed with him. This makes it difficult to dismiss the dictum as to the Elizabethan view given by Salkeld in his report of Foljambe's Case (1601). As we have seen, that dictum is confirmed by the Divorce Bill of 1552 and by various cases.

The following are the three notes upon this case:—

(1) Salkeld's Reports, vol. 3, p. 137.—"A divorce a "vinculo matrimonii is a bar of dower; but a divorce "a mensâ et thoro is not, for the marriage still con- "tinues, and therefore the parties thus divorced cannot "marry again during their joint lives. A divorce for "adultery was anciently a vinculo matrimonii; and "therefore, in the beginning of the reign of Queen "Eliz., the opinion of the Church of England was, "that after a divorce for adultery the parties might

* Record Office Certiorari Bundles, Rolls Chapel Series. Bundle 2 (29).

† State Papers, Domestic, Edw. VI., vol. 2, 32 (p. 5).

‡ The MS. of this Act is at the Record Office. No. 30. Certiorari Bundles, Rolls Chapel Series, Bundle 4, 11.

* 1553, Mariae Ano I. Stat. 2, No. 30. "An Acte for the "repeale of a statute made in the vth year of King Edwarde "the Sixth touching thapproving of the maryage bitwen the "Lorde Marques of Northampton and Lady Elizabeth his "Wief and for the legitimation of their children."

"marry again; but in Foljamb's case, anno 4 Eliz., "in the Star Chamber, that opinion was changed; "and Archbishop Bancroft [Qu. Whitgift] upon the "advice of Divines, held that adultery was only a "cause of divorce a mensâ et thoro."

(2) Noy's Reports, p. 100.—Rye v. Fullcumbe (in camera stellata). "F., being divorc'd for the incon- "tinence of the wife, he afterwards marries P., the "daughter of Rye, living the first wife. By the "whole Court that is a void marriage; for the "divorce is not, but a mensâ et thoro, and does not "dissolve vinculum matrimonii. And by Whitguift, "Archbishop of Canterbury. So is the opinion of "Divines and Civilians." *

(3) Moore's Reports, p. 683.—Rye v. Fuliambe. "Feb. 13, anno 44 Eliz., in Camera Stellata, it was "declared by all the Court that, whereas Fuljambe "was divorced from his first wife for incontinence of "the woman and afterwards he married Sarah Poge, "daughter of Rye, in his former wife's lifetime, this "was a void marriage, because the first divorce was "only a mensâ et thoro and not a vinculo matrimonii. "And John Whitgift, then Archbishop of Canter- "bury, said that he had called to himself at Lambeth "the most sage Divines and Civilians, and that they "had all agreed thereon." † [Trans. from Law French.]

These facts, and the fact that the English divines in the latter half of the sixteenth century (up to Foljambe's Case in 1601) widely held the view that adultery was a valid reason for the complete dissolution of a marriage have to be considered in arriving at any definite conclusion as to the practice in Elizabethan times. The Bill "to prevent causeless "divorces and separations of man and wife; and "to continue the rights of lawful matrimony" (introduced into the Commons on December 9, 1606, and rejected on December 16) points to considerable alarm. It seems clear that among the laity there was a general impression that marriage after divorce was moral and legal, and it may be that the clergy took upon themselves to celebrate second marriages after a divorce a mensâ et thoro for adultery in view of the opinions of the great divines. In any event the marriage per verba de præsenti without any church ceremony was open to divorced persons for what it was worth, and its validity was not likely to be questioned. In Scotland, as we have seen, the general opinion of the reformers and the public was, without any statutory authority, put into force by the ecclesiastical courts; but in England the Commonwealth finally checked these practices, and from the Restoration onwards to 1857 the Legislature alone granted the complete divorce.

Later Cases, 1601–1701.

On February 22nd, 1625, a Bill against Adultery and Fornication was introduced into the Commons and was committed on 4th March 1625, but went no further. A new Bill for the further punishment of Adultery and Fornication was introduced and read the first time in the Commons on 11th May 1626, and the second time on 1st June 1626, when it was committed but it went no further. On 7th April 1628 a similar Bill was introduced into the Commons and read the first time. On April 22nd, 1628, it was read the second time, and was committed, but was not carried further. On March 3rd, 1647, it was resolved by the Commons that it be referred to the Committee formerly appointed to prepare an ordinance for the punishment of adultery and incest, to consider of punishing the same; and to bring in an ordinance concerning divorce; and to bring in the said ordinance on the next fast day. On January 19th, 1656, a Bill was ordered to be prepared and presented to the Commons "Concerning Divorces and Alimony; and "on whom if is fit to place the same."

"An Act for illegitimation of the children of the Lady Ann Roos" was introduced into the Lords and passed by the Commons on 29th January 1666–7, and her husband, Lord Roos, subsequently obtained from the ecclesiastical court a divorce a mensâ et thoro. But these proceedings were incomplete for his purpose, since, as the Act recites, "there was no probable "expectation of posterity to support the family in the "male line, but by the said John Manners Lord Roos," so a further Act, entitled "An Act for Lord Roos to marry again," was introduced in the Lords and passed by the Commons (31st March 1670).*

It was on the hearing of this case that Bishop Cozen delivered his successful argument in favour of absolute divorce, which, however, is stated by Sir Lewis Dibdin to be "so full of inaccuracies that in the "critical edition of his works the editor gives it up over "and over again, and says it must be misreported." It is wrongly stated in the Divorce Commission Report to have been delivered in the Duke of Norfolk's case, the mistake arising no doubt from the fact that it appears in the volume of State Trials as one of the documents used in the latter case.† In 1690 (1 & 2 Will. & Mary) was passed "An Act to annul "and make void a marriage between Mary Wharton, "an infant, and James Campbell, esquire," and this was followed by an Act of 1696–7 (8 & 9 Will. III.) "for annulling the marriage of Hannah Knight, an "infant, and directing the guardianship of the said "infant." In both these cases the lady had been carried off by force, and it was the better opinion that a marriage by duress was good (see Dyer, 13*a*). Hence in the case of Mary Wharton an effort had been made to give her relief by a special clause in the Clandestine Marriage Act, 1690, but as this failed a separate Act was passed (10 H.C.J., 493, etc.; 14 H.L.J., 583, 591).‡

Lewknor's Case, 1689, falls in date between Wharton's case and Knight's case.

Mrs. Lewknor (or Lewkner) eloped and was alleged to be living in open adultery. She petitioned to appear before the Committee of the House of Lords in order, apparently, to deny this. The Act was passed on the application of the husband to illegitimise any issue born during the elopement from him of his wife, against whom a sentence of divorce, a mensâ et thoro had been obtained, but it did not dissolve the marriage or allow the innocent party to marry again.

---

* And see Noy's Reports, page 108. Dame Powel v. Weeks, 2 James I (1605). "In dower it was resolved, that a divorce "causa adulterii is no bar, of dower. Because it is but a mensâ "et thoro and not a vinculo matrimonii. And it was said by "Daniel, that an Elopement is not a bar of Dower ad ostium "ecclesiæ. And judgment for the Plaintiff."

In Stephens v. Totty, 44 & 45 Eliz. 1, Cro. 908, it was held that a divorce causa adulterii does not avoid the marriage absolutely, and that the cases which say that the wife shall have again her goods after divorce are to be intended of an absolute divorce ab initio. (But see the Report in Noy, p. 45.) The undated paper of Elizabeth's time referred to above says: "Yf a man take a woman which hath goodes and marry hir "the husbond may give or sell the goodes at his pleasure "during the marriage, but if they be devorcid then she shall "have hir goodes ayen for the law give the goodes of the wief "to the husbond for cause of the marriage et cessante causa, "&c." (State Papers Dom. S. [unprinted], Eliz., vol. 288, 10.) Reference must be made to the mediæval writ Cui ante divortium, which issued when the husband alienedt "the wife's "lands whereof she was seised in fee simple, tail, or for life, "and after they are divorced, the wife may have this writ to "recover the lands, as she might have the Cui in Vita after "the husband's death. . . . The heir may have sur cui "ante divortium, except his mother had an estate tail, and "then he is put to his formedon (F. N. B. 510) . . . "In this writ the tenant may plead the divorce repealed "(Rast. Entr. Cui Ante divor.)." (See The Nature and Practice of Real Actions, by George Booth, 2nd ed., 1811, pp. 188–9.) It is to be observed that this writ assumes the legitimacy of children born of the marriage.

† This case is probably explained by the case of Burdet v. Burdet (Year Book 18 Edw. IV. de Ter. Hill. case 28) dealing with the question of bastardy after divorce and by the reference to Glanvil, 44, Bracton, 92, given in Salkeld's Report. It is to be noticed that the courts leaned against separation.

In the case of R. v. Lord Lee (Levinz's Reports, vol. 2, p. 128; 3 Salkhead, 138), 26 & 27 Car. II., the court refused to grant Lady Lee a separation despite the violence and cruelty of her husband.

* (See Commons Journal.) The MSS. of these Acts are in the Record Office, Certiorari Bundles, Parcel 15, 20; Parcel 15, 21.

† 13, State Trials, p. 1332. The text of the Bishop's speeches. "Taken from original papers writ in the Bishop's "own hand" is printed by Macqueen, see Practice of Parliamentary Divorce (1842), pp. 544–61, and see Ibid., pp. 472–3.

‡ As to Hannah Knight's case, see 11 H.C.J., etc., 753, and 16 H.L.J., 146, etc. As to both cases see "Divorce Bills in the Imperial Parliament," by James Roberts (Dublin, 1906), an important work on Irish Divorce Bills.

On January 20th, 1689, John Lewknor petitioned the House of Commons "that Jane, his wife, for her "adulterous violation of her marriage vow, and other "debauched practices, to the dishonour of her family, "hath been by the Ecclesiastical Court divorced from "him: and that in regard, in such her debauched "living, she may have children, which will inherit his "estate, and thereby bring desolation to his family, "and praying, that he may have leave to bring in a "Bill to prevent so great a mischief to him and his "family: ordered, that leave be given to bring in a "Bill to illegitimate any children the wife of the said "John Lewknor hath had, or shall have, during her "elopement from him." The Bill was read the first time on January 21st, 1689; the second time on January 23rd, and committed to a committee of 40, together with all the members that serve for Kent and Sussex. The committee was empowered to send for persons, papers, and records.* This Bill was dropped, and a new Bill was introduced on 27th March 1690, and received on March 28th. It was read the first time on April 3rd and the second time on April 5th, when it was committed. On 8th April Mr. Harcourt reported from the committee that they agreed to the Bill without any amendments, and it was ordered to be engrossed, and on April 10th read the third time and resolved—"that the Bill do pass: and that the title be, "an Act to illegitimate any child or children, that "Jane the wife of John Lewknor, Esquire, hath had, "or shall have during her elopement from him. "Ordered, that Mr. Harcourt do carry up the Bill to "the Lords for their concurrence thereunto."† The Bill was brought up to the Lords by Mr. Harcourt and others on April 10th and read the first time.‡ It was read a second time on April 11th, and committed to a committee of 38 peers, temporal and spiritual (including the Bishops of London, Durham, Winchester, St. Davids, Bangor, Worcester, and Chichester). The wife had petitioned that she might be heard before the Bill was passed, and this petition was on April 11th referred to the same committee as the Bill (p. 460). On April 15th the Bishop of Winchester reported: "that the opinion of the committee is, that the "Bill to illegitimate any child, or children, which "Jane the wife of John Lewknor hath had, or shall "have, during her elopement from him, do pass as it is, "without any amendment." The House agreed with the committee thereon and the Bill was read a third time, and the question being put, "whether the Bill shall pass into a law," it was resolved in the affirmative (p. 464), and a message sent to the House of Commons by Sir Miles Coke and Mr. Meredeth that the House had passed the Bill (p. 465), and the message is announced to the Commons by the Speaker (H. of C. Journal, vol. X., p. 379). On April 23rd, 1690, the King gave in person his assent to the Bill in the House of Lords.§ In this case the Bishops took an active part in the passing of the Bill.

In the Earl of Macclesfield's case (1697) the help of the Legislature was sought because, in consequence of the opposition set up by the Countess in the Ecclesiastical Court, she contrived to baffle all her husband's efforts to obtain a divorce a mensâ et thoro, and it was to remedy a flagrant injustice that the Act was passed. At the same time, it was considered a novel proceeding to pass an Act of this nature before a sentence of divorce a mensâ et thoro had been obtained in the Ecclesiastical Court, and a protest was entered by certain of the Lords.

The Duke of Norfolk's case (1700) was also one where a sentence of divorce had been refused by the Ecclesiastical Court, and an Act was passed to remedy the injustice: "An Act to dissolve the Duke of Norfolk's "marriage with the Lady Mary Mordant and to enable "him to marry again.‖"

In 1701 came the first separation (as apart from divorce) Act: "An Act for separating James Earl of "Anglesey from Katharine Countesse of Anglesey his "wife for the cruelty of the said Earl."* The Act made elaborate provisions as to the portion (16,500*l.* beside jewels) brought into settlement by the Countess. This lady subsequently married the Duke of Buckinghamshire. Sir John Dillon's case in 1701 should also be recorded. In this case Lady Dillon was represented before the House of Lords by solicitor and counsel, and witnesses were called. This is the beginning of the judicial method of legislation which lasted till 1857.

Box's case (1701), as the Divorce Commissioners in 1853 point out, was the first case where, without any special circumstances, the Legislature granted a divorce a vinculo after sentence in the Arches' Court.†

Summary.

A few words summarising the conclusions arrived at in the above paragraphs are necessary.

It has been seen that, from the earliest times onwards in the Greek world the idea of divorce and remarriage, at the instance (with various restrictions) of either party to a marriage or of the parents of the parties, was fully recognised; that in the Roman world from the age which preceded the Twelve Tables there was a formless marriage of which the essence was cohabitation and that this marriage could be freely ended with a right of remarriage subject to checks imposed by considerations arising from questions of property, and later, from about the Christian Epoch, by statutory checks on one-sided divorce; that in the Jewish peoples the earlier ideas of perfectly free divorce was checked by the formalities introduced in the Deuteronomic age, and that though in the time of our Lord divorce was regarded as a concession to the weakness of human nature, yet divorce was then, as always, fully recognised as a necessity in certain cases and as involving the right and perhaps the duty of remarriage; that the Church in various parts of the Roman world was subject to the influence of Greek, Roman, Hebrew, and Germanic ideas on the subject of marriage and divorce and evolved its law of marriage under these influences combined with the recorded views of Our Lord and St. Paul on the subject.

It has been seen that the Church accepted in the East, with comparatively few modifications, the law of the Eastern Empire on the subject of marriage and divorce; that in the West she accepted (for many centuries) the Roman law of a formless marriage as modified by the Western Codes, which combined the old Roman law with local usages, but that on the question of divorce fundamental differences of opinion among the most profound theologians existed, and that these differences led to uncertain local practice on the question, until late in the eleventh century the law of absolute indissolubility of marriage was made universal subject to an elaborate system of modifications which, in fact, rendered remarriage after the dissolution of marriage possible. These modifications involved important changes in the ancient formless marriage; cohabitation was no longer necessary to the proof of marriage; consent only was necessary by "words of the present tense"; and every marriageable person was ringed by a Taboo law forbidding intermarriage with a vast class of relations by blood or by affinity, natural or spiritual. It is true that relations by adoption were no longer in practice, though they were in theory, barred, but Justinian's invention of the doctrine of spiritual affinity more than took their place. The result was that there were few marriages incapable of attack; a pre-contract or a spiritual affinity could almost always be found. In England the common law courts boldly met the difficulty of a position which involved the possibility of bastardy arising at any time. It invented the doctrine of possessory marriages, with the result that a man or woman could and often did marry twice and have two legitimate families during the lifetime of two spouses. The abuses that necessarily sprang from the mediæval canon law of marriage were for the moment checked in England by the Act of 1540, which abolished divorces on the ground of

* H. of C. Journal, vol. X., pp. 336, 338, 339, 340.

† H. of C. Journal, vol. X., pp. 357, 358, 365, 368, 371, 373.

‡ H. of L. Journal, vol. XIV., p. 458, 460.

§ H. of C. Journal, vol. X., p. 386; H. of L. Journal, vol. XIV., p. 472. Private Act: Title in Public General Statutes (2 W. & M.).

‖ Private Act: Title in Public General Statutes (9–12 Will. III.).

* The MS. Act is in the Record Office (Certiorari Bundles, Chancery Rolls Chapel Office, Parcel 16, 2).

† 13 State Trials, 1283. The MS. of the Act is to be found in the Record Office Certiorari Bundles, Chancery Petty Bag Office, Parcel 9, Roll 82 (12 & 13 Will. III): "An Act to dissolve the marriage of Ralph Box," pre-contract, and were permanently checked in Catholic Europe by the provisions of the Council of Trent (Sess. xxiv. c. i.) making clandestinity an invalidating impediment to marrrage whenever the decree Tametsi had been duly promulgated. In England, however, pre-contracts were revived as a ground of divorce by a Statute of 1548, and the only improvement of the law produced by the Reformation in England was the abolition of certain grounds of nullity.

On the other hand, a new confusion was introduced by the view of many reformers and divines that adultery was a ground for divorce a vinculo, and during the second half of the sixteenth century this view carried much weight in English practice. The definite views of English theologians, various Diocesan Articles, cases like the Northampton case, the Atkinson case. and the Conaway case, the Bill of 1552, providing that "no man "shall put away his wife, and marry again, unless he "shall be lawfully divorced before some competent "ecclesiastical judge," the definite statement as to the practice of divorce and remarriage coutained in Edmund Bunney's pamphlet written in 1595, the form of the Canons of 1603, various marriage registers, and Salkeld's dictum, are evidence of this confusion. The Diocesan Articles, the Bill of 1552, and the above-mentioned pamphlet, seem to indicate that the laity were regarding adultery as ipso facto destroying marriage, and in such cases they remarried in or out of Church after formal divorce, or without any formal divorce at all, on the ground that the original formless marriage had ceased to exist. The Bill of 1552 recognised the right of the Ecclesiastical Courts to grant a licence for remarriage, and was intended to forbid the existing practice of remarriage without divorce and licence. The Canons of 1603–4 seem to be further evidence of this. The Canons ignore the divorce a vinculo; the Church had at last made up its mind definitely to forbid such divorces and to create machinery to prevent separated persons contracting second marriages. These canons are not inconsistent with a period in which the Church courts sanctioned remarriage after divorce, and seem to indicate that there may have been such a period. The Statute of Bigamy (1604) also lends weight to this view, while the evidence of Edmund Bunney makes it clear that up to 1595 remarriage after divorce was a known practice. The Bill against Divorce of 1606, moreover, must be taken into account. Indeed, there is no period in the history of England previous to the Commonwealth during which a second marriage of complete validity was either impossible or even impracticable. But the mind of the Church in England was at last convinced that there could be no divorce a vinculo, and after the Restoration the Legislature alone, acting ad hoc, could end a marriage unless it was ended under those laws of nullity which continued to make many marriages uncertain until at any rate the year 1753. Thus it was only for a period of about two centuries—from 1660 to 1857—that the absolute doctrine of indissolubility of marriage was in force in England. In the first of these centuries the old law of nullity and of pre-contract still made marriage, in fact, dissoluble in many cases where hardship demanded relief, and we may therefore say that it was only from 1753 to 1857 that the doctrine of indissolubility was really effective and incapable of any evasion, save the evasion afforded to the rich by the Legislature and to all by the closely limited law of nullity still in force.

J. E. G. DE MONTMORENCY.

APPENDIX II.

CRANMER'S "REFORMATIO LEGUM ECCLESIASTICARUM."*

DE ADULTERIIS ET DIVORTIIS.—CONCERNING ADULTERY AND DIVORCE.

Cap. I.—Adulteria severe punienda esse.

Turpitudo tam horribilis adulteriorum est, ut aperte decalogi praecepto confossa sit, et etiam veteribus divinis legibus per Mosen latis publica populi lapidatione obruta et consepulta esset: Denique iure civili etiam capite plecteretur. Rem igitur Deo tam odiosam et a sanctissimis maioribus nostris singulari cruciatu crucifixam, Ecclesiastici iudices nostris non debent sine gravissima poena dimittere,

I.—That Adultery ought to be severely punished.

So heinous is the guilt of adultery that it is attacked in expressed terms by one of the Ten Commandments; and also, under the ancient divine laws promulgated through Moses, it was punished by the culprit's being publicly stoned to death by the people and buried beneath the stones; while finally by the civil law also it was punished with death. It follows therefore that a crime so hateful to God and visited by our pious forefathers with a punishment specially appropriated to it, ought not to be passed over by our Ecclesiastical Judges without the most condign punishment.

Cap. II.—Ministri de Adulterio convicti quomodo puniendi sunt.

Ordiamur ab Ecclesiarum ministris, quorum vitae praecipua quaedam integritas esse deberet. Itaque si quis ex illis adulterii, scortationis, aut incestus convictus fuerit, si propriam habuerit uxorem, omnes eius opes, et bona devolventur ad eam, et ad liberos, si qui sint ex ea, vel ex aliquo priore matrimonio legitime nati. Si vero nec suam uxorem nec liberos habeat, omnes eius facultates arbitratu iudicis, vel inter pauperes dispertientur, vel in alia pietatis officia conferentur. Deinde si quod illi beneficium fuerit, postquam adulterii vel incestus, vel scortationis convictus fuerit, ex eo tempore protinus illud amittat, nec illi potestas ullum aliud accipiendi. Praeterea vel in perpetuum ablegetur exilium, vel ad aeternas carceris tenebras deprimatur.

II.—How Ministers who have been convicted of adultery ought to be punished.

Let us begin with Church Ministers, whose lives ought to be characterised by especial rectitude. If, therefore, any one of them be convicted of adultery, fornication, or incest, if he has had a wife of his own, all his goods and property shall pass to her and to the children, whether born of her, or the lawful fruit of any previous marriage. Should he, however, have neither wife nor children of his own, all his property shall, at the pleasure of the judge, either be divided among the poor, or applied to some other works of piety. In the next place, should he have held any benefice, he is, after being convicted of adultery, incest, or fornication, to lose it as and from that time, and to have no power of receiving any other. Furthermore, he is either to be condemned to perpetual banishment, or to be consigned to the darkness of the dungeon for life.

* In this translation the word "party" is used to imply either husband or wife, and the masculine pronoun, when replacing it, in the same sense.—C. H. W. (Translator).

Cap. III.—Laicus quomodo puniendus.

Laicus adulterii damnatus uxori suae dotem restituito. Deinde bonorum universorum dimidiam partem eidem uxori concedito. Praeterea vel in perpetuum exilium ito, vel aeternae carceris custodiae mancipator.

III.—In what manner the layman is to be punished.

The layman convicted of adultery is to restore his wife's dowry to her. He is also to give up to her the half of all his goods. Furthermore, he is either to be condemned to perpetual banishment or committed to prison for life.

Cap. IV.—Uxores sive ministrorum, sive laicorum, quomodo puniendae.

Uxores ex contraria parte, tam laicorum quam ministrorum, si crimen adulterii contra illas probatum fuerit, et iudex adversus illas pronunciaverit, dotibus carebunt, et omnibus emolumentis quae vel ullo Regni nostri iure, vel consuetudine, vel pacto, vel promisso poterant ex bonis maritorum ad illas descendere, tum etiam vel in sempiternum exilium eiicientur, vel perpetuae carceris custodiae mandabuntur.

IV.—In what manner wives, either of ministers or of laymen, are to be punished.

On the other hand, wives, whether of laymen or of ministers, if the crime of adultery be proved against them and the judge give his decision against them, shall be deprived of their dowries and of all benefits which might accrue to them from the property of their husbands, either under any law of our realm, or by custom, or contract, or covenant; and shall, moreover, either be condemned to perpetual banishment or imprisoned for life.

Cap. V.—Integra persona transit ad novas nuptias.

Cum alter coniunx adulterii damnatus est, alteri licebit innocenti novum ad matrimonium (si volet) progredi. Nec enim usque adeo debet integra persona crimine alieno premi, coelibatus ut invite possit obtrudi, quapropter integra persona non habebitur adultera, si novo se matrimonio devinxerit, quoniam ipse causam adulterii Christus excepit.

V.—The innocent party may contract a fresh marriage.

When one of the parties has been convicted of adultery, the other, being innocent, shall (if desirous), be allowed to proceed to a fresh marriage. For the innocent party ought not to suffer for another's crime to such an extent that celibacy should be forced upon him against his will, and, therefore, the innocent party is not to be considered guilty of adultery if he bind himself by a fresh marriage, since Christ, himself, excepted adultery as a reason.

Cap. VI.—Reconciliationem esse optandam.

Quoniam in matrimonio summa coniunctio rerum omnium est, et tantus amor quantus potest maximus cogitari, vehementer optamus ut integra persona damnatae veniam indulgeat, et illam ad se rursus assumat, si credibilis melioris vitae spes ostendatur; quam animi mansuetudinem licet nullae possint externae leges praecipere, tamen Christiana charitas saepe nos ad eam adducere potest. Quod si damnata persona non possit ad superiorem conditionem admitti, nullum illi novem matrimonium conceditur.

VI.—The desirability of reconciliation.

Since in matrimony there is the closest possible union, and the highest degree of love that can be imagined, we earnestly desire that the innocent party should forgive the guilty and take him back again should there seem to be any reasonable hope of a better way of life; and although this forgiving disposition cannot be learnt from any external laws, nevertheless Christian charity may often guide us to it. But should it be impossible for the guilty party to be allowed to renew the old relations, no fresh marriage is permitted him.

Cap. VII.—Nemo coniugem arbitratu suo potest relinquere.

Magna res est, et ingentem affert totius familiae perturbationem, cum uxor a viro distrahitur. Quapropter adulterii respectu, nemo suam a se coniugem authoritate propria removeat, et aliam adsciscat, nisi iudex Ecclesiasticus totam causam rite prius cognoverit et definiverit. Quod si facere quispiam ausus fuerit, ius omne agendi adversus coniugem amittat. Iudex autem quoties alterum coniugem adulterii condemnat, alteri sincerae personae libertatem denunciare debet ad novum matrimonium transeundi, cum hac tamen exceptione, certum ut tempus assignet in quo superiorem ad coniugem (si velit) redire possit; quod si tempore iam absumpto recuset facere, tum ad aliud matrimonium descendere potest. Et hoc tempus quod iudex indulgebit, omnino volumus anni spatio vel sex mensibus definiri.

VII.—No husband or wife may abandon the other of his or her own free will.

The separation of husband and wife is a serious matter, and brings about grievous disturbance of the whole family. Wherefore, with respect to adultery, no one may put away his wife on his own authority and take another, unless an ecclesiastical judge shall first have duly examined the whole case and given his decision. But if anyone should dare to do this, he is to lose all right of action againt his wife. Whenever the judge convicts either husband or wife of adultery, he must give notice to the other, the guiltless party, of his freedom to proceed to a fresh marriage; but with this reservation, that he shall fix a certain time in which the injured party may (if desirous) return to his former marriage partner, and if he should refuse to do this on the expiry of the period, he may then contract another marriage. And we explicitly decree that this period which the judge shall grant, shall be limited by the space of a year or possibly six months.

Cap. VIII.—Divortium propter desertum matrimonium.

Cum alter ex coniugibus aufugerit, seque abalienarit ab altero, si persona absens possit inveniri, consiliis, hortationibus, et poenis cogatur ut ad coniugem se rursus adiungat, et una cum illo convenienter vivat; quam ad rem si nulla ratione potest adduci, contumax in eo persona debet accipi, legumque divinarum et humanarum contemptrix: et propterea perpetuae carceris custodiae dedatur, et deserta persona novarum potestatem nuptiarum ab Ecclesiastico iudice sumat. Cum autem contumax non possit absens investigari nec erui nec locus ullus in hoc crimine levitati vel temeritati relinquatur; Primum absentem personam nominatim requiri volumus, illa iuris formula, quam viis et modis appellant: quo tempore si se non ostenderit, aut eius

VIII.—Desertion a ground for Divorce.

When either of the parties deserts and withdraws himself from the other, if the absent party can be found, advice, exhortations and penalties are to be employed to compel him to return to his marriage partner that they may live harmoniously together; if he cannot in any way be induced to adopt this course, he is to be considered a contumacious person in the matter, and a scorner of divine and human laws, and for that cause he is to suffer perpetual imprisonment, and the deserted party may claim the right, from the ecclesiastical judge, to contract a fresh marriage. But when the contumacious person, being absent, cannot be found, or his whereabouts ascertained, and is clearly guilty of more than light and heedless behaviour, then it is our will aliquis vicarius qui causam eius velit agere. Iudex illi biennium vel triennium indulgebit in quo persona possit absens se repraesentare; quo tempore consumpto, si se ipse non sistat et iustas afferat absentiae tam diuturnae causas, destituta persona nuptiarum vinculis liberabitur, et novum sibi coniugem (si velit) sumat. Desertrix autem persona, si iudicio iam peracto novisque consequutis nuptiis, sero, post biennii vel triennii spatium expletum sui potestatem fecerit, in aeternas carceris tenebras detrudatur, et secundum matrimonium plenissimo iure valeat.

that the absent person be first summoned to appear by name, according to the form of legal procedure, known as viis et modis, and if, on this being done, no appearance is entered either by him personally or by anyone acting on his behalf and willing to plead his cause, then the judge shall grant him a stay of two or three years, during which it is to be competent for the absent party to come forward. On the expiry of this period if he does not appear himself and adduce just causes for so long an absence, the deserted person shall be freed from the bonds of matrimony and (if desirous) allowed to marry again. But if, when the proceedings are at an end, and a fresh marriage has taken place, the deserting party should, when too late and after the expiry of the two or three years, come forward, he is to be thrust into the darkness of the dungeon for life, and the second marriage shall be entirely legal.

Cap. IX.—Divortium propter nimis longam coniugis absentiam.

Quando non aufugerit coniunx, sed militiam aut mercaturam aut aliquam habet huiusmodi legitimam, et honestam peregrinationis suae causam, et abfuerit diu domo, nec illius vel de vita vel quicquam certo sciatur, largientur alteri coniugi iudicis (siquidem hoc ab illis requirat) bienii vel triennii spatium in quo mariti reditum expectet. Quo tempore toto si non revertatur, nec de vita possit illius aliquid esse explorati, cum diligentissime de ea fuerit interim perquisitum, alteri coniugi novas concedi nuptias aequum est; cum hac tamen conditione, prior ut maritus si tandem se repraesentet, uxor illum rursus ad se recipiat, si quidem ostendere possit culpa sua factum non esse quod fora stam diu peregrinatus sit; tantam enim et tam longi temporis absentiam nisi plena magnaque cum ratione possit excusare, custodiam in perpetuam carceris dimittatur, nullum ad uxorem reditum habeat, et illa secundis in nuptiis rite permaneat.

IX.—The unduly protracted absence of the husband a ground for Divorce.

When the husband has not deserted, but has military service or his business as a merchant or some legitimate and honourable reason of this sort for travelling abroad, and has been absent from home a long time and nothing is certainly known either about his being alive or in any other way, the judges shall fix for the wife (if indeed she should ask this from them) a space of either two or three years during which she is to await her husband's return. Should he not come come back during the whole of this time, and if it should be impossible to obtain any information as to his being alive, although the most diligent inquiry has been made in regard to this in the meanwhile, it is right that the liberty to contract a fresh marriage should be granted to the wife, but with this condition, that if in course of time the first husband should return, the wife is to take him back to her, provided he can prove that his having stayed so long abroad was not by his own fault. For unless he should be able to explain so serious and lengthy an absence by some full and sufficient reason, he is to be imprisoned for life and have no right of return to his wife, and she is to continue legally in her second marriage.

Cap. X.—Inimicitiae Capitales divortium inducunt.

Inter coniuges si capitales intercedant inimicitiae, tamque vehementer exarserint, ut alter alterum aut insidiis, aut venenis appetat, aut aliqua vel aperta vi, vel occulta peste, vitam velit eripere, quamprimum tam horribile crimen probatum fuerit, rite in iudicio divortio volumus huiusmodi personas distrahi: maiorem enim coniugi facit iniuriam persona, quae salutem et vitam oppugnat, quam ea quae ex consuetudine se coniugis eximit, aut corporis sui potestatem alteri facit. Nec inter illos ullum consortium esse potest, inter quos capitale periculum cogitari coepit et metui. Cum igitur una non possunt esse, iuxta Pauli doctrinam dissolvi par est.

X.—Deadly hostility a ground for Divorce.

If deadly hostility should arise between husband and wife, and become inflamed to such an intensity that one attack the other, either by treacherous means or by poison, and should wish to take his life in some way, either by open violence or by hidden malice, we ordain that, as soon as so horrible a crime be proved, such persons should be by law separated by divorce in the courts: for the person does greater injury to his marriage partner who attacks health and life than the one who separates himself from the other's society, or commits adultery with another. For there cannot be any sort of fellowship between those who have begun the one to plot and the other to dread mortal harm. When, therefore, they cannot live together, according to the teaching of Paul, it is right that they should be separated.

Cap. XI.—Malae tractationis crimen tandem divortium inducit.

Si vir in uxorem saeviat, et acerbitatem in eam nimiam factorum et verborum expromat, quam diu spes ulla placabilitatis est, cum illo iudex Ecclesiasticus agat, nimiam ferociam obiurgans, et si non potest monitis et hortationibus proficere, pignoribus oblatis, aut fideiussoribus acceptis, eum cavere compellat de nulla vehementi coniugi inferenda iniuria, et de illa tractanda quomodo matrimonii intima coniunctio postulat. Quod si ne pignoribus quidem, aut fideiussoribus coerceri potest maritus, nec asperitatem velit isto modo deponere, tum capitalem illum coniugis inimicum esse existimandum est, et illius vitam infestare. Quapropter divortii remedio periclitanti succurrendum erit, non minus quam si vita manifeste fuisset oppugnata. Nec tamen praeterea iuris dempta est potestas coercendi uxores quibus modis opus fuerit, si rebelles, contumaces, petulantes, acerbae sint et improbae, modo rationis et XI.—The crime of ill-treatment, if prolonged, a ground for Divorce.

Should a man be violent to his wife and display excessive harshness of word and deed in his dealing towards her, as long as there is any hope of improvement, the ecclesiastical judge is to reason with him, reproving his excessive violence, and if he cannot prevail by admonitions and exhortations, he is to compel him by giving bail or by submitting to sponsors to give security, that he will not inflict any violent injury on his wife, and that he will treat her as the intimate union of marriage requires. But if, however, the husband cannot be restrained, either by bail or sponsors, and refuses to abandon his cruelty by these means, then he must be considered his wife's mortal enemy and a danger to her existence. Wherefore she, in her peril, must be helped by the remedy of divorce, no less than if her life had been openly attacked. On the other hand, however, the power given by the law is not abrogated, of restraining wives in whatever ways are necessary, should they be rebellious, obstinate, petulant, scolds, and of evil behaviour, provided that the husband does not transgress the limits of moderation and equity. Both in this and in the above-mentioned offences it is our will that this principle should be followed, that parties thus set free (if desirous) may contract a fresh marriage, while those convicted of the previous crimes are to be punished by perpetual exile or imprisonment for life.

aequitatis fines mariti non egrediantur. Et cum in hoc, tum in his superioribus delictis hoc teneri placet, ut solutae personae novas (si velint) nuptiarum conditiones legant, convictae vero priorum criminum vel exiliis perpetuis, vel aeterna carceris custodia plectantur.

Cap. XII.—Parvae contentiones, nisi perpetuae sint, divortium non inducunt.

Si minores quaedam contentiones, aut offensiones obrepserint in matrimonio, Pauli sententia moderatrix earum esse debet, ut aut uxor marito se reconciliet, quod omnibus poenarum et hortationum ordinariis, et extraordinariis viis procurari debet, aut absque novo coniugio maneat, id quod et viro pariter faciendum statuimus.

XII.—Slight disagreements, unless permanent, no ground for Divorce.

If trifling disagreements or grounds of offence creep into the marriage life, the words of Paul should act as a check upon them, namely, that either the wife should be reconciled to the husband, a result which ought to be sought after by all ordinary and extraordinary methods of penalties and exhortations, or she is to be debarred for the future from a fresh marriage, a penalty which we decree to be equally binding on the man.

Cap. XIII.—Perpetuus morbus non tollit matrimonium.

Si forte coniugum alteruter perpetuum aliquem morbum contraxerit, cuius nulla levatio potest inveniri, tamen matrimonium in omnibus huiusmodi difficultatibus perdurabit. Quoniam hoc unum esse debet praecipuum et eximium matrimonii commodum, ut multa mala mutuis coniugum officiis sedari, lenirique possint.

XIII.—Incurable disease does not annul marriage.

If by chance either of the parties shall have contracted any incurable disease for which no alleviation can be found, the marriage will, nevertheless, hold good in spite of all difficulties of this kind. Seeing that this, above all, ought to be the principal and distinguishing advantage of matrimony, that many troubles may be soothed and alleviated by mutual acts of kindness on the part of the marriage partners.

Cap. XIV.—Durante lite quomodo rea persona sustentabitur.

Quoniam saepe magnam controversiam habent, et longissimi sunt temporis lites adulteriorum, veneficiorum, capitalium insidiarum, et malae tractationis, vir uxorem interim honestis et convenientibus impensis sustentet, habita ratione dignitatis et conditionis in qua est.

XIV.—In what manner the defendant is to be supported during the lawsuit.

Since cases involving charges of adultery, poisoning, mortal treachery and ill-treatment frequently entail serious controversy and are of very great length, the man is in the meantime to maintain his wife by a seemly and fitting allowance, account being taken of the rank and circumstances in which she is.

Cap. XV.—Poena falsae accusationis.

Multorum libidines huiusmodi pruritum habent, ut nova subinde matrimonia consectentur, et ad varias uxores devolare concupiscant. Quapropter falsas innocentibus calumnias struent adulteriorum, et aliorum huius generis criminum, nisi sceleribus illorum supplicium acerbitate fuerit occursum. Itaque si vir uxorem adulterii, vel veneficii ream fecerit, et post causa cadat, dimidia bonorum pars ad uxorem sevocetur. Nec in illis vendendi, distrahendi, legandi, permutandi, donandi, vel alienandi quacunque ratione ius ullum habeat, nisi uxor in id consentiat. Et uxor ex altera parte si maritum adulterii, vel veneficii, capitalis iniuriae vel malae tractationis postulaverit, et litem amittat, dote primum careat; Deinde orbetur omni emolumento quod iure per maritum debuit ad illam pervenire, nisi maritus illi sponte voluerit aliquid aspergere; postremo matrimonium inter illos, ita ut erat, integrum conservetur.

Si non coniunx coniugem, sed alterum ex his externa quaedam persona reum faciat, et in iudicio succubuerit, Ecclesiasticus iudex illum arbitratu suo, magna tamen et acri poena feriat, et etiam coniugi satisfaciat cui damnum dedit. Denique calumniatores huiusmodi nec ad Ecclesiam redeant, nec admittantur ad sacramenta, nisi famam eius personae, quam calumnia et mendacio dedecoraverunt plene restituerint quantam possint; et paenitentia scelere digna perfuncti fuerint. Et has in hoc genere poenas omnibus sive laicis sive clericis communes esse volumus.

XV.—The penalty for false accusation.

The sensual desires of many men have a craving of this character, that they pursue a succession of fresh marriages and long for a constant change of wives. Wherefore they will devise slanderous charges of adultery and other crimes of that kind against the innocent, unless the punishmeut for their offences is made sufficiently severe to act as a deterrent. Therefore, if a man shall charge his wife with adultery or poisoning, and if subsequently the case fail, then the half of his property is to be assigned to the wife. Nor shall he in any circumstances have any right of selling, dividing, bequeathing, exchanging, giving or alienating that property, unless the wife consent thereto. And on the other hand, if the wife shall prosecute the husband for adultery or poisoning, mortal injury or ill-treatment, and lose her case, in the first place, she shall forfeit her dowry, then she is to be deprived of all emoluments which would legally have accrued to her from her husband, unless the husband is of his own accord willing to make some provision for her; finally, the marriage between them is to be maintained intact, as it was before. If it is not the husband or wife who accuses the other, but some other third party from outside accuses one of them, and his case breaks down, the ecclesiastical judge is, at his own discretion, to inflict some heavy and exemplary punishment on him, and he is furthermore to give satisfaction to the party to whom he did the wrong. Lastly, such slanderers may neither return to the Church nor may they be admitted to the Sacraments, unless they have, as far as in them lies, restored the reputation of that person, whom they have discredited by calumny and falsehood, and shall have done penance in proportion to the crime. And we decree that these penalties, under this heading, shall be common to all, whether laymen or clergymen

Cap. XVI.—Mariti poena suadentis uxori adulterium.

Si maritus uxori suasor aut author ulla ratione fuerit adulterii committendi, damnabitur illa quidem adulterii, sed et maritus lenocinii reus pronunciabitur, et matrimonii coniunctione neuter liberabitur. Quod et de uxore similiter intelligi volumus.

XVI.—The penalty of the husband who incites his wife to adultery.

If the husband shall have been in any way the inciter or instigator of his wife's committing adultery, she, indeed, shall be convicted of adultery, but the husband shall be declared guilty of procuring, and neither shall be released from the bonds of matrimony. And this, we decree, is to be understood of the wife likewise.

Cap. XVII.—Quae poena sit cum par adulterium est in utroque coniuge.

Si persona quae fuerit adulteriii convicta crimen in altero coniuge possit idem ostendere et ostenderit priusquam coniunx ad novas nuptias diverterit, utriusque coniugis culpa par in pares incidet poenas, et prius inter illos firmum manebit matrimonium.

XVII.—What the penalty is to be when both parties are equally guilty of adultery.

If the person who has been convicted of adultery should be able to prove the same crime against the other marriage partner, and prove it before that party has proceeded to a fresh marriage, the equal guilt of each party shall involve equal punishment, and the former marriage between them shall remain valid.

Cap. XVIII.—Receptatorum et fautorum adulterii, quae poena sit.

Ne illi quidem iudicum Ecclesiasticorum diligentiam subterfugere debent qui receptatores sunt adulteriorum, aut illorum flagitia, ope, opera, vel consilio quacunque ratione procurant; quo in genere sunt exempli causa qui domum adulteris scientes expediunt, vel locum qualemcunque, qui sermonum, literarum aut munerum cuiuscunque generis sint internuncii. Quapropter omnem huiusmodi faecem, quae caenum adulterii quacunque parte commovet, Ecclesiasticis poenis et arbitriis etiam iudicis constringendum esse decernimus.

XVIII.—What the penalty is to be for the harbourers and abettors of adultery.

Of a surety those ought not to escape the vigilance of the ecclesiastical judges, who are the harbourers of adultery, or who in any way promote the disgrace of it by their help, action, or advice; in which class are, for example, those who wittingly lend their houses to adulterers, or a place of whatsoever description, and who are intermediaries of messages, letters or presents of any sort. Wherefore we decree that all reprobates of this kind, who encourage the uncleanness of adultery in whatever respect, must be restrained by ecclesiastical penalties and also by the pronouncements of the judge.

Cap. XIX.—Separatio a Mensâ et Thoro tollitur.

Mensae societas et thori solebat in certis criminibus adimi coniugibus, salvo tamen inter illas reliquo matrimonii iure; quae constitutio cum a sacris litteris aliena sit, et maximam perversitatem habeat, et malorum sentinam in matrimonium comportaverit, illud authoritate nostra totum aboleri placet.

XIX.—The separation a Mensâ et Thoro to be abolished.

It was formerly customary in the case of certain crimes to deprive married people of the right of association at bed and board, though in all other respects their marriage tie remained intact; and since this practice is contrary to the Holy Scriptures, involves the greatest confusion, and has introduced an accumulation of evils into matrimony, it is our will that the whole thing be, by our authority, abolished.

Cap. XX.—Incestus et Scortationes laicorum quomodo puniuntur.

Incestus, nominatim autem is qui primum ad gradum ascendit, afficietur poena sempiterna carceris. Deinde scortationes et vagae licentiosaeque libidines omnis generis magna suppliciorum acerbitate compraehendantur, ut tandem aliquando radicitus ex regno nostro extirpentur. Ecclesiastici igitur iudices diligenter eviligent, ut quascunque personas et cuiuscunque sexus flagitiosis et impuris libidinum congressibus implicatas in excommunicationem eiiciant; nisi mature moniti resipuerint. Et licet si ipsi correxerint, tamen publice cogantur Ecclesiae Satisfacere. Praeterea decem libras in pauperum cistam Ecclesiae suae propriam imponant, vel si minores illorum facultates sunt, tantum imponant quantum de bonis illorum commode detrahi potest.

XX.—How incest and fornication of the laity are to be punished.

Incest, by which is particularly meant that which has reached the worst form of sin, is to be visited with the penalty of imprisonment for life. Then fornication and indiscriminate and licentious lusts of every kind are to be checked by great severity in the punishment, so that they may eventually be completely rooted out from our kingdom. Therefore the ecclesiastical judges must take vigilant care that they visit with excommunication whatever persons of whichever sex have been involved in sensual associations of an impure and dissolute character, unless after timely warning they repent. And even though they have themselves amended their ways, they are nevertheless to be compelled publicly to make atonement to the Church. Moreover, they must place ten pounds in the box set apart for the poor of their Church, or if their means are insufficient, they must place there as much of their goods as can conveniently be spared.

Cap. XXI.—Filius non legitimus quomodo sit alendus.

Filius ex adulterio susceptus, aut ex simplici scortatione, quemadmodum appellant, patris impensis alatur, si quidem is inveniri poterit. Qui si non poterit erui, mater suum ipsa foetum propriis impensis sustentet.

XXI.—How an illegitimate child is to be maintained.

A child born of adultery or of mere fornication, to use the common term, is to be maintained at the father's expense, if, indeed, he can be discovered. But if he cannot be found the mother is herself to support her offspring at her own expense.

APPENDIX III.

Tables handed in by Sir John Macdonell, C.B.

TABLE I.

Matrimonial Petitions Filed, 1859–1909.

—	Annual Averages.						1889.	1890.	1891.	1892.	1893.	1894.	1895.	1896.	1897.	1898.	1899.	1900.	1901.	1902.	1903.	1904.	1905.	1906.	1907.	1908.	1909.
	1859 to 1863.	1864 to 1868.	1869 to 1873.	1874 to 1878.	1879 to 1883.	1884 to 1888.
For dissolution of marriage :
Husbands' petitions -	129	133	169	254	277	305	314	326	306	305	309	309	353	393	414	401	383	360	491	596	488	448	429	442	419	472	451
Wives' ,, -	75	100	120	179	205	224	208	215	220	234	207	238	220	280	269	243	262	249	259	293	337	272	323	325	315	374	336
Total -	204	233	289	433	482	529	522	541	526	539	516	547	573	673	683	644	645	609	750	889	825	720	752	767	734	846	787
Percentage of husbands' petitions.	63	57	58	59	58	58	60	60	58	57	60	56	62	58	61	62	59	59	65	67	59	62	57	58	57	56	57
Percentage of wives' petitions.	37	43	42	41	42	42	40	40	42	43	40	44	38	42	39	38	41	41	35	33	41	38	43	42	43	44	43
For judicial separation :
Husbands' petitions -	3	7	7	10	7	6	10	6	1	2	6	7	4	3	2	4	4	3	3	2	4	5	5	2	3	1	4
Wives' ,, -	50	60	72	105	115	125	115	111	84	106	104	96	106	96	96	102	78	86	95	96	86	97	87	74	82	66	89
Total -	53	67	79	115	122	131	125	117	85	108	110	103	110	99	98	106	82	89	98	98	90	102	92	76	85	67	93
Percentage of husbands' petitions.	5	10	10	9	6	4	8	5	1	2	5	7	4	3	2	4	5	3	3	2	4	5	5	3	4	1	4
Percentage of wives' petitions.	95	90	90	91	94	96	92	95	99	98	95	93	96	97	98	96	95	97	97	98	96	95	95	97	96	99	96
For nullity of marriage -	4	8	8	12	13	14	21	10	23	14	11	29	32	27	20	24	22	26	20	30	16	30	30	29	36	32	31
For restitution of conjugal rights.	11	15	15	19	19	22	25	14	13	16	22	23	19	20	20	22	21	23	30	33	31	35	43	54	49	65	72
Other petitions* - -	2	1	2	1	1	1	3	1	1	2	—	—	—	1	1	2	—	—	1	—	1	—	4	2	3	1	1
Total petitions filed	274	324	393	580	637	697	696	683	648	679	659	702	734	820	822	798	770	747	899	1,050	963	887	921	928	907	1,011	984

* Exclusive of petitions for damages only.

TABLE II.

Decrees granted for Dissolution of Marriage, 1858–1909.

Number granted on Husbands' and Wives' Petitions.

Year.	Decrees granted			Year.	Decrees granted
	On Husbands' Petitions.	On Wives' Petitions.	Total.		On Husbands' Petitions.	On Wives' Petitions.	Total.
1858	109	70	179	1885	180	136	316
1859	89	52	141	1886	217	170	387
1860	68	59	127	1887	220	170	390
1861	79	39	118	1888	226	166	392
1862	105	48	153	1889	226	144	370
1863	95	65	160	1890	231	169	400
1864	100	66	166	1891	195	147	342
1865	88	59	147	1892	194	160	354
1866	88	58	146	1893	207	155	362
1867	87	57	144	1894	208	173	381
1868	93	88	181
1869	101	85	186	1895	478		478
1870	113	81	194
1871	111	79	190	1896	299	187	486
1872	109	94	203	1897	328	255	583
1873	140	98	238	1898	260	176	436
1874	170	111	281	1899	304	221	525
1875	184	120	304	1900	295	199	494
1876	159	124	283	1901	373	228	601
1877	191	131	322	1902	389	219	608
1878	225	155	380	1903	394	220	614
1879	148	152	300	1904	350	284	634
1880	197	143	340	1905	362	261	623
1881	179	123	302	1906	364	286	650
1882	180	165	345	1907	332	266	598
1883	231	130	361	1908	365	307	672
1884	198	139	337	1909	380	305	685

TABLE III.

Decrees granted for Dissolution of Marriage, 1858–1909.

Percentage of Petitions successful.

Year.	Percentage.		Year.	Percentage.		Year.	Percentage.
	Husbands' Petitions.	Wives' Petitions.		Husbands' Petitions.	Wives' Petitions.		Husbands' Petitions.	Wives' Petitions.
1858	69·87	72·16	1876	69·13	72·09	1894	67·31	72·69
1859	68·99	73·24	1877	74·32	70·43
1860	61·82	74·68	1878	75·76	70·45	1895	83·42
1861	68·10	65·00	1879	64·07	72·38
1862	75·54	73·85	1880	71·64	67·77	1896	76·08	66·79
1863	63·76	65·00	1881	65·57	66·13	1897	79·23	94·80
1864	67·57	71·74	1882	71·43	78·57	1898	64·84	72·43
1865	67·69	56·19	1883	65·44	63·11	1899	79·37	84·35
1866	66·17	61·05	1884	66·22	68·81	1900	81·94	79·92
1867	68·50	59·38	1885	70·87	69·39	1901	75·97	88·03
1868	73·81	78·57	1886	64·39	69·67	1902	65·27	74·74
1869	68·71	73·28	1887	67·48	66·93	1903	80·90	65·28
1870	71·52	77·14	1888	73·14	73·78	1904*	78·13	104·41
1871	64·91	64·75	1889	71·98	69·23	1905	†84·38	80·80
1872	63·74	74·02	1890	70·86	78·60	1906	82·35	88·00
1873	70·00	76·56	1891	63·73	66·82	1907	79·24	84·44
1874	72·65	78·72	1892	63·61	68·38	1908	77·33	82·09
1875	73·31	68·97	1893	66·99	74·88	1909	84·26	90·77

* The number of decrees nisi granted in 1904 exceeded the number of petitions presented during the same year.

TABLE IV.

DECREES GRANTED FOR DISSOLUTION OF MARRIAGE, 1858–1909.

~~Population~~ Proportion per 100,000 of estimated Population.

Year.	Proportion of Decrees per 100,000 of Population.	Year.	Proportion of Decrees per 100,000 of Population.	Year.	Proportion of Decrees per 100,000 of Population.
1858	·92	1876	1·16	1894	1·27
1859	·72	1877	1·30	1895	1·57
1860	·64	1878	1·52	1896	1·58
1861	−·59	1879	1·18	1897	1·87
1862	·75	1880	1·32	1898	1·38
1863	·78	1881	1·16	1899	1·65
1864	·79	1882	1·31	1900	1·53
1865	·70	1883	1·36	1901	1·84
1866	·72	1884	1·25	1902	1·85
1867	·70	1885	1·16	1903	1·84
1868	·82	1886	1·41	1904	1·88
1869	·84	1887	1·40	1905	1·83
1870	·86	1888	1·39	1906	1·89
1871	·83	1889	1·30	1907	1·72
1872	·88	1890	1·39	1908	1·92
1873	1·02	1891	1·18	1909	+1·93
1874	1·18	1892	1·20
1875	1·26	1893	1·22

TABLE V.

STATEMENT SHOWING THE PROPORTION OF DIVORCES TO MARRIED POPULATION AT EACH CENSUS YEAR FROM 1861 TO 1901.

(1.) Census Year.	(2.) Enumerated Married Population.	(3.) Decrees for Divorce.	(4.) Married Population to each Decree.	(5.) Decrees per 10,000 of Married Population.
1861	6,917,395	140	49,410	−2·02
1871	7,831,890	202	38,772	2·58
1881	8,814,860	330	26,712	3·74
1891	9,768,197	366	26,689	3·75
1901	11,328,918	568	19,945	+5·01

NOTE.—Column 2 represents the total husbands and wives enumerated. Column 3 the annual average for the five years in which the Census year is the middle year.

TABLE VI.

Decrees granted for Judicial Separation, 1858–1909.

Number granted on Husbands' and Wives' Petitions.

Year.	Decrees granted			Year.	Decrees granted
	On Husbands' Petitions.	On Wives' Petitions.	Total.		On Husbands' Petitions.	On Wives' Petitions.	Total.
1858	2	39	41	1885	2	40	42
1859	3	30	33	1886	1	53	54
1860	1	10	11	1887	2	48	50
1861	—	14	14	1888	—	39	39
1862	—	16	16	1889	4	40	44
1863	—	11	11	1890	1	38	39
1864	4	21	25	1891	—	18	18
1865	2	26	28	1892	—	33	33
1866	1	19	20	1893	4	21	25
1867	2	24	26	1894	1	23	24
1868	1	22	23
1869	3	20	23	1895		27	27
1870	4	21	25
1871	3	32	35	1896	2	42	44
1872	6	17	23	1897	2	25	27
1873	4	27	31	1898	—	24	24
1874	5	33	38	1899	—	34	34
1875	2	33	35	1900	—	19	19
1876	3	38	41	1901	—	27	27
1877	3	49	52	1902	—	29	29
1878	5	38	43	1903	—	18	18
1879	2	34	36	1904	1	21	22
1880	5	52	57	1905	—	25	25
1881	6	29	35	1906	1	19	20
1882	3	37	40	1907	2	29	31
1883	3	46	49	1908	1	27	28
1884	—	31	31	1909	1	24	25

TABLE VII.

Decrees granted for Judicial Separation, 1858–1909.

Percentage of Petitions successful.

Year.	Percentage.		Year.	Percentage.		Year.	Percentage.
	Husbands' Petitions.	Wives' Petitions.		Husbands' Petitions.	Wives' Petitions.		Husbands' Petitions.	Wives' Petitions.
1858	33·33	48·15	1876	23·08	30·40	1894	14·29	23·96
1859	50·00	44·78	1877	33·33	41·18
1860	100·00	19·61	1878	35·71	38·38	1895	24·55
1861	—	32·56	1879	28·57	34·34
1862	—	32·65	1880	50·00	37·96	1896	66·67	43·75
1863	—	27·50	1881	85·71	26·36	1897	100·00	26·04
1864	44·44	32·81	1882	42·86	34·91	1898	—	23·53
1865	40·00	53·06	1883	50·00	38·02	1899	—	43·59
1866	33·33	32·76	1884	—	27·68	1900	—	22·09
1867	25·00	35·82	1885	40·00	33·90	1901	—	28·42
1868	12·50	35·48	1886	14·29	42·06	1902	—	30·21
1869	37·50	27·03	1887	50·00	33·80	1903	—	20·93
1870	44·44	29·17	1888	—	30·23	1904	20·00	21·65
1871	60·00	45·07	1889	40·00	34·78	1905	—	28·74
1872	100·00	24·29	1890	16·67	34·23	1906	50·00	25·68
1873	57·14	38·03	1891	—	21·43	1907	66·67	35·37
1874	62·50	40·24	1892	—	31·13	1908	100·00	40·91
1875	28·57	33·33	1893	66·67	20·19	1909	25·00	26·97

TABLE VIII.

DECREES GRANTED FOR JUDICIAL SEPARATION, 1858–1909.

Proportion per 100,000 of estimated Population.

Year.	Proportion of Decrees per 100,000 of Population.	Year.	Proportion of Decrees per 100,000 of Population.	Year.	Proportion of Decrees per 100,000 of Population.
1858	·21	1876	·17	1894	·08
1859	·17	1877	·21	1895	·09
1860	·06	1878	·17	1896	·14
1861	·07	1879	·14	1897	·09
1862	·08	1880	·22	1898	·08
1863	·05	1881	·13	1899	·11
1864	·12	1882	·15	1900	·06
1865	·13	1883	·18	1901	·08
1866	·09	1884	·12	1902	·09
1867	·12	1885	·15	1903	·05
1868	·10	1886	·20	1904	·07
1869	·10	1887	·18	1905	·07
1870	·11	1888	·14	1906	·06
1871	·15	1889	·15	1907	·09
1872	·10	1890	·14	1908	·08
1873	·13	1891	·06	1909	·07
1874	·16	1892	·11
1875	·15	1893	·08

TABLE IX.

STATEMENT SHOWING THE PROPORTION OF JUDICIAL SEPARATIONS TO MARRIED POPULATION AT EACH CENSUS YEAR FROM 1861 TO 1901.

Census Year.	Enumerated Married Population.	Number of Judicial Separations	Married Population to each Separation.	Number of Separations to 100,000 of Married Population.
1861	6,917,395	17	406,906	·25
1871	7,831,890	27	290,070	·34
1881	8,814,860	43	204,997	+ ·49
1891	9,768,197	32	305,256	·33
1901	11,328,918	25	453,157	− ·22

NOTE.—Column 2 represents the total husbands and wives enumerated. Column 3 the annual average for the five years in which the Census year is the middle year.

TABLE X.

INDEX NUMBERS SHOWING THE NUMBER OF DECREES NISI GRANTED FOR DISSOLUTION OF MARRIAGE AND JUDICIAL SEPARATION.

The Number for 1858 being taken as 100.

Year.	Dissolution of Marriage.	Judicial Separation.	Year.	Dissolution of Marriage.	Judicial Separation.
1858 - - -	100	100	1907 - - -	334	76
1904 - - -	354	54	1908 - - -	375	68
1905 - - -	348	61	1909 - - -	383	61
1906 - - -	363	49

TABLE XI.

SEPARATION ORDERS GRANTED BY MAGISTRATES.

	1907.	1908.	1909.
Orders granted to wives under Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, section 5, and Licensing Act, 1902, section 5 (2) - - - - - - - -	6,734	6,697	5,009
Orders granted to husbands under Licensing Act, 1902, section 5 (2) - - - - - - - -	273	289	218
	7,007	6,986	5,227

TABLE XII.

JUDICIAL SEPARATION—DECREES NISI GRANTED BY HIGH COURT AND SEPARATION ORDERS GRANTED BY COURTS OF SUMMARY JURISDICTION.

	Total Decrees for Separation.		Total Orders granted by Courts of Summary Jurisdiction.
	Number.	Proportion per 100,000 of Population.	Number.	Proportion per 100,000 of Population.
1907	31	0·89	7,007	20·05
1908	28	0·79	6,986	19·76
1909	25	0·70	5,227	14·62

TABLE XIIa.

STATEMENT SHOWING THE NUMBER OF SEPARATION ORDERS GRANTED IN EACH COUNTY BY COURTS OF SUMMARY JURISDICTION AND PROPORTIONS PER 100,000 OF ESTIMATED POPULATION IN EACH OF THE YEARS 1907, 1908, AND 1909.

County.	1907.	1908.	1909.	Proportion per 100,000 Population.
				1907.	1908.	1909.
ENGLAND.
Bedford	25	12	15	13·95	6·65	8·25
Berks	15	23	22	5·67	5·63	8·19
Bucks	14	20	7	6·84	6·79	3·37
Cambridge	6	10	7	3·23	5·38	3·76
Chester	203	164	128	22·68	18·12	13·99
Cornwall	15	13	13	4·66	4·04	4·03
Cumberland	16	23	23	5·95	8·54	8·53
Derby	106	114	89	16·14	17·12	13·18
Devon	44	63	32	6·43	9·15	4·62
Dorset	9	7	12	4·31	3·34	5·69
Durham	493	471	404	37·86	35·65	32·57
Essex	48	58	58	3·75	4·42	4·32
Gloucester	151	160	126	20·22	21·24	16·59
Hereford	7	10	4	6·15	8·79	3·52
Hertford	15	19	19	5·36	6·70	6·61
Hunts	—	5	2	—	9·27	3·71
Kent	92	79	66	8·77	7·43	6·12
Lancaster	1,877	1,822	1,393	39·87	38·27	24·37
Leicester	60	49	33	12·53	10·09	6·70
Lincoln	61	67	62	11·74	12·82	11·78
London	832	802	610	17·49	16·72	12·62
Middlesex	93	85	60	9·75	8·67	5·69
Monmouth	36	33	21	11·08	10·02	6·29
Norfolk	45	51	48	9·29	10·49	9·85
Northampton	39	30	23	10·82	8·23	6·24
Northumberland	159	149	98	23·81	21·96	14·24
Nottingham	230	191	137	41·00	33·59	23·77
Oxford	18	11	7	9·69	5·93	3·77
Rutland	—	2	2	—	10·44	10·05
Salop	19	20	12	7·82	8·20	4·91
Somerset	19	29	19	4·31	6·56	4·29
Southampton	73	55	54	8·37	6·22	6·02
Stafford	370	353	309	27·63	26·03	22·50
Suffolk	14	21	18	3·66	5·46	4·66
Surrey	55	76	65	7·43	10·06	8·45
Sussex	59	58	39	9·21	8·97	5·97
Warwick	266	268	122	26·34	26·24	11·81
Westmorland	3	5	4	4·71	7·86	6·30
Wilts	17	15	6	6·10	5·36	2·13
Worcester	83	78	51	16·63	15·40	9·92
York, East Riding	81	96	50	23·15	12·21	11·77
York, North Riding	73	90	94	23·03	23·91	19·48
York, West Riding	885	913	588	29·85	29·50	19·31
Total, England	6,726	6,620	4,952	20·33	19·78	14·63
WALES.
Anglesey	10	3	8	17·47	5·84	15·54
Brecon	7	12	6	12·43	21·17	10·52
Cardigan	—	7	2	—	11·71	3·35
Carmarthen	15	8	14	10·78	5·72	9·96
Carnarvon	13	19	6	9·89	14·34	4·49
Denbigh	9	19	10	6·41	13·40	6·98
Flint	10	12	8	11·79	14·06	9·31
Glamorgan	202	268	202	20·74	27·00	19·97
Merioneth	1	3	5	2·05	6·14	10·24
Montgomery	4	3	3	7·51	5·66	5·68
Pembroke	9	9	11	10·27	10·27	12·56
Radnor	1	3	—	4·10	12·22	—
Total, Wales	281	366	275	15·18	19·53	14·50
Total, England and Wales	7,007	6,986	5,227	20·05	19·76	14·62

TABLE XIII.

Duration of Marriage of Parties in Matrimonial Suits commenced in each Year, from 1897 to 1909.

Duration of Marriage.	1899.		1900.		1901.		1902.		1903.		Annual Average, 1899–1903.		1904.		1905.		1906.		1907.		1908.		Annual Average, 1904–08.		1909.
	H.	W.	H.	W.	H.	W.	H.	W.	H.	W.	H.	W.	H.	W.	H.	W.	H.	W.	H.	W.	H.	W.	H.	W.	H.	W.
Less than one year	1	—	—	—	—	2	1	1	3	3	1	1	6	6	1	5	2	1	2	1	2	1	3	3	1	—
One year and less than 2	16	18	9	9	10	17	5	10	11	12	10	13	7	8	10	9	8	13	6	7	11	10	8	10	13	11
2 years „ „ „ 5	41	47	50	54	67	43	77	41	57	49	58	47	44	57	59	67	72	62	51	49	64	58	58	59	66	50
5 „ „ „ „ 10	124	103	125	98	163	99	207	141	160	121	156	113	151	116	168	137	152	135	133	153	169	145	155	137	137	155
10 „ „ „ „ 20	184	143	159	155	225	173	257	179	210	194	207	169	207	170	169	193	183	175	189	181	191	227	188	189	204	227
20 „ „ upwards	34	59	38	50	41	58	61	70	62	80	47	63	54	61	46	53	50	72	53	79	51	81	50	69	54	65
Unknown	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	400	370	381	366	506	392	608	442	503	459	479	406	469	418	453	464	467	459	434	470	488	522	462	467	475	508
	770		747		898		1,050		962		885		887		917		926		904		1,010		929		983

Note.—"H" signifies husband's petition. "W" signifies wife's petition.

TABLE XIV.

Age and Condition of Parties before Marriage.

Condition of Parties.	1899.		1900.		1901.		1902.		1903.		Annual Average, 1899–1903.		1904.		1905.		1906.		1907.		1908.		Annual Average, 1904–08.		1909.
	Under 21.	21 and above.	Under 21.	21 and above.	Under 21.	21 and above.	Under 21.	21 and above.	Under 21.	21 and above.	Under 21.	21 and above.	Under 21.	21 and above.	Under 21.	21 and above.	Under 21.	21 and above.	Under 21.	21 and above.	Under 21.	21 and above.	Under 21.	21 and above.	Under 21.	21 and above.
Bachelor	58	666	37	645	48	787	77	920	69	882	58	780	47	833	48	835	45	828	58	789	52	899	50	837	51	882
Spinster	214	530	204	491	243	616	350	662	287	661	260	592	239	638	246	642	240	646	270	595	232	725	246	649	252	683
Widower	1	44	—	54	1	55	1	51	—	10	1	43	—	5	—	29	—	47	—	40	—	42	—	33	—	43
Widow	—	23	—	38	2	23	—	34	—	12	—	26	—	8	1	24	—	31	—	22	1	36	—	24	2	32
Divorced Husband	—	—	—	2	—	4	—	2	—	1	—	2	—	—	—	1	—	2	—	8	—	9	—	4	—	6
„ Wife	—	2	1	6	1	7	—	1	—	2	—	3	—	—	—	—	—	5	—	8	—	8	—	4	—	13
Unknown	—	2	—	16	1	8	1	1	—	—	—	5	—	4	—	8	—	8	—	18	—	16	—	11	—	2
	273	1,267	242	1,252	296	1,500	429	1,671	356	1,568	319	1,451	286	1,488	295	1,539	285	1,567	328	1,480	285	1,735	296	1,562	305	1,661
Total	1,540		1,494		1,796		2,100		1,924		1,770		1,774		1,834		1,852		1,808		2,020		1,858		1,966

TABLE XV.

Number of Children of Marriage.

Number of Children.	1899.		1900.		1901.		1902.		1903.		Annual Average, 1899–1903.		1904.		1905.		1906.		1907.		1908.		Annual Average, 1904–08.		1909.
	H.	W.	H.	W.	H.	W.	H.	W.	H.	W.	H.	W.	H.	W.	H.	W.	H.	W.	H.	W.	H.	W.	H.	W.	H.	W.
No children	175	147	167	156	188	166	230	185	183	170	188	165	178	147	180	167	201	161	169	182	198	235	185	178	213	197
One child	97	83	80	84	129	91	140	115	105	133	110	101	110	116	114	137	120	127	91	128	119	136	111	129	104	137
Two children	58	57	59	53	93	57	98	62	76	75	77	61	78	82	73	86	73	80	84	83	86	67	79	80	75	89
Three to six children	66	69	68	63	86	67	131	65	128	70	96	67	97	66	83	69	62	78	84	70	82	71	82	71	80	79
Above six children	4	14	6	9	10	11	9	15	11	11	8	12	6	7	3	5	9	12	6	7	3	11	5	8	3	6
Number unknown	—	—	1	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	1	—	—	—	2	—	1	—	—
Total	400	370	381	366	506	392	608	442	503	459	479	406	469	418	453	464	467	459	434	470	488	522	462	467	475	508
	770		747		898		1,050		962		885		887		917		926		904		1,010		929		983

NOTE.—"H." signifies husband's petition. "W." signifies wife's petition.

TABLE XVA.

Statement of the Number of Petitions presented by Persons apparently belonging to the Working Classes (compiled from the Occupations of Husbands at Date of Marriage).

Classification of Occupation at Date of Marriage.	Number.
	1907.	1908.
Agriculture	3	5
Mining and Quarrying	12	18
Manufactures, &c.:—
Building, &c.	21	5
Metal Work	14	17
Furniture and Wood	5	22
Textile Fabric	10	12
Clothing	13	17
Brewing	2	—
Food	—	1
Printing	4	3
Labourers	17	24
Miscellaneous	41	32

Classification of Occupation at Date of Marriage.	Number.
	1907.	1908.
Navigation and Fishing:—
Seamen	9	2
Fishermen	3	2
Others	6	6
Inland Transport:—
Railways	13	16
Road	14	17
Postal Employés	1	3
Others
Trade:—	3	2
Shop Assistants, &c.	3	5
Porters, Messengers	7	5
Waiter, Barman, &c.	4	6

Classification of Occupation at Date of Marriage.	Number.
	1907.	1908.
Trade—continued.
Dealers in Articles of Food	6	1
Dealers in Articles of Clothes	—	1
Other Dealers	1	2
Domestic Service	10	12
Prison Warder	—	1
Soldier and Sailor	29	20
Policeman	7	4
Out of Employment and Miscellaneous.	3	3
Prisoner	—	2
Total	261	266

NOTE.—The proportion of Petitions presented by members of the working classes to the total Petitions are as follows:—1907—28·87; 1908—26·33.

TABLE XVI.

Divorces, 1887 to 1908, in certain Countries.

Country.	1887.	1888.	1889.	1890.	1891.	1892.	1893.	1894.	1895.	1896.	1897.	1898.	1899.	1900.	1901.	1902.	1903.	1904.	1905.	1906.	1907.	1908.
Austria - -	111	86	108	106	116	129	130	133	136	139	150	169	156	163	187	222	206	285	262	290	—*	—*
Belgium - -	292	356	379	373	402	441	497	477	492	548	625	747	563	690	821	703	734	932	901	618	—*	—*
Bulgaria - -	204	234	263	238	279	259	283	365	355	404	430	472	380	292	—*	—*	—*	—*	—*	—*	—*	—*
Denmark - -	—*	—*	—*	—*	—*	—*	—*	—*	—*	316	344	349	368	381	375	481	449	473	549	589	—	—
England and Wales	390	392	370	400	342	354	362	381	478	486	583	436	525	494	601	608	614	634	623	650	598	672
France - -	5,797	5,482	6,249	6,557	6,431	7,035	6,937	7,893	7,700	7,879	7,999	8,100	8,042	7,820	8,841	9,431	10,186	10,850	10,860	—	—	—
Germany - -	6,357	6,618	6,457	6,220	6,677	6,513	6,694	7,502	8,326	8,460	8,878	9,008	9,433	7,928	7,964	9,069	9,933	10,868	11,147	12,180	—	—
Hungary - -	1,000	1,165	1,128	1,137	1,107	1,305	1,339	1,433	1,334	420	694	1,412	1,940	2,100	2,541	2,659	2,905	3,626	3,638	—	—	—
Ireland (Private Acts).	—	1	—	—	—	1	1	2	2	3	2	2	—	—	—	—	—	2	1	1 5	5	—
Netherlands, The -	333	409	360	383	414	354	405	391	473	463	453	509	484	551	561	570	610	642	717	821	—	—
Norway - -	28	33	42	40	58	76	102	109	114	97	94	140	123	106	138	139	185	183	235	208	—	—
Roumania - -	722	758	879	816	803	665	869	880	938	986	1,079	1,083	1,194	1,252	1,329	1,301	1,670	1,800	—	—	—	—
Scotland - -	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	145	165	142	161	216	192	187	170	169	197	191
Servia - - -	297	357	284	194	173	306	285	269	316	290	273	268	329	305	263	393	387	426	—	—	—	—
Swedeu - -	233	252	240	296	276	316	293	292	305	349	349	409	387	405	359	391	418	442	448	534	—	—
Switzerland - -	925	841	865	880	877	881	903	932	897	1,057	1,011	1,018	1,091	1,025	1,027	1,105	1,182	1,243	1,206	1,343	1,494	—
United States -	27,919	28,669	31,735	33,461	35,540	36,579	37,468	37,568	40,387	42,937	44,699	47,849	51,437	55,751	60,984	61,480	64,925	66,199	67,976	72,062	—	—

* Figures not available.

Note to Table XVI.—There are discrepancies in the returns as to some countries. The figures for Germany include separations; those for France are the decrees granted by the Courts, not those inscribed upon the marriage record. Some of the figures appear to include annulments.

TABLE XVII.

Statement showing Quinquennial Averages for Divorces in certain Countries for the Years 1887–1891 and 1902–1906.

Country.	Annual Average, 1887 to 1891.	Annual Average, 1902 to 1906.	Increase per Cent.	Country.	Annual Average, 1887 to 1891.	Annual Average, 1902 to 1906.	Increase per Cent.
Austria - - - -	105·4	253·0	140·0	The Netherlands - - -	379·8	672·0	76·9
Belgium - - - -	360·4	777·6	115·8	Norway - - - -	40·2	190·0	372·6
Bulgaria - - - -	243·6	395·6*	62·4	Servia - - - -	261·0	402·0	54·0
Denmark - - - -	360·5†	488·0	35·4	Roumania - - - -	795·6	1,590·3	99·9
England and Wales - - -	378·8	625·8	65·2	Scotland - - - -	166‡	183‡	10·4
France - - - -	6,103·2	10,331·8	69·3	Sweden - - - -	259·4	446·6	72·2
Germany - - - -	6,465·8	10,639·4	64·5	Switzerland - - - -	877·6	1,215·8	38·5
Hungary - - - -	1,107·4	3,207·0	189·6	United States - - - -	31,464·8	66,528·4	111·4

* Average for 1896 to 1900. † Average for 1897 to 1900. ‡ Averages for 1898 to 1902 and 1904 to 1908.

TABLE XVIII.

Divorces per 100,000 of Population.

Country.	1887.	1888.	1889.	1890.	1891.	1892.	1893.	1894.	1895.	1896.	1897.	1898.	1899.	1900.	1901.	1902.	1903.	1904.	1905.	1906.	1907.	1908.
Austria	—*	—*	—*	—*	—*	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	—*	—*	—*	—*	—*
Belgium	5	6	6	6	7	7	8	8	8	8	9	11	8	10	12	10	11	13	13	—*	—*	—*
Denmark	—*	—*	—*	—*	—*	—*	—*	—*	—*	14	15	15	15	16	15	19	18	19	21	23	—*	—*
England	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	2	2	2	1	2	2	2	2	2	2	2	2	2	2
France	15	14	16	17	17	18	18	21	20	20	21	21	21	20	23	24	26	28	28	—*	—*	—*
Germany	13	14	13	13	13	13	13	15	16	16	17	17	17	14	14	16	17	18	19	—*	—*	—*
Hungary	6	7	7	7	6	7	8	8	7	2	4	8	10	11	13	14	15	18	18	—*	—*	—*
Netherlands	8	9	8	8	9	8	9	8	10	9	9	10	9	11	11	11	11	12	13	—*	—*	—*
Norway	1	2	2	2	3	4	5	5	6	5	4	7	6	5	6	6	8	8	—*	—*	—*	—*
Roumania	14	15	17	—	—	12	16	16	17	17	19	18	20	21	22	21	27	28	—*	—*	—*	—*
Scotland	—*	—*	—*	—*	—*	—*	—*	—*	—*	—*	—*	3	4	3	4	5	4	4	4	4	4	4
Servia*	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Sweden	5	5	5	6	6	7	6	6	6	7	7	8	8	8	7	8	8	8	—*	—*	—*	—*
Switzerland	32	29	30	30	30	29	30	30	29	34	32	32	33	31	31	33	35	36	35	38	—*	—*
United States	47	48	52	53	55	56	56	55	58	61	62	65	69	73	79	78	81	81	82	86	—*	—*

Note.—Less than 1 per 100,000 not given.

* Figures not available.

TABLE XIX.

United States.—Divorces—Percentage of Increase.

	Increase over preceding 5-year Period.		Increase over preceding 5-year Period.
1902–1906	27·6 per cent.	1882–1886	31·4 per cent.
1897–1901	33·7 „	1887–1881	30·3 „
1892–1896	23·9 „	1872–1876	27·9 „
1887–1891	34·1 „	1867–1871

TABLE XX

Divorces in various States and Territories of the United States.

Rank according to Annual Number of Divorces							Annual Average Number of Divorces
Per 100,000 Married Population.		Per 100,000 Population.					Per 100,000 Married Population.		Per 100,000 Population.
1890.	1900.	1870.	1880.	1890.	1900.		1890.	1900.	1870.	1880.	1890.	1900.
3	1	4	11	3	1	Washington	316	513	88	75	109	184
2	2	7	2	2	2	Montana	430	497	73	125	139	167
1	3	12	1	1	3	Colorado	561	409	60	138	197	158
9	4	28	18	9	5	Arkansas	269	399	24	53	90	136
10	5	31	20	14	7	Texas	253	391	21	49	82	131
4	6	6	7	4	6	Oregon	312	368	80	92	108	134
8	7	1	4	11	11	Wyoming	272	361	99	111	86	118
7	8	8	13	5	4	Indiana	277	355	69	70	104	142
6	9	9	17	8	9	Idaho	280	347	67	58	93	120
33	10	—	—	34	8	Okahama	122	346	—	—	46	129
19	11	38	23	21	9	Arizona	201	344	10	47	67	120
38	12	—	—	39	13	Indian Territory	98	326	—	—	33	113
5	13	1	5	9	15	Nevada	306	315	99	106	97	111
11	14	14	9	12	17	California	247	297	52	84	84	108
13	15	16	26	12	16	Kansas	226	286	51	44	84	109
15	16	11	10	10	12	Maine	212	282	61	78	88	117
18	17	23	29	19	20	Missouri	202	281	29	40	71	103
17	17	3	6	15	18	Rhode Island	203	281	89	93	76	105
14	19	10	3	17	24	Utah	225	274	62	114	74	92
12	20	13	8	6	14	New Hampshire	240	272	53	85	100	112
23	21	26	21	24	22	South Dacota	181	270	25	48	65	95
32	22	48	25	33	27	North Dacota	135	268	—	46	47	88
16	23	16	14	16	21	Illinois	307	267	51	68	75	100
21	24	28	30	26	26	Tennessee	189	261	24	38	62	89
24	25	19	12	18	19	Michigan	179	257	47	72	72	104
22	26	18	16	21	23	Iowa	183	246	49	60	67	93
25	27	25	31	27	28	Kentucky	172	237	28	35	58	84
26	28	21	21	25	25	Ohio	171	231	37	48	64	91
28	29	30	18	28	30	Florida	167	226	23	53	57	79
20	29	23	27	19	29	Nebraska	199	226	29	43	71	82
30	31	36	33	32	32	Mississippi	151	225	12	30	48	74
28	32	38	35	29	34	Alabama	167	208	10	27	54	69

35	33	46	42	34	33	-	-	New Mexico	-	-	120	193	1	12	46	73
33	34	33	37	36	36	-	-	West Virginia	-	-	122	183	18	25	41	64
31	35	20	28	30	35	-	-	Wisconsin	-	-	142	180	38	41	51	65
37	36	15	23	31	31	-	-	Vermont	-	-	116	177	50	47	49	75
38	37	22	32	38	37	-		District of Columbia		-	98	162	30	31	34	58
36	38	31	35	36	38	-	-	Minnesota	-	-	119	161	21	27	41	55
26	39	5	15	23	39	-	-	Connecticut	-	-	171	130	84	61	66	50
40	40	44	45	41	41	-	-	Louisiana	-	-	91	127	5	10	29	41
41	41	26	33	40	40	-	-	Massachusetts	-	-	85	124	25	30	32	47
43	42	43	44	45	43	-	-	Virginia	-	-	72	117	6	11	22	38
45	43	36	42	43	42	-	-	Maryland	-	-	69	114	12	12	24	40
42	44	33	38	42	44	-	-	Pennsylvania	-	-	75	94	18	21	27	35
43	45	38	40	43	45	-	-	Georgia	-	-	72	78	10	14	24	26
49	46	45	47	49	46	-	-	North Carolina	-	-	37	75	3	6	12	24
47	47	41	41	46	47	-	-	New Jersey	-	-	46	60	9	13	18	23
48	47	35	39	48	47	-	-	New York	-	-	45	60	16	16	17	23
46	49	42	45	46	49	-	-	Delaware	-	-	50	43	7	10	18	16
50	50	47	48	—	—	-	-	South Carolina	-	-	—	—	—	1	—	—

TABLE XXI.

AUSTRALASIA.—DECREES OF DIVORCE.

——	1887.	1888.	1889.	1890.	1891.	1892.	1893.	1894.	1895.	1896.	1897.	1898.	1899.	1900.	1901.	1902.	1903.	1904.	1905.	1906.	1907.	1908.	1909.
New South Wales	29	41	56	55	66	102	305	311	299	233	245	244	230	216	252	245	206	216	176	175	223	195	275
Victoria -	18	28	22	40	99	91	85	81	85	106	117	87	105	93	83	109	101	140	136	123	134	151	138
Queensland -	—	6	11	8	5	6	5	6	4	3	10	7	10	12	14	6	8	13	5	14	12	11	16
South Australia -	3	2	6	2	5	9	8	5	5	6	3	7	11	7	6	2	10	4	6	1	11	8	12
Western Australia	—	1	1	3	2	1	1	1	2	1	4	3	3	16	12	8	10	16	11	18	16	19	13
Tasmania -	—	4	3	2	3	3	6	5	3	3	4	2	4	4	11	3	3	2	2	5	—	7	12
New Zealand -	16	32	17	21	20	18	25	20	18	36	33	31	46	85	101	90	124	99	114	125	147	171	163

TABLE XXII.

AUSTRALASIA.—DIVORCES PER 100,000 OF POPULATION.

——	1887.	1888.	1889.	1890.	1891.	1892.	1893.	1894.	1895.	1896.	1897.	1898.	1899.	1900.	1901.	1902.	1903.	1904.	1905.	1906.
New South Wales	3	4	5	5	6	9	25	25	24	18	19	18	17	16	18	17	14	15	11	11
Victoria	2	3	2	4	9	8	7	7	7	9	10	7	9	8	7	9	8	12	11	10
Queensland	—	2	3	2	1	1	1	1	1	1	2	1	2	2	3	1	2	2	1	2
South Australia	1	1	2	1	2	3	2	1	1	2	1	2	3	2	2	1	3	1	2	—
Western Australia	—	2	2	6	4	2	2	1	2	1	2	2	2	9	6	4	4	7	4	7
Tasmania	—	3	2	1	2	2	4	3	2	2	2	1	2	2	6	2	2	1	1	—
New Zealand	3	5	3	3	3	3	4	3	3	5	5	4	6	11	13	11	16	13	14	17

TABLE XXIII.

AUSTRALASIA.—JUDICIAL SEPARATIONS.

——	1887.	1888.	1889.	1890.	1891.	1892.	1893.	1894.	1895.	1896.	1897.	1898.	1899.	1900.	1901.	1902.	1903.	1904.	1905.	1906.	1907.	1908.	1909.
New South Wales	1	2	4	4	7	11	9	14	11	8	13	17	17	14	20	21	14	8	15	10	14	15	12
Victoria	5	1	3	—	--	1	7	2	—	2	—	—	2	—	—	—	—	1	1	2	—	1	1
Queensland	1	—	—	2	1	—	2	—	—	2	1	—	1	1	—	—	1	1	1	3	1	2	—
South Australia	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	—	1	—	1	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	1
Western Australia	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	1	—	1	—	—	—	1
Tasmania	—	—	1	—	—	1	—	—	1	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1
New Zealand	1	—	1	3	3	1	1	4	5	2	1	2	16	3	1	—	3	2	—	1	1	3	—

TABLE XXIV.

CANADA.—DECREES OF DIVORCE.

——	1887.	1888.	1889.	1890.	1891.	1892.	1893.	1894.	1895.	1896.	1897.	1898.	1899.	1900.	1901.	1902.	1903.	1904.	1905.	1906.	1907.	1908.	1909.
Ontario	2	2	3	2	4	1	3	5	3	—	1	2	2	2	2	2	2	5	2	10	3	8	8
Quebec	3	1	1	—	—	1	4	1	—	—	—	1	1	1	—	—	1	1	3	3	1	—	4
N.W. Territories	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	—	—	1	—	2	1	—	—	2
Manitoba	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	2	—	2	—	1	—	2
Nova Scotia	1	3	3	4	3	3	5	1	5	6	2	2	5	1	10	9	8	6	6	5	7	4	7
New Brunswick	3	1	6	3	—	5	2	—	5	1	—	5	3	1	—	1	4	2	2	1	3	5	6
British Columbia	1	2	2	3	3	3	1	2	—	3	3	6	2	4	7	3	4	5	18	17	9	12	22
Prince Edward's Island	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—

APPENDIX IV.

BILLS OF COSTS IN WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION CASES SUPPLIED BY MR. GOUGH AS REQUESTED IN QUESTION 3376.

No. 1.

Applicant's Costs ordered to be taxed on Scale "A."

1909.		£ s. d.	£ s. d.
	Instructions to sue		0 3 4
	Letter before action		0 3 6
	Preparing particulars of claim		0 6 0
	Attending to enter		0 3 4
	Notice to produce and copy		0 3 0
	Examining and taking minutes of evidence—applicant and two witnesses		0 6 0
Sept. 10.	Attending court, conducting case when judgment given for 3*l.* and costs ordered to be taxed on scale "A"		0 15 0
	Drawing bill of costs and copy		0 1 0
	Attending for appointment to tax		0 2 0
	Attending taxation		0 3 4
	Witnesses:
£ s. d.	Miss Gertrude May Randall—
0 4 0	Applicant, attendance and mileage	0 7 6
	Dr. Jamison, Tottenham Hospital	1 1 0
	Mileage	0 2 0
0 4 6	Mr. Blake, High Cross Road, Tottenham, assistant	0 7 6
	Mileage	0 1 0
0 8 6		1 19 0	2 6 6
			1 19 0
			4 5 6
	Taxed off		0 8 6
			3 17 0
	Taxing fee		0 10 0
			4 7 0

No. 2.

Costs of Applicant under Award. Scale "B."

1909.		£ s. d.
Aug. 20.	Letter before action	0 6 6
Sept. 17.	Instructions to apply for an arbitrator	0 6 8
	Preparing form application and particulars	0 7 0
	Attending filing same	0 6 8
	Notice to produce	0 4 0
	The like to admit	0 4 0
	Service	0 1 6
	Perusing respondents' notice to produce	0 5 0
£ s. d.	The like to admit	0 5 0
0 6 8	Attending inspecting respondents' documents	0 6 8
0 6 8	Attending respondents—inspecting documents	0 6 8
0 1 8	Perusing answers	0 5 0
0 1 8	Perusing amended answers	0 5 0
	Minutes of evidence—one witness	0 3 4
	Copy documents, folios 3	0 1 0
Oct. 25.	Attending at the court—conducting case without counsel	1 1 0
Nov. 22.	Attending to hear deferred judgment	0 6 8
0 3 4	Drawing award	0 3 4
0 3 4	Attending lodging	0 3 4
	Drawing bill of costs, folios 4	0 2 8
	Copy	0 1 4
0 3 4	Attending obtaining appointment to tax	0 6 8
	Attending taxation	0 6 8
	Letters	0 5 0
1 6 8		6 7 8
	Taxing fee	0 10 0
		6 17 8
	Taxed off	1 6 8
		5 11 0

No. 3.

Applicant's Costs to be taxed under Scale "B."

1907.		£ s. d.	£ s. d.
Feb. 5.	Letter before action		0 3 6
	Instructions to sue		0 6 8
	Preparing particulars of claim and copies		0 12 0
	Fair copy particulars for use of judge		0 2 0
£ s. d.	Attending issuing arbitration		0 6 8
0 3 4	Attending respondents' Insurance Co. on the telephone on their requesting examination of applicant		0 3 4
	Attending applicant thereon and advising him to submit himself for examination again		0 6 8
0 3 6	Attending respondents' Insurance Co. and arranging an appointment for applicant to call on their doctor. Writing applicant instructing
June 1.	him to attend appointment		0 3 6
0 3 4	Perusing respondents' answer herein		0 6 8
	Attending applicant thereon		0 6 8
0 6 8	Attending him and arranging for him to attend at Dr. Brown's surgery to be examined		0 6 8
1 1 0	Paid Dr. Brown's fee for examination and report	3 3 0
June 3.	Attending issuing subpœna for attendance of Dr. Borland		0 3 0
0 6 8	Attending to serve him therewith when we were informed that he was away in Scotland and would not be returning until the middle of June		0 6 8
0 3 4	Attending respondents' solicitors on the telephone and requesting them to consent to an adjournment of the case, which they agreed to do		0 3 4
0 3 4	Attending them with consent on their signing same		0 3 4
0 6 8	Attending at the office of the court and filing consent		0 6 8
	Instructions to counsel to advise on evidence		0 3 4
	Paid his fee and clerk	1 3 6
0 4 0	Drawing fair copy notice amending applicant's particulars herein		0 4 0
0 6 8	Attending filing same at the court		0 6 8
0 1 0	Fair copy for respondents' solicitors		0 1 0
0 2 6	Attending serving them therewith		0 2 6
0 5 0	Attending Mr. Odger, senr., arranging for his attendance at the court without a subpœna		0 5 0
0 5 0	The like attendance on Dr. Brown		0 5 0
	Service of subpœna on Dr. Borland		0 2 6
	Instructions for brief		1 11 6
0 5 0	Drawing same, folios 35		1 15 0
0 1 8	Fair copy same for Mr. P. T. Blackwell, folios 35		0 11 8
	Fair copy following documents to accompany brief
	Particulars of claim		0 2 0
	Notice amending particulars		0 1 0
	Respondents' answer, folios 4		0 1 4
	Correspondence, folios 10		0 3 4
	Report of Dr. Brown, folios 3		0 1 0
0 3 4	Attending counsel with brief		0 6 8
	Paid his fee and clerk	3 5 6
	Attending arranging conference with counsel and subsequently attending thereon		0 6 8
	Paid his fee and clerk	1 6 0
July 2.	Respondents' solicitors having requested medical examination of applicant. Writing applicant to attend court at 9.45 for this purpose		0 3 6
0 2 6	Writing Dr. Borland to attend court at 9.45 so that he might attend examination		0 3 6
July 3.	Attending respondents' solicitors as to examination and attendance on applicant thereon and subsequently attending on examination of applicant by Dr. Ettles		0 6 8
	Attending respondents' solicitors again on their requesting examination by Dr. Gibbons and arranging with Dr. Borland for him to attend and attending applicant, instructing and advising him as to another examination		0 6 8
1 1 0	Paid Dr. Borland's fee for consultation and examination with Drs. Gibbons and Ettles	1 1 0
	Attending court with counsel when, after hearing the evidence, the judge made an award in favour of the applicant for 6*s.* 3*d.* per week from 1st January to 1st July, costs on "B" scale, qualifying fee for Dr. Brown, and advice on evidence		0 15 0
	Paid witnesses:—
	Applicant	0 5 0
	Travelling expenses from Leyton	0 1 0
	Mr. W. Odger, traveller	0 10 0
	Travelling expenses from Leyton	0 1 0
	Dr. Borland	1 1 0
	Travelling expenses from Walthamstow	0 1 0
	Dr. Brown	2 2 0
	Travelling expenses from Goswell Road, E.C.	0 2 6
	Drawing these costs and copy folios 14		0 9 4
	Fair copy for respondents' solicitors, folios 14		0 4 8
	Attending for and obtaining appointment to tax		0 3 4

1907. July 3.
£ s. d.		£ s. d.	£ s. d.
	Notice thereof			0 1 6
0 1 0	Copy and service on respondents' solicitors			0 2 6
	Attending taxation of costs			0 6 8
	Paid taxing fee	0 10 0
	Letters, &c.			0 5 0
5 16 6		14 12 6		14 5 10
	Disbursements	- -		14 12 6
				28 18 4
	Taxed off	- -		5 16 6
	Allowed at	- -		23 1 10

APPENDIX V.

Translation of Norwegian Divorce Law supplied by Lord Salvesen.

Law with regard to the Dissolution of Marriage.

We, Haakon, King of Norway, make known that there has been laid before Us a resolution of the Storting, duly assembled, dated 17th August 1909, in these terms :—

1. When both spouses are agreed to suspend the conjugal relations, a grant to this effect may be communicated to them, on their application, by the duly constituted authority. Before such grant is made the Commission of Conciliation, or, if both parties are agreed, the clergyman of the congregation to which they belong or the Ruling Elder (?) must have tried to effect a reconciliation between them on their personal attendance. If the spouses are residing at different places, the proceedings may take place for each of them separately. For sponses who do not reside in this Kingdom conciliation proceedings are not necessary.

2. The King may, on application of one of the spouses, make a grant authorising the suspension of the conjugal relations where the other spouse has continuously or repeatedly neglected his duty of maintenance, or has been guilty of gross or continuous violation of the duties arising from marriage, or has become addicted to the habitual misuse of alcohol or other means of intoxication, or lives a criminal life, or has repeatedly received a sentence which has involved loss of the rights of citizenship, or when there has arisen between the spouses such want of agreement or harmony as, that having regard both to the spouses as well as to the children, where such exist, it cannot reasonably be demanded that the conjugal relations shall continue.

3. A marriage may, on the application of one of the spouses, be dissolved when the other spouse, at the time when the marriage was contracted, without the knowledge of the other, has—

(a) Suffered from a physical defect which made him or her unsuited for marriage; or

(b) Suffered from epilepsy or leprosy, or a venereal disease in an infectious form; or

(c) Suffered from, or had suffered from insanity; or

(d) Had been made pregnant by some other than the husband.

The application must be made within six months after the spouse has obtained knowledge of the circumstance; and, in every case, not later than five years after the date of the marriage. Dissolution on the grounds mentioned under (a) and (b) cannot, however, be demanded after the defect has been removed, or the illness cured.

4. The marriage may, on the application of one of the sponses, be dissolved when the other spouse, during the marriage, has been guilty of—

(a) Such crimes as are dealt with in the General Criminal Code, section 155, subsection (1), 191 to 199, 202 to 209, 213 to 220; or

(b) Such crimes as are dealt with in the Criminal Code, sections 216, 217, and 223 to 225, if the crime has been committed with indecent intent; or

(c) A crime involving bodily injury (Criminal Law, section 229) of the other spouse, or of any other deliberate crime by which the other spouse suffers injury in body or in health; or

(d) Cruelty to the children, or in their presence such conduct as is dealt with in section 380 of the Criminal Code.

Provided that no spouse who has willingly assisted in or has approved of the criminal act can apply for the dissolution of the marriage on that ground.

The application must be made within six months after the spouse has obtained knowledge of the criminal act, and, at latest, within five years after it has taken place. If the criminal conduct leads to conviction, the application may be made even later than this, so long as it is within three months after the spouse has been informed of the sentence, and within one year after it has been pronounced.

5. A marriage may be dissolved on the application of one of the spouses, when the other spouse is sentenced to loss of liberty for three years or upwards, or has been repeatedly convicted under section 65 of the Criminal Law, or has been convicted repeatedly under sections 4, 5, 18, and 19 of the law with regard to vagrancy, mendicancy, and drunkenness, of 31st May 1900, in cases where the sentence authorises imprisonment with hard labour, or in a home for inebriates. Provided that the marriage cannot be dissolved at the instance of a spouse who, of his own free will, assisted in or has approved of the criminal conduct.

The application must be made within one year after the spouse has become aware of the sentence; and, at latest, within three years after the sentence has been pronounced.

6. A marriage may, on the application of one spouse, be dissolved when the other spouse, during two years, against the wishes of the first, has obstinately withdrawn from the conjugal life, and this has not later been renewed.

7. A marriage may, on the application of the spouses, be dissolved when the other spouse, according to the concurring declaration of two experts, suffer from insanity, which has lasted for at least three years, and which there is no reasonable prospect of curing.

As experts, medical men must be selected who are competent to serve as medical legal experts in questions relating to lunacy.

8. A marriage may, on the application of one of the spouses, be dissolved when they have lived separate for at least two years after a grant has been made either by the constituted authority or by the King, and the conjugal relations have not later been renewed.

Provided that the marriage may be dissolved after one year's such separation, if it is demanded by both spouses.

A marriage may, on the application of one of the spouses, be dissolved when the other, without such grant as above named, has lived separate for at least three years, and has not later renewed conjugal relations.

9. Dissolution of the marriage, in terms of sections 7 and 8, takes place by authority of the King. In other cases the application of a spouse for the dissolution of the marriage, under the provisions of this law, must be made in an action directed against the other spouse.

10. The rules laid down in the Criminal Procedure law of 1st July 1887, apply to applications for the dissolution of the marriage so far as relating to cases of crime; though an action for the dissolution of a marriage under the foregoing provisions may, if the defender is not domiciled in the Kingdom, be brought in the court of his last domicile here, or in the court of the pursuer's domicile.

11. In ordinary actions for the dissolution of marriage, the court will attempt to reconcile the parties. The court must, ex propria motu, see that the case has been fully proved, and can, with this object, put questions to the parties and require further evidence. The court is not bound by the parties' pleas or admissions. The court will be held with closed doors.

Both spouses are required to attend while the trial is being conducted; and at other times that the court may think necessary if they are living within the jurisdiction; if outside the jurisdiction, they must be cited to attend at the court of that place where they have their domicile or may be living for the time being.

If the defender does not attend, and there is reason to believe that he has not timeously obtained knowledge of the citation, or on lawful grounds has been prevented from personally attending, the court, if it does not on this ground postpone the trial, must appoint a duly qualified solicitor to act for the defender. The proceedings ought to be adjourned if it appears that the defect may be remedied or the hindrance removed in the course of a short time.

12. The judgment, by which a marriage is dissolved, takes effect only from the time when it becomes final.

When a marriage is dissolved by a judgment or grant, the wife must not enter into another marriage until 10 months have elapsed, in which she has lived completely separated from her husband. This matter, as to the time which must elapse before the wife can enter into a new marriage, ought to be expressed in the judgment or the grant.

13. On the dissolution of the marriage, as well as when it is terminated by grant, the communio bonorum ceases.

The common property ought, as a rule, to be divided equally between them.

Provided that in those cases which are dealt with under section 3, the spouse, on whose application the marriage has been dissolved, may demand that the common goods shall be divided in such a way, that each of the spouses receives what he or she has brought into communion at the date of the marriage, or has succeeded to during its continuance. If the property is not sufficient for this purpose, each of the spouses must bear a proportionate amount of loss. The regulations and laws, with regard to the division of the common property between spouses, of date, 29th June, 1888, must in every case be applied.

A precontract entered into, before a grant for the dissolution of the marriage has been made, with regard to the division of the property must, in order to become binding, be proved to the duly constituted authority.

14. In an action for the suspension of the marriage relations, the husband may be compelled to make a contribution to the wife's maintenance so long as the marriage lasts. A contract entered into before such action, with regard to such maintenance, is only binding so long as the marriage lasts. When a marriage is dissolved by grant or judgment, the husband may be compelled to make a contribution to his wife's maintenance, so long as she does not enter into a new marriage; provided that such obligation shall not be granted when the marriage is dissolved under the provisions of section 3, on the application of the husband; nor where the desertion, wholly or mainly, is attributable to misconduct on the part of the wife. In such cases the husband shall not be required to maintain her, unless on special grounds.

The contribution for maintenance shall be fixed and enforced in accordance with the rules which the law lays down with regard to the maintenance of wife and legitimate children. In fixing the amount, regard shall be had to the husband's means; and shall be made on the footing that, as far as possible, the wife is secured in an adequate maintenance—having in view the income which she herself has or may be presumed to earn for herself.

In a grant for suspension of conjugal relations, and in a grant or judgment for dissolution of marriage, the wife may, in exceptional cases, be compelled to make a contribution to the husband's maintenance when the latter is without means, and on account of illness or the like, must be regarded as unable to earn enough for his own maintenance, while the wife, owing to her having separate means, or in other ways, has secured an income which may be considered as more than sufficient for her own maintenance. Such a contribution must, in no case, be required when the marriage is dissolved on the wife's application, under the provisions of section 3; or where the dissolution of the marriage or the suspension of conjugal relations is due to fault on the part of the man. With regard to the mode of fixing and enforcing the contribution, and the duration of the liability to contribute the same rules apply as with regard to the husband's contribution to the wife's maintenance.

15. When it has been determined, in accordance with the rules with regard to the contribution for maintaining a wife and legitimate children, which of the spouses is to have the custody of the children after the conjugal relations have been suspended, or the marriage dissolved, regard must, in the first instance, be taken to the welfare of the children. Thus, they ought, especially when they are young, as a rule to follow the mother unless she be regarded as unfit to look after their upbringing. In addition, regard ought to be had to the wishes of the parents.

The parents are bound to contribute to the children's maintenance and upbringing in proportion to their means. The parent who does not fulfil his or her proportionate part of the burden for the maintenance or upbringing of a child of which he or she has the custody may be required to provide a yearly contribution for this or the other children. The contribution is fixed and enforced in accordance with the before-mentioned rules.

An agreement between the parents, with regard to the division of the children, or for the provision of maintenance, shall not prevent the duly constituted authority making other arrangements on the demand of either of the parents.

The above regulations make no change in the present rules, with regard to the obligation of parents to maintain their children, in case of necessity, in accordance with the provisions of the poor law.

16. With regard to the right of the one spouse to obtain a marriage dissolved by the judgment of the court when the other has disappeared, the provisions in the law of 12th October 1885, with regard to persons who have disappeared or are absent, shall continue to apply Provided that, at the trial of the action, the regulations of the present law—section 11—ought to be applied, so far as practicable

17. This law takes effect from 1st January next year, so that its regulations apply to the conduct and decision of applications for suspension of the conjugal relations, or for dissolutions of marriage, which are made after that date, notwithstanding that the grounds of action, wholly or partly, have arisen before the law came into force. Provided that dissolution of marriage, in terms of section 4, based on a crime committed earlier, can only take place if the act or the sentence would have given right to the dissolution of the marriage under the law as it formerly stood. In applying section 8, grants of separation a mensâ et thoro by the magistrate in Christiania, in accordance with the Instruction of 14th September 1798, section 6 (d), are to be construed as equivalent to those of a duly constituted authority.

With regard to the results flowing from the suspensions of the conjugal relations, or dissolution of the marriage with regard to the spouse himself, obligation to maintain, and the custody and maintenance of the children, the regulation contained in this law shall come into effect if the suspension or dissolution takes place after the law has come into force.

The right to enter into a new marriage, for persons whose earlier marriage is dissolved by judgment or grant, must be determined according to the regulations contained in this law, when these have come into force, even if the dissolution has taken place before that date.

18. From the date when this law comes into force the following statutes are repealed, so far as they are still valid. (Here are enumerated a list of statutes and regulations.)

For We have adopted and confirm, like as We hereby adopt and confirm this resolution as law, under Our own hand and the seal of the Kingdom.

Given at the Palace at Christiania the 20th August 1909.

HAAKON.

TRANSLATION OF EXTRACTS FROM LETTER FROM HÖIESTERETSASSESSOR BULL, CHRISTIANIA.

The Law of 28th August 1909 is exhaustive in its enumeration of the grounds of divorce. Accordingly marriage can only be dissolved by Royal Grant (section 9) in the cases which are mentioned in sections 7 and 8. In all other cases the dissolution can only be effected by judicial decree, either in conjunction with criminal proceedings (where these relate to crimes which give right to the dissolution of the marriage), or in separate civil proceedings. This latter method (a civil action) may also be selected in the case of a crime which may be the foundation of divorce, and in respect of which criminal proceedings are being or have been taken.

The grounds upon which marriage can be dissolved by a judicial decree may be grouped as follows:—

I. Where one of the spouses has been guilty of (a) adultery (Criminal Code, section 209); (b) a serious offence against decency, such as rape and the like, immoral conduct with a child below 16 years, or with one's own ward or the like, incest, unnatural offences, &c. (see the Criminal Code, sections 191–199, 202–208, and 213); (c) bigamy (section 220); (d) the contracting and transmitting, or exposing any others to an infectious sexual disease which has been contracted in consequence of immoral conduct (section 155, first paragraph); (e) the following crimes, when they are committed for immoral reasons; abduction of children and minors from the care of their parents or guardians, &c. (see sections 216 and 217 and 223–225); (f) bodily injury, but not blows or the like, which do not cause any serious injury to the person of the other spouse (see Law of 1909; 4 (c)); (g) cruelty to children, or exposing them to conditions which are clearly dangerous to their morals (see 1909 (4) (d), and Criminal Code, section 380).

In all the cases under I. it is not necessary that any penal sentence should have been pronounced. It is sufficient if any of the grounds of divorce enumerated is established.

II. When the one spouse has been sentenced (see Law 1909, section 5)—(a) for any kind of crime which results in imprisonment for three years or more; (b) to an indefinite punishment under the provisions of the Criminal Code, section 65, which applies to persons who are specially dangerous to the community or to some individual; (c) repeated acts of vagrancy or drunkenness, where the sentence authorises the convicted person to be imprisoned with hard labour, or to be confined in an inebriate home.

III. Where the one spouse, at the time the marriage was entered into, suffered from any such defect as is enumerated in the Act of 1909, section 3 (a) to (d)

The law makes no exception in the case of both spouses having been unfaithful towards each other. In such cases each of the spouses has a right to have the marriage dissolved, even if the other does not consent. (On the other hand, it will be seen from the Law of 1909 that a spouse who has connived at any of the offences enumerated in I. and II. cannot demand a dissolution of the marriage on such grounds.)

APPENDIX VI.—Returns in response to a Circular despatched to all Clerks to

Borough or Division.	1. Number of Applications made under Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, s. 5.			1. Under Licensing Act, 1902, s. 5.			2. Number of Orders made thereon. For Maintenance only.			2. For Maintenance and Separation combined.			3. Whether it has been the practice to grant Separation Orders as a matter of course, along with Maintenance Orders, or only grant the former where the safety of the Wife requires such protection?
	1907.	1908.	1909.	1907.	1908.	1909.	1907.	1908.	1909.	1907.	1908.	1909.
Liverpool	651	646	683	57	70	72	260	301	280	24	20	23	Was practice to make separation orders as a matter of course with maintenance orders, until the decision in Harriman v. Harriman. Since then in almost all the desertion cases, maintenance orders have been made without separation orders, but on other grounds separation orders granted as a matter of course.
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Cockermouth	—	—	4	1	5	—	—	—	1	—	—	2	Yes. As a matter of course when applied for.
Bradford-on-Avon P.S.D.	2	3	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	2	1	Separation orders, when made, have been combined with maintenance.
Freebridge Lynn P.S.D.	1	—	2	—	—	—	1	—	2	—	—	—	——
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Dursley and Whitminster P.S.D.	—	—	2	3	1	—	—	1	1	1	2	—	Only where safety of wife requires protection or there is some special reason.
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Warrington	—	—	60	38	42	—	—	—	1	24	14	12	Yes. Unless on application to the contrary.
P.S.D.'s of Mold, Hope, Hawarden, and Northop.	12	14	3	—	—	—	—	—	—	7	7	1	Separation orders granted as a matter of course.
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Berkeley P.S.D.	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	——
Bury	20	18	23	—	—	—	—	—	5	20	18	18	Up to recently practice to grant separation orders as a matter of course.
Hereford P.S.D.	1	2	1	—	—	—	—	1	—	1	1	—	Been the practice to grant separation orders with maintenance orders until the decision in re Harriman.
Grantham	7	4	1	—	—	—	—	—	1	2	3	—	Separations in all cases were granted, except the one in 1909.
Dacorum P.S.D. of Hertford.	5	2	3	—	—	—	—	—	—	3	3	—	It has been the practice to grant separation orders with maintenance orders.
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Chichester	—	—	1	4	2	—	1	—	—	—	2	1	Only where the safety of the wife requires it.
Folkestone	4	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	3	—	—	It has been the practice to grant separation orders as a matter of course, along with maintenance orders.

JUSTICES THROUGHOUT ENGLAND AND WALES REQUESTING REPLIES TO THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS :—

4.	5.					6.		7.	8.
Whether it is the practice to order the Maintenance Allowance to be paid through the Court or through the Police?	Proportion of Orders made on the grounds following, viz.:—					Proportion of Cases in which Parties resume Cohabitation.		Has it been proved or is there reason to suppose that the Grant of Orders of Separation leads to Immorality?	Whether in favour of the present jurisdiction of the Justices being transferred to the County Court?
	Desertion.	Cruelty.	Neglect to Maintain.	Habitual Drunkenness.	Aggravated Assault.	Before the Hearing.	After Orders have been made by the Court.
Through the court.	360	391	58	67	32	30 per cent.	50 per cent.	No	No.
	(The above figures are for the years 1907, 1908, and 1909.)
No; direct	—	1	1	—	1	6 out of 10	1 out of 3	No	Yes.
Through the police or a mutual friend of both parties.	1	(3)		—	—	—	—	No	No.
Direct to wife	3	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	No.
To wife or person nominated by wife.	2	—	1	—	2	—	2 out of 5	No evidence either way.	No.
Neither, but sometimes through the police court missionary.	19	11	4	12	5	Cannot say		No	No.
	(These figures are for the years 1907, 1908, and 1909.)
Direct	6	9	—	—	—	14	5	Aware of no specific instances.	No.
Direct	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	No reason for depriving justices of jurisdiction, but county courts should have jurisdiction in respect of divorce and concurrent jurisdiction in respect of separation orders.
Through the court.	26	24	7	4	—	5 per cent.	50 per cent.	In some cases, yes.	No.
No; direct	1	2	—	—	—	Have no knowledge		Have no knowledge.	Of opinion that magistrates more competent to deal with these cases than county court judges.
Direct to wife	2	3	1	—	—	Have no knowledge		Have no knowledge.	Of opinion that power of granting divorce should not be given to justices. If divorce laws extended locally, should be vested in county courts or assize.
Direct to wife	10 per cent.	60 per cent.	30 per cent.	—	—	Unable to say		No	No.
No	50 per cent.	50 per cent.	—	—	—	25 per cent.	Not known	No	No. Justices are better judges of humanity and acquainted with real needs of the parties.
Direct	—	1	2	—	—	—	1 out of 3	"Yes," in the case of the man, but "No" in the case of the woman The latter is aware that if she commits adultery subsequent to the date of the order the same would be discharged on the application of the husband.	Yes.

Returns in response to a Circular despatched to all Clerks to Justices

Borough or Division.	1. Number of Applications made under Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, s. 5.			1. Under Licensing Act, 1902, s. 5.			2. Number of Orders made thereon. For Maintenance only.			2. For Maintenance and Separation combined.			3. Whether it has been the practice to grant Separation Orders as a matter of course, along with Maintenance Orders, or only grant the former where the safety of the Wife requires such protection?
	1907.	1908.	1909.	1907.	1908.	1909.	1907.	1908.	1909.	1907.	1908.	1909
Kesteven P.S D. of Lincoln.	—	2	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	Practice to grant separation orders along with maintenance orders.
			1907.	1908.	1909.				1907.	1908.	1909.
Stroud P.S.D. -	—	—	4	2	2	—	—	—	1	1	1	—	——
Lancaster - -	10	8	9	1	—	—	—	—	2	4	4	6	Since 1909 it has been the practice in cases of desertion to grant only maintenance orders, except in cases where wife requires protection.
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Leicester P.S.D. -	—	—	6	6	6	—	—	—	—	5	3	2	Usual practice to grant separation orders when an order has been made.
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Matlock P.S.D. -	—	—	(	10	)	—	—	—	—	(	4	)	Yes - - - - - - -
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Salisbury - -	—	—	1	6	—	—	—	—	—	1	4	—	In all cases separation orders were asked for and granted.
Market Harboro' -	—	—	—	(3	)	—	—	—	—	(	3	)	Only where safety of wife requires it.
Oldham - -	114	124	74	—	—	—	—	—	—	112	112	73	Orders invariably made for maintenance and separation combined.
Bulmer P.S.D. of N.R. of Yorks.	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	——
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Buxton - -	—	—	(	3	)	—	(	2	)	(	3	)	Separation orders granted only in special cases.
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Sunderland - -	—	—	102	68	86	—	—	—	—	74	49	36	It has not been the practice to grant separation orders as a matter of course along with maintenance orders.
			1907.	1908.	1909.				1907.	1908.	1909.
Bridpend - -	About		30	40	40	—	About		20	30	30	—	Usually orders for maintenance alone are made.
Nailsworth P.S.D. -	1	—	1	—	—	—	1 (separation only.)	—	1	—	—	—	Not as a matter of course—it depends upon the facts of the case.
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Devizes P.S.D. -	—	—	—	2	1	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	——
Launceston - -	(	2	)	—	—	—	—	—	—	--	—	—	Separation orders not granted unless the safety of the wife requires it.
Braunton P.S.D. of Devon.	3	2	2	—	—	—	1 (1 separation only.)	—	1	1	1	1	Not as a matter of course—depends upon circumstances of the case.
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Cumberland Ward P.S.D.	—	—	1	1	3	—	—	—	—	—	1	3	Yes, separation orders combined with maintenance.
Peterborough P.S.D. and Norman Cross P.S.D.	5	7	4	—	—	—	—	4	2	5	3	2	Not as a matter of course - -
Scilly Isles - -	1	—	2	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	1	Maintenance orders given with separation order unless unnecessary.
Samford P.S.D. of Suffolk.	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	——
Lawford's Gate P.S.D. of Gloucester.	16	6	8	—	1	—	—	—	—	12	4	6	Separation orders not granted as a matter of course.
			1907.	1908.	1909.				1907	1908.	1909.
Southampton P.S.D.	—	—	12	19	14	—	—	—	6	9	4		Usual practice to grant separation orders along with maintenance orders as a matter of course.
Guiltcross and Shropham P.S.D.'s of Norfolk.	2	1	6	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	3	Separation orders only made where safety of wife requires it.
									1907.	1908.	1909.
Birmingham - -	201	225	195	—	—	—	—	—	164	179	144	—	Since the decision in Harriman v. Harriman maintenance orders on the ground of desertion are only granted where the safety of the wife requires such protection.

throughout England and Wales requesting Replies to the following Questions—cont.

4.	5.					6.		7.	8.
Whether it is the practice to order the Maintenance Allowance to be paid through the Court or through the Police?	Proportion of Orders made on the grounds following, viz.:—					Proportion of Cases in which Parties resume Cohabitation.		Has it been proved or is there reason to suppose that the Grant of Orders of Separation leads to Immorality?	Whether in favour of the present jurisdiction of the Justices being transferred to the County Court?
	Desertion.	Cruelty.	Neglect to Maintain.	Habitual Drunkenness.	Aggravated Assault.	Before the Hearing.	After Orders have been made by the Court.
Usual practice to order payment direct.	—	—	1	—	—	2	—	No	These proceedings being of a civil nature might well be transferred to the county court.
—	1	1	—	1	—	—	—	No	No.
No	7	5	—	—	2	Have no knowledge		No	No.
Direct	9	7	1	1	—	In a large proportion of cases the parties resume cohabitation.		Of opinion that there is a tendency to immorality caused by orders when parties do not come together again.	No.
No	—	4	—	—	—	5 out of 10	2 out of 4	No	Yes
Direct to wife	1	2	1	1	—	Have no knowledge.	Only know of 2 cases in which cohabitation was resumed.	No	No.
Usually through police.	1	1	—	—	1	—	2	No	No.
Direct	121	144	18	8	6	20 per cent.	50 per cent.	No	Yes.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Yes.
Direct	2	3	—	—	—	None	About half	—	—
No	19	14	2	—	1	One-third	Two-thirds	No	No.
	(These figures are for the year 1909.)
Direct to wife	45 per cent.	45 per cent.	4 per cent.	4 per cent.	2 per cent.	40 per cent.	40 per cent.	Have no proof	No.
Direct	—	—	2	—	—	Have no knowledge		No	Yes.
—	—	1	—	1	—	—	1 out of the 2 cases.	—	Yes.
Through the court	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Of opinion that granting separation orders leads to immorality.	No.
Direct	3	2	—	—	1	1 during last 3 years.	—	No	No.
Paid through applicants' solicitors.	3	—	1	—	—	Have no knowledge		Have no proof	No.
Direct	9	4	3	—	—	—	Only know of 2 cases.	No	No.
Through an officer of the court.	—	2	—	—	—	One-third	One-third	No	—
Direct to wife	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	No	No.
—	14	3	13	1	—	4	6 (about)	No	No.
Direct	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Generally direct	—	2	2	—	1	4 out of 9	—	Have no proof	No.
Direct	70 per cent.	25 per cent.		5 per cent.		Cannot say	At least 15 per cent.	—	Present jurisdiction of the justices efficient. Not desirable that courts of summary jurisdiction should be empowered to grant a divorce.

Returns in response to a Circular despatched to all Clerks to Justices

Borough or Division.	1. Number of Applications made under Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, s. 5.			1. Under Licensing Act, 1902, s. 5.			2. Number of Orders made thereon. For Maintenance only.			2. For Maintenance and Separation combined.			3. Whether it has been the practice to grant Separation Orders as a matter of course, along with Maintenance Orders, or only grant the former where the safety of the Wife requires such protection?
	1907.	1908.	1909.	1907.	1908.	1909.	1907.	1908.	1909.	1907.	1908.	1909.
Westbury P.S.D.	—	—	1907. (	1908. 4	1909.)	—	—	—	—	(	3	)	Separation orders only granted where safety of wife requires it.
Marlborough and Hungerford P.S.D.	1	1	1	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	Separation granted where safety of wife requires it.
Bingham P.S.D.	1	2	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	Since the decision in the case Harriman v. Harriman the attention of justices has been called to that case in dealing with applications.
Basingstoke	—	2	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	—	Has been the practice to grant separation orders as a matter of course. Intends in future to advise justices to grant them only where safety of wife requires it.
Chertsey P.S.D.	—	—	1907. 5	1908. 6	1909. 3	—	2	2	—	1	2	2	Separation orders only granted where safety of wife requires it.
Bilston	—	—	1907. 23	1908. 14	1909. 27	—	—	—	1907. 8	1908. 5	1909. 14	—	Separation orders granted as a matter of course along with maintenance orders.
Newport (Salop) P.S.D.	2	3	1	—	1	—	—	—	—	1	2	—	Separation orders always been granted.
Evesham	—	1	1	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	Separation orders only granted where safety of wife requires it.
Evesham P.S.D.	1	4	1	—	—	—	—	2	—	—	1	—
Houghton-le-Spring P.S.D.	27	36	25	1	1	—	—	—	11	15	18	2	Separation orders recently granted only where the safety of the wife requires it.
Congleton P.S.D.	—	—	1907. 2	1908. 2	1909. 2	—	—	No orders made				—	Separation orders only granted where safety of wife requires it.
Croydon P.S.D.	4	6	3	—	—	—	—	—	1907. 4	1908. 6	1909. 2	—	Bench been recently advised to grant separation orders only where safety of wife requires it.
Kingston-on-Thames.	3	6	11	1	3	1	—	—	—	4	8	10	The woman almost invariably asks for and receives a separation order when she makes out her case. In suitable cases attention is called to the decision in Dodd v. Dodd.
Sheffield	—	—	1907. 289	1908. 312	1909. 255	—	—	1	96	144	174	67	Separation orders only granted where safety of wife requires it.
Halifax P.S.D.	9	14	13	—	—	—	2	3	3	—	—	3	Ditto
Kenilworth P.S.D.	2	1	1	—	—	—	2	1	1	—	—	—	Ditto
Leicester	83	75	78	5	2	1	31	13	32	38	36	19	Latterly, separation orders only granted when the safety of the wife requires it.
Retford	1	9	7	—	—	—	—	—	5	—	6	—	Had been the practice up to 1909 to grant separation orders as a matter of course along with maintenance orders.
Cerne (Dorset) P.S.D.	(		2		)		—	—	—	(	1	)	Separation orders only granted where safety of wife requires it.
South Aylesford P.S.D.	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Bench exercise discretion
Wolsingham P.S.D.	(	5	)	(	1	)	(	1	)	—	—	—	Separation orders usually granted most of cases been on the ground of cruelty.
Blaenau Festiniog P.S.D.	—	—	1907. —	1908. —	1909. 2	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	Justices exercise discretion
Ludlow	—	—	1907. 2	1908. 3	1909. —	—	—	—	—	2	3	—	Separation orders granted with maintenance.
Spelthorne	—	—	1907. 10	1908. 9	1909. 8	—	—	—	—	7	9	6	Separation orders granted with maintenance orders as a matter of course.
Kirton and Skirbeck P.S.D. (Lincolnshire).	3	3	4	1	—	—	—	—	—	2	3	1	Separation orders granted as a matter of course with maintenance orders.
							(1 separation only; no allowance).
Axminster P.S.D.	—	—	1907. 1	1908. 1	1909. 1	—	—	—	—	1	1	1	——
Edeyrnion P.S.D. of Merioneth.	—	—	1907. —	1908. 1	1909. —	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	Separation orders granted with maintenance orders.

throughout England and Wales requesting Replies to the following Questions—cont.

4.	5.					6.		7.	8.
Whether it is the practice to order the Maintenance Allowance to be paid through the Court or through the Police?	Proportion of Orders made on the grounds following, viz.:—					Proportion of Cases in which Parties resume Cohabitation.		Has it been proved or is there reason to suppose that the Grant of Orders of Separation leads to Immorality?	Whether in favour of the present jurisdiction of the Justices being transferred to the County Court?
	Desertion.	Cruelty.	Neglect to Maintain.	Habitual Drunkenness.	Aggravated Assault.	Before the Hearing.	After Orders have been made by the Court.
—	—	3	—	—	—	None have resumed cohabitation.		No	No.
Direct	—	—	1	—	—	1	—	No	No.
Direct	—	2	—	—	—	2	—	—	—
Direct	—	—	—	—	2	Neither have resumed cohabitation.		No	No.
Direct	4	2	1	—	2	No knowledge		There is reason to suppose that separation orders between young people leads to immorality.	No.
No	15	10	1	—	—	21	Cannot say	No	No.
Usually direct, never through police.	1	1	1	—	—	3	—	No evidence	No.
No	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	No	No.
	1	1	1	—	—	No knowledge
Direct	30	13	1	—	1	29	12	No	No.
Direct	1 (The six summonses were issued on above grounds.)	2	—	—	3	—	—	No	No.
—	6	2	1	—	3	—	—	—	Yes.
Generally direct, but through the court if desired.	10	5	4	5	1	50 per cent.	40 per cent.	No	No.
No	285	119 (Cruelty and neglect 42)	25	9	2	268	About 40 per cent.	Yes	No.
Neither	8	3	—	—	—	9	1	No	No.
No	Equally divided					—	—	No	No.
No	89	44	19	8	9	About 75	About 35	No	No.
No	3	6	2	—	—	(About 1 in 3)		No	No.
—	—	—	1	—	—	1	—	No	No.
Direct	Majority of orders made for cruelty, neglect, and desertion.					—	—	No	Yes.
Direct	—	1	—	—	—	5 out of 6	—	—	No.
Through the clerk	1	—	1	—	—	—	—	No	Yes.
—	(5)		—	—	—	—	—	No	No.
Direct	10	6	5	1	—	—	—	No	No.
Wishes of complainant usually complied with.	1	6	2	1	1	—	—	No	No.
Direct	—	3	—	—	—	—	—	No	No.
Police	—	—	—	1	—	—	After orders, if at all.	—	Yes.

Returns in response to a Circular despatched to all Clerks to Justices

Borough or Division.	1. Number of Applications made under Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, s. 5.			1. Under Licensing Act, 1902, s. 5.			2. Number of Orders made thereon. For Maintenance only.			2. For Maintenance and Separation combined.			3. Whether it has been the practice to grant Separation Orders as a matter of course, along with Maintenance Orders, or only grant the former where the safety of the Wife requires such protection?
	1907.	1908.	1909.	1907.	1908.	1909.	1907.	1908.	1909.	1907.	1908.	1909.
Rugby P.S.D.	—	—	1	9	12	—	—	—	1	1	4	5	Separation orders only granted when asked for by wife.
Ilminster P.S.D.	—	—	—	2	1	—	—	—	1	—	2	—	Separation orders granted as a matter of course along with maintenance orders until last year.
Dewsbury P.S.D.	—	—	12	26	20	—	1	4	8	8	7	3	Separation orders granted as a matter of course in cases of persistent cruelty.
Henley-in-Arden P.S.D.	2	1	2	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	Separation orders granted as a matter of course with maintenance orders.
Langbaurgh East (N.R. of Yorkshire) P.S.D.	—	—	7	7	7	—	1	—	2	4	3	4	Separation orders only granted where safety of wife requires it.
Spalding	—	—	—	1	4	—	—	—	—	1	1	—	Each case taken on its merits
Bridgwater	5	10	8	—	—	—	2	4	1	—	2	1	Only where safety of wife requires protection.
Altrincham P.S.D.	—	—	17	19	13	—	—	—	1	10	11	6	Usually granted together
Pembroke Dock	4	1	3	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	1	1	Ditto
Lutterworth P.S.D.	—	—	(1)			—	—	—	—	(1)			Ditto
Wednesbury	—	—	9	11	11	—	—	—	—	5	5	8	Granted together
Eddisbury P.S.D.	5	3	4	1	—	—	—	—	1	2	1	3	Separation orders only granted where safety of wife requires it.
Saddleworth (N.R. of Yorkshire) P.S.D.	—	—	4	6	5	—	—	—	—	3	3	2	Granted together
Middleton P.S.D.	6	6	5	1	—	—	1 (separation only)	—	2	3	4	—	Since the decision in Harriman v. Harriman separation orders only granted where safety of wife requires it.
Wakefield	30	20	32	—	—	—	—	—	18	11	16	—	Ditto
Stoke-upon-Trent	11	16	8	—	—	2	2	8	9	7	4	—	Ditto
Howden P.S.D.	3	3	6	—	—	—	—	—	3	1	3	—	Separation orders only granted where safety of wife requires it.
Glossop	1	—	5	—	—	—	—	—	4	—	—	—	Yes, formerly, but not recently
Chapel-en-le-Frith P.S.D.	—	—	—	3	5	—	—	—	—	—	3	4	Separation orders, as a rule, made along with maintenance orders.
Newark	1	3	5	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	2	2	Since the observations in Dodd v. Dodd separation orders only granted when required.
Menai Bridge P.S.D.	5	6	4	—	—	—	1	2	—	—	3	2	Separation orders only granted when circumstances seem to call for same.
Durham	7	18	9	1	—	—	—	—	—	5	8	6	Separation orders granted with maintenance orders as a matter of course.
Jarrow	—	—	56	51	34	—	—	—	—	23	17	14	Ditto
Tynemouth	44	47	44	—	—	—	2	12	7	23	21	12	Separation orders only made where safety of wife requires protection.
Rochester P.S.D.	9	7	13	—	—	1	—	—	3	8	3	8	Until about June, "Yes," but no separation orders are now made in desertion cases.
Bromley, Kent	—	—	13	10	14	—	—	—	6	6	6	—	Separation orders granted as a matter of course with maintenance orders.
Lower Agbrigg P.S.D. of W.R. of York.	28	28	39	1	—	—	4	6	5	10	11	11	Since the decision in Harriman v. Harriman separation orders only granted where safety of wife requires it.
Wigan P.S.D.	86	82	55	1	1	1	—	—	—	38	37	27	Separation orders granted as a matter of course with maintenance orders.
Conway	2	4	3	—	—	—	—	—	2	4	2	—	Separation orders granted where safety of wife requires protection.

throughout England and Wales requesting Replies to the following Questions—cont.

4.	5.					6.		7.	8.
Whether it is the practice to order the Maintenance Allowance to be paid through the Court or through the Police?	Proportion of Orders made on the grounds following, viz.:—					Proportion of Cases in which Parties resume Cohabitation.		Has it been proved or is there reason to suppose that the Grant of Orders of Separation leads to Immorality?	Whether in favour of the present jurisdiction of the Justices being transferred to the County Court?
	Desertion.	Cruelty.	Neglect to Maintain.	Habitual Drunkenness.	Aggravated Assault.	Before the Hearing.	After Orders have been made by the Court.
Direct	About equal					About half		No	No.
Direct	1	—	—	—	2	—	1	No	No.
Direct	21	7	3	—	—	Cannot say		No	Yes.
No, neither	1	—	—	—	—	3	—	Yes	No.
Neither	5	8	1	—	—	7	—	No	Yes.
Neither	—	1	1	—	—	—	1	No	No.
Generally direct	3	4	3	—	—	9	6	No	No.
Direct	10	7	6	1	4	13	About one-third.	No	No.
Direct	1	3	—	—	—	4	2	No	No.
No, neither	1	—	—	—	—	—	1	No	No.
Direct	7	5	2	3	1	No		No	No.
Direct	1	3	2	—	1	6	—	No	No.
Direct	2	4	1	1	—	—	—	No	No.
Direct	5 in 10	4 in 10	—	1 in 10	—	5	—	—	No.
Direct	19	25	1	—	—	31	29	—	No.
No	18	13	2	2	2	Probably 1 in 6	—	No	No.
Direct	3	3	1	—	—	4	1	No	No.
No	3	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	No.
Direct	3	2	2	—	—	1	About 50 per cent.	No	No.
No	2	5	1	—	—	—	—	No	No.
—	One-third.	Two-thirds.	—	—	—	One-third	—	No	No.
Direct	8	10	—	1	—	—	—	No	No.
No	15	27	4	1	7	—	—	No	No.
No	41	24	6	—	6	—	—	No	No.
In most cases through the police, never through the court.	9	12	—	1	—	About 7 out of 30.	—	No proof	No.
Direct	4	12	1	1	—	12	—	No	No.
Direct	15	28	3	1	—	43 out of 96.	—	No	No.
Direct	43	45	12	2	1	110	—	No	No.
No	3	5	—	—	—	Small proportion.	No	No proof	No.

Returns in response to a Circular despatched to all Clerks to Justices

Borough or Division.	1. Number of Applications made under Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, s. 5.			1. Under Licensing Act, 1902, s. 5.			2. Number of Orders made thereon. For Maintenance only.			2. For Maintenance and Separation combined.			3. Whether it has been the practice to grant Separation Orders as a matter of course, along with Maintenance Orders, or only grant the former where the safety of the Wife requires such protection?
	1907.	1908.	1909.	1907.	1908.	1909.	1907.	1908.	1909.	1907.	1908.	1909.
Seaham Harbour P.S.D.	12	18	29	—	—	—	—	—	9	13	15	—	Separation orders granted as a matter of course with maintenance orders.
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Ipswich - -	—	—	13	11	10	—	—	—	3	9	8	5	Separation orders only granted where safety of wife requires it.
			1907.	1908.	1909.
West Castle Ward P.S.D., county of Northumberland.	—	—	51	27	30	—	—	—	—	18	14	12	Separation orders granted as a matter of course with maintenance orders.
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Allerdale - above - Derwent P.S.D.	—	—	20	15	15	—	4	1	5	4	3	5	Separation orders only granted where safety of wife requires protection
Blackburn P.S.D. -	19	13	10	—	—	—	—	—	1	8	8	4	Ditto - - - - -
			1907.	1908.	1909.				1907.	1908.	1909.
Worcester - -	—	—	13	13	12	—	—	—	13	10	8	—	Ditto - - - - -
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Burnley - -	—	—	93	79	82	—	—	—	8	64	55	47	Since the decision in Harriman v. Harriman separation orders only granted where safety of wife requires protection.
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Kidderminster -	—	—	5	7	8	—	—	—	—	4	5	6	Separation orders granted as a matter of course.
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Kidderminster P.D.S.	—	—	1	2	2	—	—	—	—	—	2	1	Ditto - - - - -
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Crewe - - -	—	—	27	19	19	—	5	6	3	3	4	7	Separation orders only granted where safety of wife requires protection.
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Abergavenny -	—	—	6	2	6	—	—	—	—	2	—	1	Ditto - - - - -
Scarborough - -	39	30	26	2	1	2	5	4	8	7	11	7	Ditto - - - - -
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Loughborough P.S.D.	—	—	10	10	6	—	—	—	—	9	8	5	Separation orders granted with maintenance orders as a matter of course.
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Droxford P.S.D.	—	—	1	1	3	—	—	—	—	1	—	2	Ditto - - - - -
Ledbury P.S.D. -	—	4	2	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	3	2	Separation orders only granted where safety of wife requires it.
Louth - - -	—	—	2	—	—	—	—	—	2	—	—	—	Ditto - - - - -
			1907–8–9.							1907–8–9.
Chatteris P.S.D. -	—	—	(5)			—	—	—	—	(1)			Separation orders granted as a matter of fact with maintenance orders.
Sunderland P.S.D.	24	24	21	1	—	—	—	—	—	15	9	12	Ditto - - - - -
			1907–8–9.							1907–8–9.
Bromsgrove P.S.D.	—	—	(12)			—	—	—	—	(6)			Separation orders granted according to facts of each case.
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Newport, Mon. -	—	—	10	10	9	—	—	—	—	9	9	9	Separation orders granted with maintenance orders as a matter of fact.
			1907-8-9.							1907-8-9.
Alcester P.S.D. -	—	—	(3)			—	—	—	—	(3)			Separation orders granted according to facts of each case.
Boston - - -	9	2	9	—	1	—	—	—	3	3	2	2	Latterly, separation orders only granted where safety of wife requires protection.
Exeter - - - -	12	12	9	—	—	—	2	3	3	7	7	4	Ditto - - - - -
Orsett P.S.D., Essex	7	9	8	—	—	—	—	—	—	3	4	4	Separation orders granted as a matter of course in all cases.
Hyde - - -	35	30	25	3	1	3	—	—	5	26	23	10	Separation orders only granted where safety of wife requires protection.
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Pontypool P.S.D. -	—	—	18	19	11	—	1	1	—	7	7	4	Separation orders granted with maintenance orders as a matter of course.
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Sleaford P.S.D. -	—	—	5	1	5	—	—	—	—	3	—	4	Ditto - - - - -
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Dorchester - -	—	—	1	1	1	—	—	—	—	1	—	1	—
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Dorchester P.S.D. -	—	—	2	1	3	—	—	—	—	1	1	—	—

throughout England and Wales requesting Replies to the following Questions—cont.

4.	5.					6.		7.	8.
Whether it is the practice to order the Maintenance Allowance to be paid through the Court or through the Police?	Proportion of Orders made on the grounds following, viz.:—					Proportion of Cases in which Parties resume Cohabitation.		Has it been proved or is there reason to suppose that the Grant of Orders of Separation leads to Immorality?	Whether in favour of the present jurisdiction of the Justices being transferred to the County Court?
	Desertion.	Cruelty.	Neglect to Maintain.	Habitual Drunkenness.	Aggravated Assault.	Before the Hearing.	After Orders have been made by the Court.
No	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	No	No.
Sometimes through the court, but never through police.	15	7	1	1	1	—	—	—	—
No	13	29	1	—	1	—	—	No	No.
Direct	13	3	1	—	5	Rather more than half.	—	No	No.
Direct	6	7	5	2	1	—	—	Of opinion, yes	No.
Never through police, but through court upon request.	16	9	1	4	1	—	—	No	No.
Direct	50 per cent.	33 per cent.	13 per cent.	2 per cent.	2 per cent.	About 25 per cent.	From 20 per cent. to 30 per cent.	Yes	No.
No	8	2	3	—	2	—	—	No	No.
No	1	—	—	—	2	—	—	No	No.
Direct	14	6	4	—	4	28 out of 63	—	No	No.
Direct	—	3	—	—	—	50 per cent.		No	No
Direct	13	14	14	—	1	—	70 per cent.	Not to any great extent.	No.
Direct	7	11	1	1	2	1	9	No	—
No	—	3	—	—	—	No		Cannot say	—
Direct	1	4	1	—	—	None		No	No.
Direct	2	—	—	—	—	1	—	No	No.
Through police	1	—	—	—	—	2	1	—	—
No	19	13	3	1	—	—	—	No	Yes.
Direct	4	1	1	—	—	4	4	No	No.
Direct	13	14	—	—	—	About 9 out of 10.	—	Yes	Yes.
Direct	—	3	—	—	—	—	2	No	No
Through police	10 per cent.	50 per cent.	10 per cent.	10 per cent.	20 per cent.	About 14 per cent.	100 per cent.	No	No
Generally direct	13	10	1	1	1	1	2	No	No.
Direct	5	1	—	—	5	About half	—	—	No.
Through the clerk.	36	44	9	7	1	14	—	—	No.
Direct	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	No	Yes.
Direct	1	3	—	2	1	1	1	No	—
Direct	1	—	—	—	1	—	1	—	No.
Direct	1	1	—	—	—	2	—	—	No.

Returns in response to a Circular despatched to all Clerks to Justices

Borough or Division.	1. Number of Applications made under Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, s. 5.			1. Under Licensing Act, 1902, s. 5.			2. Number of Orders made thereon. For Maintenance only.			2. For Maintenance and Separation combined.			3. Whether it has been the practice to grant Separation Orders as a matter of course, along with Maintenance Orders, or only grant the former where the safety of the Wife requires such protection?
	1907.	1908.	1909.	1907.	1908.	1909.	1907.	1908.	1909.	1907.	1908.	1909.
Redditch P.S.D.	6	13	5	1	—	—	—	—	—	5	13	3	Separation orders granted with maintenance orders as a matter of course.
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Carnarvon	—	—	6	3	2	—	—	—	—	2	2	—	Ditto
Hereford	20	16	6	—	—	—	—	—	—	5	2	1	Separation orders only granted where safety of wife requires protection.
			1907–8 9.							1907–8–9.
Tywardreath P.S.D of Cornwall.	—	—	(1)			—	—	—	—	(1)			Ditto
Bingley	(16)			(1)			(3)			(6)			Ditto
			1907–8–9.							1907–8–9.
Rhyl P.S.D.	—	—	(13)			—	—	—	—	(5)			Separation orders granted as a matter of course with maintenance orders.
Leamington	3	7	6	2	2	—	—	—	2	5	9	3	Separation orders only granted where safety of wife requires protection.
									1 (separation only).
Llanelly	26	22	20	—	—	—	4	3	6	8	4	5	Ditto
									1 (separation only).
Forehoe P.S.D. of Norfolk.	—	2	3	—	—	—	—	1	1	—	—	—	Ditto
			1907.	1908.	1909.				1907.	1908.	1909.
Roose-and-Dungleddy P.S.D.'s of Pembroke.	—	—	10	6	5	—	—	—	3	4	5	—	——
			1907.	1908.	1909.				1907.	1908.	1909.
Carlisle	—	—	16	8	5	—	—	—	8	5	3	—	Separation orders generally
Allerdale-below-Derwent P.S.D.	1	5	2	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	2	1	Separation orders granted as a matter of course with maintenance orders.
Blofield and Walsham P.S.D.'s.	1	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	—	—	Only where safety of wife requires it.
Reading	10	16	19	—	—	—	1	2	8	7	11	8	Ditto
			1907.	1908.	1909.				1907.	1908.	1909.
Ashton-under-Lyne	—	—	34	58	42	—	—	—	20	33	25	—	Ditto
			1907.	1908.	1909.				1907.	1908.	1909.
Ashton-under-Lyne P.S.D.	—	—	24	41	30	—	—	—	11	24	17	—	Ditto
Brynmawr P.S.D.	2	7	4	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	7	4	Separation orders granted with maintenance orders as a matter of course.
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Beacontree P.S.D.	—	—	57	67	59	—	8	10	14	14	17	15	Only where safety of wife requires it.
									1907.	1908.	1909.
Stockton-on-Tees	83	75	83	—	—	—	—	—	45	29	43	—	Separation orders granted as a matter of fact with maintenance orders.
									1907.	1908.	1909.
Stockton Ward P.S.D.	5	6	10	—	—	—	—	—	1	3	6	—	Ditto
									1907.	1908.	1909.
Thornaby Yarm P.S.D.	8	10	15	—	—	—	—	—	3	1	10	—	Ditto
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Llanrwst P.S.D.	—	—	6	3	1	—	1	—	—	—	1	1	Cases considered on their merits
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Brecon	—	—	6	2	1	—	—	—	—	3	1	—	Only where safety of wife requires it.
			1907.	1908.	1909.					1907–8–9.
Kibbor P.S.D.	—	—	3	7	5	—	—	—	—	(9)			——
Blackburn	131	133	120	1	2	2	—	108	111	122	17	2	Separation orders only granted where safety of wife requires protection.
East Staincliffe P.S.D. of W.R. of York.	7	9	3	—	—	—	—	1	1	4	5	1	Separation orders granted with maintenance orders as a matter of course.
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Hastings	—	—	10	12	11	—	—	—	—	10	12	11	Ditto
Rochdale	52	64	51	1	2	2	—	—	2	30	32	30	Separation orders granted along with maintenance orders as a matter of course.
			1907.	1908.	1909.
Mortlake P.S.D.	—	—	5	7	6	—	2	2	1	—	1	1	Separation orders only granted where safety of wife requires it.
Rossendale P.S.D. of Lancs:—
Bacup	12	12	7	—	—	—	—	—	—	8	9	5	Separation orders granted along with maintenance orders as a matter of course.
Rawtenstall	12	11	11	—	—	—	—	—	1	7	4	8
							(separation only).
Haslingden	6	4	5	—	—	—	2	1	—	1	2	3
							(separations only)

throughout England and Wales requesting Replies to the following Questions—cont.

4.	5.					6.		7.	8.
Whether it is the practice to order the Maintenance Allowance to be paid through the Court or through the Police?	Proportion of Orders made on the grounds following, viz. :—					Proportion of Cases in which Parties resume Cohabitation.		Has it been proved or is there reason to suppose that the Grant of Orders of Separation leads to Immorality?	Whether in favour of the present jurisdiction of the Justices being transferred to the County Court?
	Desertion.	Cruelty.	Neglect to Maintain.	Habitual Drunkenness.	Aggravated Assault.	Before the Hearing.	After Orders have been made by the Court.
Direct	(	19	)	1	1	—	9	Of opinion "Yes."	No.
Direct	1	1	1	1	—	—	—	—	Yes.
Direct	4	2	2	—	—	25	3	Of opinion "Yes."	No.
Police	—	—	—	—	1	—	1	No	No.
Direct	7	2	—	—	—	7	4	Yes	No.
Direct	1	2	2	—	—	—	—	No	No.
Direct	8	6	—	4	2	—	—	Yes	No.
Direct	42 per cent.	52 per cent.	6 per cent.	—	—	28 per cent. at least.	12 per cent. at least.	No	No.
Direct	—	Great majority.	In all other cases.	—	—	—	About one-sixth.	Yes	No.
—	2	8	1	—	—	—	—	—	—
Either, or direct	3	8	4	—	1	—	About one-half.	No	No.
Solicitor	2	2	—	—	—	3	1	No	No.
Direct	—	Great majority.	In all other cases.	—	—	—	About one-sixth.	Yes	No.
Direct	23	8	3	2	1	—	About 50 per cent.	No	No.
Direct	34	27	2	5	10	40	About 50 or 60 per cent.	No	No.
Direct	16	21	6	2	7	35	About 50 or 60 per cent.	No	No.
Direct	5	8	—	—	—	—	5	No	No.
Direct	32	21	13	3	8	—	—	No	No.
Direct	17	49	40	1	10	25	47	No	No.
Direct	2	7	1	—	—	—	1	No	No.
Direct	5	4	5	—	—	13	1	No	No.
No	1	1	1	—	—	Probably one-half to two-thirds.	—	No information	No
Direct	1	2	—	1	—	—	—	Yes	If a question of obtaining a divorce, "Yes."
Direct	4	4	1	—	—	—	—	—	Doesn't mind.
Direct	228	58	53	3	18	Very few	About one-third.	—	No.
Direct	8	3	1	—	—	—	—	No	No.
Direct	21	8	4	1	—	Very rarely	About 33 per cent.	Yes	No.
Direct	18	12	2	—	—	16 out of 53	—	No	No.
Direct	(These figures were for the year 1909.) 5	—	1	1	—	5 out of 18	—	No	No.
Police	6	6	1	—	9	9	14	No	No.
Police	1	16	1	—	2	14	8	No	No.
Police	—	7	—	2	—	6	7	No	No.

Returns in response to a Circular despatched to all Clerks to Justices

Borough or Division.	1. Number of Applications made under Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, s. 5.			1. Under Licensing Act, 1902, s. 5.			2. Number of Orders made thereon. For Maintenance only.			2. For Maintenance and Separation combined.			3. Whether it has been the practice to grant Separation Orders as a matter of course, along with Maintenance Orders, or only grant the former where the safety of the Wife requires such protection?
	1907.	1908.	1909.	1907.	1908.	1909.	1907.	1908.	1909.	1907.	1908.	1909.
Darlington	—	—	1907. 31	1908. 19	1909. 14	—	7	1	1	10	5	2	Separation orders granted in all cases except "desertion."
Newcastle-upon-Tyne.	177 summonses issued, 123 applications heard in court. 1909.						—	—	49	—	—	45	No. Only when necessary for protection of wife.
Halifax	25	16	27	—	5	2	—	2	5	12	6	10	Not as a matter of course. If a separation order is asked for it is invariably granted.
Bristol	Number of applicants for summonses for the last five years not less than 700 per annum. Number of orders of separation made on an average of five years, about 140 per annum.						Number of summonses granted and issued, about 200 per annum.						Number of cases heard by justices, about 150 per annum.
Abingdon (Berks)	None.						—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Manchester (County).	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Before decision in re Harriman v. Harriman a non-cohabitation clause was inserted in orders, but not since that decision, unless the court has been satisfied that the wife's safety has been in peril.
Linton P.S.D. (Cambs).	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Tunbridge Wells	Average of four or five cases a year at the outside.						Orders made for separation and maintenance combined in nearly every case.						Practically every case is based on the cruelty of husband.
Tetbury P.S.D.	—	—	1907-8-9. (1)			—	—	—	1907-8-9. (1)			—	—
Erpingham (North) P.S.D. of Norfolk.	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Earsham P.S.D., Norfolk.	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Tamworth Borough and P.S.D.	1	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	1	—
Manchester	The Stipendiary Magistrate being a member of the Commission, and the Chief Constable President of the Chief Constables' Society, and expecting to give evidence before the Commission, these statistics have been prepared for them and will be presented by them to the Commission.												Yes. An order for separation is usually asked for and granted.
Wantage P.S.D.	—	—	1907-8-9. (1)			—	—	—	1907-8-9. (1)			—	—
Taunton P.S.D.	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Not the practice to grant separation orders as a matter of course along with maintenance orders.
Huntingdon P.S.D.	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
South Greenhoe and Grimshoe P.S.D.'s of Norfolk.	—	—	1907-8-9. (4)			—	—	—	1907-8-9. (—)			—	—
Keynsham P.S.D. of Somerset.	None						None						According to circumstances
Pickering Lythe, East, P.S.D. (N.R. of Yorks).	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Ringwood, P.S.D.	—	1	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Haug West P.S.D. of N.R. of Yorks.	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Ruthin	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Separation orders granted with maintenance orders.
High Wycombe	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Haywards Heath	—	—	1907-8-9. (3)			—	—	—	1907-8-9. (1)			—	—
Brackley P.S.D.	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Separation orders only granted where safety of wife requires protection.
Bootle P.S.D. of Cumberland.	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—
Whitby P.S.D.	2	1	1	—	—	1907-8-9. —	—	—	—	1	—	—	—
Coleshill P.S.D. of Warwick	—	—	1907-8-9. (5)			1907-8-9. 1	—	—	1907-8-9. (1)			—	Separation orders granted as a matter of course along with maintenance orders.

throughout England and Wales requesting Replies to the following Questions—cont.

4.	5.					6.		7.	8
Whether it is the practice to order the Maintenance Allowance to be paid through the Court or through the Police?	Proportion of Orders made on the grounds following, viz.:—					Proportion of Cases in which Parties resume Cohabitation.		Has it been proved or is there reason to suppose that the Grant of Orders of Separation leads to Immorality?	Whether in favour of the present jurisdiction of the Justices being transferred to the County Court?
	Desertion.	Cruelty.	Neglect to maintain.	Habitual Drunkenness.	Aggravated Assault.	Before the Hearing.	After Orders have been made by the Court.
Direct	9	15	1	1	—	27	1	—	No.
Through court officer.	44	32	11	2	5	Approximately 30 per cent.	Possibly 70 to 75 per cent.	No	No.
Through the police in some cases. Generally direct.	22	6	6	1	—	About 43 per cent.	No information.	No knowledge	No.
Through court officer.	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
If so desired, at a police office.	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	No evidence	No.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Yes; with extended powers.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	No evidence	No.
Direct	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	No.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	No.
Parties make their own arrangements.	—	—	—	—	—	No information		No information	No.
No.	(See answer to 1 and 2)					No; but about a third of the summonses never come to a hearing.		The living apart of husbands and wives undoubtedly leads to immorality.	No.
—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	No.
Police.	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	No reason to suppose so.	No.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Yes.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Yes.
Direct	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	No	No.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	No.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	No	Civil court the proper tribunal.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	No.
Direct	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Yes.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Yes.
Direct	2	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	No.
Direct	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	No
—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Direct	3	2	—	1	—	4	—	No	No.

APPENDIX VII.

SUPPLEMENTAL STATEMENT BY THE GENERAL COUNCIL OF THE BAR.

Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes.

Winchester House,
21, St. James' Square, S.W.,
12th April 1910.

DEAR BINGLEY,

IN the Report of the General Council of the Bar prepared for the purpose of the Chairman giving evidence before the Commission attention is drawn in paragraph 4, sec. (4), to "The present congested con- "dition of business in many of the county courts, "the difficulty of obtaining continuity of trial, and the "consequent expense," and in the evidence of the Chairman that matter is dealt with. It has been suggested that it would be of considerable assistance to the Commission if you, on behalf of the Chairman and council, could send me the names of those county courts to which that paragraph refers, and such statistics or other facts as led the council to arrive at that conclusion.

Yours very truly,
H. GORELL BARNES,
Secretary.

H. C. A. Bingley, Esq.,
General Council of the Bar,
2, Hare Court, Temple, E.C.

2, Hare Court, Temple, E.C.,
May 12th, 1910.

DEAR BARNES,

I BROUGHT your letter of the 12th April to the notice of the General Council of the Bar, and in reply I am desired to say as follows:—The statement in the council's report to which you refer was founded upon what is common knowledge in the profession as to the condition of things existing in many of the county courts, fortified by the information supplied to the council by those of its members who have practised, or are practising, in county courts.

The council are not aware of any statistics bearing on the subject.

With a view of affording assistance to the Commission the council have approached several members of the Bar, known to the council as gentlemen of weight and experience in this class of work, and as having particular and personal knowledge of the conditions prevailing in the county courts. The council have invited them to mention some of their individual experiences.

The council think it right to transmit to the Commission without comment all such statements, in the order, and in the precise form, in which they have been received.

The council have good reason to believe that these statements could, if necessary, be largely supplemented.

Yours very truly,
HENRY C. A. BINGLEY,
Secretary.

Hon. H. Gorell Barnes, Secretary,
Royal Commission on Divorce
and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James' Square, S.W.

STATEMENTS REFFERED TO IN THE ABOVE LETTER.

I. HAMPSHIRE COUNTY COURT (ISLE OF WIGHT).

A King's Counsel mentions a case of wrongful dismissal in which he was engaged, which lasted the whole of the following five days, and in which counsel on both sides were obliged to go down from London on each occasion:

1st December 1909.
11th „ 1909.
7th January 1910.
10th „ 1910.
15th „ 1910.

This case appears illustrative of the time occupied nowadays by individual cases in the county court, of the want of continuity of trial, and of the consequent inconvenience and expense incurred.

II. BARRISTER "A" supplies the following statement:—

(1) At Watford, October 1908, I went down, arrived there at 10.40 a.m. There were present five other counsel besides myself. We were all summoned for 10 o'clock. There were 200 judgment summonses, which lasted from 11 a.m. till about 3 p.m. My case was called on at 5 p.m. (the other counsels' cases being adjourned), and at 6.30 p.m. was adjourned for a fortnight. The other cases were adjourned, I think, for one month. I know that all the heavy cases except mine were adjourned unheard, and mine was part heard.

(2) I have several times had cases adjourned for at least six weeks at Clerkenwell.

(3) At Hayward's Heath I had a jury case on November 25th, I think, 1907. It began at 3.30 p.m., adjourned at 5 p.m. till January 25th, all the jurors of course being in the neighbourhood of the dispute.

(4) I went to Llanrwst (1908) at great expense to my client, arrived at 10.30, and was immediately told my case could not be taken, and it was adjourned for one month, when I could not go, and my client had to pay another counsel.

(5) Clerkenwell, April 28th, 1910. Registrar requested self and witnesses to be at the court at 10.30. Five ladies (witnesses) came up from the country.

I got to the court at 10.30 and was then told that there were two adjourned cases, one a running down case, with a jury, which would probably last all day. All the day's cases were adjourned till 2 p.m. on the spot. At 2 p.m. we all reassembled and all the cases (the whole day's list) were then adjourned for some indefinite period.

III. BARRISTER "B" supplies the following statement:—

1908, October, November, December: County Court of Surrey:—

In case by wife to recover arrears of allowance under separation deed—defence raised breach of dum casta clause.

Four visits of counsel and solicitor and witnesses necessary before the action could be heard owing to congested state of list, viz.:—

October 17th—Guildford.
November 17th—Godalming.
December 7th—Guildford.
December 18th—Guildford. (Case heard.)

October (about 14th):—

(a) Action (about fifteen witnesses—all poor people). For hearing at Newbury County Court. Not reached (majority of witnesses came six or eight miles by road).

(b) Adjourned to November court. In November, it being ascertained that case could not possibly be reached at November court, application made to judge (at another court) to adjourn it to December court, and granted.

(c) December court: action heard and concluded.

N.B.—Action concerned a small estate of a deceased farmer, most of which was spent in costs.

IV. BARRISTER "C" supplies the following statement:—

Date.	Name of Case.	County Court.	Remarks.
1908. June 3rd - -	Dyke v. Stabb Johnson -	Bromley C. C. -	Judge sat till nearly midnight to finish an ordinary case of personal injuries.
1908. September 9th, adjourned to October 24th.	Kettle v. Mustard - -	Ipswich C. C. -	Counsel, solicitor, &c. had to go down twice. Hence much increased expense.
1909. April 5th, adjourned to April 30th.	Elliott v. Gt. E.L.M.O. Company.	Shoreditch C. C. -	Negligence.
1909. July 21st, adjourned to November 5th.	Mawby v. Mawby - -	Westminster C. C.	Wrongful dismissal and a/c.
1909. July 28th, adjourned to December 9th.	Lindsey v. Perfect Mantle Company.	Shoreditch C. C. -	Goods sold and d/d.
1909. October 20th, adjourned to November 18th.	Corderoy v. Carter Patterson.	Clerkenwell C. C. -	Personal injuries.
1909. November 24th, adjourned 1910, January 13th.	McIntyre v. Metropolitan Building Company.	City of London Court.
1909. December 3rd, adjourned to December 18th.	Weston v. Dunkley -	Wandsworth C. C.	Workmen's compensation case.
1910. February 14th, adjourned to March 15th.	Stanway v. Edmondson, Limited.	Barnet C. C. -	Workmen's compensation case.
1910. March 4th, adjourned to April 22nd.	Betgemann v. L.G.O. Company.	Westminster C. C.	Personal injuries.
1910. March 31st, adjourned to May 22nd.	Parkinson v. G.E. Rly. -	Mildenhall C. C. -	Counsel, solicitor, and witnesses from London will have to go down twice. 31st March case part heard and adjourned for want of time to 22nd May.

NOTE.—I could, if necessary, increase this list very considerably. These cases are taken at random in five minutes. No one with any considerable practice in the county courts could dispute their congested state, though nearly all judges sit till at the earliest 5 p.m., and many of them sit much later.

V. BARRISTER "D" supplies the following statement:—

As regards heavy cases in the county court on November —, 1906, December 8th, 1906, and January 31st, 1907; I was at Nottingham in a case lasting all the above three days, by name Bingham Urban District Council v. Snaith Plaster Company.

At Brentford last year I was in the case of Chiswick U.D.C. ats. Davidson, which was tried on January 29th, February 12th, February 19th, and retried April 15th, April 28th, until 10.15 at night, and a motion for a new trial heard on May 8th, 1909.

As regards adjournments:—

Westminster: Walton, Hassall, and Port v. L.G.O. Company:—
July 21st, 1909, adjourned to October 25th, 1909.

Westminster: Parsons v. Thornton Smith:—
November —, 1909, adjourned.
February 4th, 1910, adjourned.
March 14th, 1910, heard.

Lambeth: Alderman v. Hyams:—
Adjourned first prior to January 1910.
January 25th, 1910, adjourned.
March 3rd, 1910, tried.

Croydon: Bruce v. Fox and Lyon:—
March 15th, 1910, adjourned.
April 21st, 1910, heard.

City of London Court: Trew v. Williamson:—
January 6th, 1910, adjourned.
February 24th, 1910, heard.

City of London Court: Society of Laundry Engineers v. Steinberg:—
April 9th, 1910, adjourned indefinitely.

VI. BARRISTER "E" makes the following statement:—

You have asked me to give you any information I can as to the desirability or otherwise of conferring divorce jurisdiction upon the county courts, having regard to the state of business already existing in them.

My experience is practically limited to the London courts, and I cannot speak with any certainty regarding those in the country.

So far as the London courts are concerned, I say without hesitation that each of them has as much business already as can be dealt with satisfactorily.

To give divorce jurisdiction would seriously interfere with their present usefulness; moreover, the length of time required by most divorce cases would necessitate their being adjourned part heard. This would be very inconvenient in those of the courts which do not sit from day to day, and would mean bringing jurors and others back after some days' interval.

VII. BARRISTER "F" supplies the following statement:—

Chelmsford: Re D.:—
July 11th, 1905 (part heard and adjourned).
September 15th, 1905 (part heard and adjourned).
October 28th, 1905 (hearing concluded).

Grays Thurrock: P. v. U.:—
July 11th, 1906 (not reached).
October 10th, 1906 (not reached).
November 7th, 1906 (2—5.30 p.m.).

R. v. G. (jury case):—
October 10th, 1906 (2—6), adjourned.
November 7th, 1906 (11—1.30 p.m.).

Clerkenwell: C. v. M.:—
November 28th, 1908 (not reached).
January 17th, 1909 (not reached).
March 6th, 1909 }
April 9th, 1909 } Hearings.
April 30th, 1909 }
May 7th, 1909 }

VIII. BARRISTER "G" supplies the following statement:—

Vergette v. Ormond:—This was an action in the high court remitted for trial in the court of Waltham Abbey about 12 miles from London. The plaintiff, his solicitor, and witnesses lived about 80 miles from London, near Peterborough. The defendant and most of his witnesses lived near Waltham Abbey, some of them came from near Peterborough.

On February 5th, 1909, the day fixed for the hearing, the parties, with their counsel, solicitors, and witnesses (of whom there were eight or nine each side), attended at Waltham Abbey. About 3 p.m. or 4 p.m. it became obvious there was no possibility of the case being reached, and on application to the judge he kindly granted a special day for the hearing in London.

According on February 22nd the hearing began in London, and when the judge rose about 4 p.m. was rather more than half-way through. The judge again kindly gave a second special day for this case, and for another from one of his courts.

On March 9th the hearing was resumed in London and concluded, this being the third occasion on which plaintiff (who was defendant on the issue), his solicitor, and witnesses (except one whose evidence was taken on February 22nd) had come from Peterborough. Judgment was reserved, and on April 1st was delivered in London.

N.B.—All this time the horse, whose sale on warranty gave rise to the action, was standing at livery at Peterborough.

The judge was His Honour Judge Tindal Atkinson, and the court was Waltham Abbey.

IX. BARRISTERS "H" and "H[1]" give the following instances:—

Edmonton County Court: Oldfield Advertising Co. v. Hawkins Interpleader Hester (claimant):—
January 31st, 1910, for hearing, adjourned to February 4th at 10.15.
Adjourned to March 4th } for judge's health.
Adjourned to March 7th }
Adjourned hearing to April 19th, at Middle Temple Library.

Westminster County Court: Rainbird v. L.G.O. Company and Humbers, Limited:—
Hearing for December 8th, 1909.
Adjourned to February 14th, 1910.
Adjourned to March 21st, 1910.

X. BARRISTER "I" supplies the following statement:—

(1) Banbury County Court: Doe v. Fox:—
This is one of the worst examples I know. It was a simple case of detinue, with a difficult but short point on the measure of damages. The facts occurred in March 1908.
1st day of trial, 29th May 1908. Began about 2.30, adjourned part heard about 4.45.
Adjourned hearing, 18th December 1908. (It was adjourned against the wishes of the parties till October 1908, and subsequently for the convenience of one side till December.)
Appeal heard by Div. Court, 13th May 1909. Ordered to be tried in London by Judge Bray at Clerkenwell County Court.
New trial first hearing, 7th July 1909. Part heard.
New trial adjourned hearing 28th July 1909. Judgment ultimately given (I think October 1909) for 18*l.*

(2) Newbury County Court: Jones v. Horne. Question of water rights at a mill:—
Facts occurred April 1908.
1st day, 21st October 1908. Began late; adjourned part heard.
2nd day, 18th November 1908. Began late again; adjourned part heard.
3rd day, 9th December 1908. Lasted most of day; adjourned part heard.
4th day, 9th January 1909. Finished at judge's private house.
Judgment, 10th March 1909.

(3) Newbury County Court: Jewell v. Jewell:—
Adjourned for want of time being after Jones v. Horne, 21st October 1908.
Adjourned for want of time being after Jones v. Horne, 18th November 1908.
Adjourned for want of time being after Jones v. Horne, 9th December 1908.
Adjourned hearing, 20th January 1909.
Judgment, 10th March 1909.

(4) Oxford County Court: Coppock v. Cooper. Dilapidations:—
1st day not reached, 10th August 1906.
Referred to arbitration by consent, part heard, 29th October 1906.
1st day of arbitration, 21st November 1906.
2nd day of arbitration, 28th November 1906.
3rd day of arbitration, 29th November 1906.
4th day of arbitration, 6th December 1906.

(5) Banbury County Court: Coleman v. Miles. Right of way:—
1st day, 15th October 1909. Part heard (began late).
2nd day, 14th November 1909. Part heard (began late).
3rd day, 18th December 1909. Took nearly all day.
4th day, 10th March 1910. Judgment reserved.
Not yet given: 2nd May 1910.

(6) Reading County Court: Tantard v. White. Building dispute (jury):—
1st day, 16th January 1908.
2nd day, 23rd January 1908.
3rd day, 28th January 1908.
Judge appointed two special days to hear it out. Lasted most of each day.

(7) Southend County Court: Rees v. Gurney:—
Case opened, 8th January 1908.
Adjourned hearing, 15th March 1908.
Final hearing, 22nd March 1908 (in London; Judgment reserved).

XI. BARRISTER "J" supplies the following statement:—

I have had considerable experience in the county courts, both in the metropolis and in the country.

My county court practice at the present time consists of substantial actions. In metropolitan county court cases my invariable practice is when my clients have the conduct of the action to advise them to communicate with the registrar before the return day and to inform him that in my opinion the case will take two or three hours, as the case may be, and that to avoid expense the case should be adjourned to an open day when it is likely to come on. The consent of the other side is obtained, and in nine cases out of ten the action stands adjourned from the first return day.

This is invariably my experience at Brentford and Westminster. The other day an adjourned jury came on at Brentford at 3 p.m., and the jury returned their verdict with judge still doing other work after six.

It is a matter of common knowledge that the courts are congested. The increased jurisdiction has added enormously to the work. Small cases stand adjourned at great cost.

It is impossible to get any record of cases settled at a sacrifice rather than incur expense of adjournments. Moreover, many judges sit to late hours to finish their work, e.g., Judges Bacon (Bloomsbury, Whitechapel), Smyly (Bow and Shoreditch), Tindal Atkinson.

To-day (28th April, 1910) at Clerkenwell an ordinary action for damages third in the list after jury action stands adjourned generally for want of time, and may come on in June. An action, 8th April, 1910, City of London Court, before Lumley Smith goes over for want of time until June.

When before Judge Tindal Atkinson at Colchester (the judge sits two days running), my case fixed for the first day came on the next day. A case at Southend was dealt with as I have suggested. It was adjourned before the return day so as to be heard.

The pint pot of the metropolitan courts is overflowing with the quart of increased jurisdiction, and it is impossible to expect that it can absorb the gallon of divorce.

A substantial defended divorce with a jury or without would throw the courts out of gear for months. On the score of expense only a divorce case must be tried de die in diem, moreover, the nature of the action renders this course highly desirable.

Now with regard to provincial courts, these are to be divided into:—

(a) Those in big industrial centres.
(b) Those in rural and small provincial towns.

As to (a), my experience is as in London, and I would only observe the good judges make work.

A county court is a small cause court and a judge who commands confidence makes work. In other words, the better the tribunal the less time there is for any additional work.

As to (b), the same observation applies although in a lesser degree because the work is not so heavy. But the courts are more numerous, and the difficulty of completing the circuit and trying a defended divorce de die in diem would be practically insurmountable. My experience of heavy cases (e.g., a right of way at Huntingdon) is that one is practically forced to a settlement. Part of a day is no use for substantial cases. It would be cheaper to try at assizes. Moreover, one cannot help criticising the personnel of the provincial bench, and one shudders to think of the effect of the administration of the law, often remarkable in civil actions, when administered by the same tribunal in a contract which, whether regarded as sacred or civil, affects "status" and goes to the bedrock of society. Of course one sees how the law is administered on appeal in the divisional court.

There is a further point to be considered, and one that is applicable to all county courts, and more especially to country county courts. In divorce work there is an amount of practice and work before the registrars of the Divorce Court, both before and after decree, which has not its parallel in ordinary actions. My own experience of interlocutory work in civil actions before county court registrars is not such as to give one confidence as to their ability to deal with such work as divorce. They have neither the training nor experience. And in the country the leading solicitor with the largest family practice is the registrar.

I append a cutting from the "St. James and Evening Standard," Saturday, April 30th, 1910, which confirms my view as to congestion. I may mention that when the question of appointing Judge Bray was under consideration, and Judge Edge was speaking of the overwork of the courts, I spoke to Judge Bacon, who then said he could get through his work. I told him I supported Judge Edge's views and considered late hours unfair to litigants. I have spoken to Judge Edge on the subject of divorce in metropolitan courts, and he holds my view and has allowed me to say so.

"A Battle of Litigation.

"'Workmen's compensation is causing a battle
" of litigation,' Judge Bacon declared at the " Whitechapel County Court. 'The Legislature
" 'never intended that this should be the case,
" 'and I shall have to make representation to the " 'effect that my ordinary work is so considerable
" 'that I cannot undertake these cases.'"

XII. BARRISTER "K" supplies the following statement:—

Clerkenwell County Court (H. H. Judge Edge.): Grimshaw, Baxter, & Co. v. Parker:—

Plaint:—
June 1909.

Hearing:—
July 16th, 1909. Part heard and adjourned.
September 29th, 1909. Part heard and adjourned.
November 2nd, 1909. Part heard and adjourned.
December 9th, 1909. Part heard and adjourned.
December 10th, 1909. Part heard and adjourned.
January 6th, 1910. Part heard and adjourned.
January 7th, 1910. Part heard and adjourned.
February 1st, 1910. Part heard and adjourned.
February 4th, 1910. Part heard and adjourned.
February 18th, 1910. Part heard and adjourned.
March 14th, 1910. Part heard and adjourned.
April 15th, 1910. Judgment.
Notice of appeal served 29th April.

The learned county court judge when delivering judgment in this case remarked as follows:—

" The hearing of the evidence and the speeches
" of counsel occupied eleven full days, in addition " to the time in which he had been engaged in " looking up and considering the cases cited by
" the respective counsel on points of law. He
" mentioned that in order to say that the time
" taken up could and would have been very " materially shortened if it had been possible to " proceed with the hearing de die in diem, but as
" in that court the lists were usually filled up
" from a month to six weeks in advance, the
" adjournments had to be for long intervals,
" necessitating not only the reading of the " evidence previously given, but often causing
" the duplication of evidence which was not in " dispute, but which both the court and counsel
" had overlooked or could not find without much
" search through voluminous notes."

Romford and Ilford County Court (H.H. Judge Tindal Atkinson):—

Plaint:—
January 1910.

Hearing:—
8th February (Romford). Part heard.
21st April (Temple). Part heard.
22nd April (Temple). Part heard.
3rd May (Ilford).

XIII. BARRISTER "L" supplies the following statement:—

Hants County Court (H.H. Judge Gye), Ryde and Newport, I.W.: Grimsdick v. Sweetman:—
July 1908. Case not reached.
August 1909. Case heard c.a.v.
September 1908. c.a.v.
October 1908. c.a.v.
November 1908. Re-argued c.a.v.
December 1908. c.a.v.
January 1909. Judgment for defendant.
July 1909. Judgment reversed on appeal.

Surrey County Court (H.H. Judge Harington), Guildford and Godalming: Colwell v. Churchill:—
October 1909. Case not reached.
November 1909. Part heard and adjourned.
December 1909. Not reached.
January 1910. Not reached.
March 1910. Concluded and judgment.

Appeal entered—abandoned owing to bankruptcy of successful defendant.

XIV. BARRISTER "M" supplies the following statement:—

Since June last year I have only twice been briefed in the City of London Court. Details follow:—

(1) Frankau v. Allsopp (non-jury).
1909, 5th July. Case not reached for want of time; adjourned to the last week in September.
1909, 30th September. Case part heard (about 3½ hours occupied).
1909, 15th November. Case part heard (full day occupied).
1910, 21st February. Case part heard (full day occupied).
Further hearing fixed for May 4th; another full day will be occupied.

(2) Steinberger v. Wylde (jury).
1910, March 14th. Not reached for want of time; adjourned to 26th April, before which the case was settled.

The above cases showed me that where a case is not reached for want of time, or is adjourned part heard, the state of business at the court is such, that the normal period which must elapse before the case can be in the list again is from six weeks to two months. One of the above cases, as will be seen, has turned out to be a four-day case, and I have a leader in it.

I should like to add that on more than one occasion —in all for 20 days—I have sat as deputy for His Honour Judge Philbrick, on County Court Circuit, No. 55 (Dorset, &c.), where I have twice taken all his more important courts, as well as many of the smaller ones. Judging from that experience I am strongly of opinion that, although in the smaller courts, where divorce cases would very rarely crop up, there would be ample time to deal with them, yet in the larger centres (e.g., Bournemouth, Poole, Weymouth, and Salisbury) where they might be anticipated, there would not be time to deal with them. Judge Philbrick has given me permission to state the impressions I have formed from my experience as his deputy.

XV. Barrister "N" supplies the following statement:—

My experience has been that the county courts are frequently blocked with cases which they are unable to dispose of as and when they come into the list, or within a reasonable time thereafter.

Without going into detail let me give you as illustrations the fortunes of four cases I recently had in the Guildford and Godalming County Courts:—

(1) Law v. Abram. This was a heavy case for a county court involving title to land, and the attendance of very numerous aged witnesses and eminent surveyors from London. It was in the list of the county court:

22nd October 1909.
2nd December 1909.
10th December 1909.
28th January 1910.

Wills v. Austin (a workmen's compensation case):
In the list 22nd October 1909.
19th November 1909.
10th December 1909.
28th January 1910.

Trist v. Andrews (a case needing speedy trial as it prevented a receiver realising):
In the list 22nd October 1909.
19th November 1909.
22nd December 1909.

Coleville v. Churchill (a remitted action):
In the list 19th November 1909.
10th December 1909.
28th January 1910.

The amount of expense, inconvenience, and annoyance all this caused I need not point out.

XVI. Barrister "O" supplies the following statement:—

Edmonton County Court: Hayes v. Holmes:—
This action was fixed for April 1st, 1909, was adjourned for want of time till May 6th.

Kingston County Court: Van Praagh v. Penny:—
This case was fixed for October 8th, 1909, and adjourned for want of time on three occasions: October 23rd, November 3rd, and November 6th.

Westminster County Court: Gross v. Ward:—
Fixed for April 21st, 1909, adjourned for want of time till April 28th, when case part heard and two short afternoon appointments given before judgment given.

Wandsworth County Court: Cato v. Richards:—
Action fixed for April 16th, 1910, adjourned for want of time till May 3rd.

The above are a few instances of delay in the hearing of cases in county courts.

XVII. Barrister "P" supplies the following statement:—

For my own part, I have been very little to county courts of recent years, so that my recent experience is not of much value. I have, however, had a list of cases got out for the year 1907, 1908, and 1909, and three months of 1910. I find I have held 72 county court briefs during those years, and that 12 cases were adjourned for want of time. I am assured by my clerk that in every instance the adjournment was for want of time, and I believe this to be correct. This would mean one case in six adjourned for want of time. This roughly accords with my general recollection.

One of the curious facts to be borne in mind is that the painstaking careful judge, who tries cases thoroughly out, and takes more time over his cases than a less painstaking judge—his courts are therefore more likely to be unable to get through their cases than those of less painstaking judges. Other things, therefore, being equal, the more careful and painstaking a judge is the less time he has to undertake new business. Some judges who have plenty of time to try divorce cases, or any other cases, may possibly have that time because they may despatch their work hurriedly. An able, learned, painstaking, and courteous judge soon gains the confidence of suitors and solicitors, and work flows into his court which otherwise might be arbitrated or settled, or go to the assizes. I know a judge of this description—I abstain from mentioning his name—who is so highly regarded that people in his district would rather try before him than go to the assizes or arbitration. What is the result? His courts are choked with work although he sits pretty nearly every day in the week. Adjournments for want of time are frequent at his principal courts. If he were as bad a judge as he is a good one he would have plenty of time to try divorce cases. As it is, any serious increase of his business would produce complete congestion in his courts.

I am informed that the particular judge I refer to is understood to favour the conferring of jurisdiction in divorce on county courts.

I may say that before Judge Howland Roberts' time Brentford County Court was so choked with work that cases had to be adjourned as a matter of course court after court. No case had a chance to be tried at the court for which it was entered. In those days so notorious was this that I never accepted a brief for Brentford without first ascertaining how many times it had already been adjourned and whether it was certain to come on.

I may say with reference to my figures for 1907, 1908, and 1909, I have never accepted a brief for a county court without doing all I could to make sure that the case would really be heard and not adjourned for want of time. If I thought it at all likely that I might not be reached I have not accepted the brief.

XVIII. Barrister "Q" supplies the following statement:—

Clerkenwell is the chief offender. I had two cases there last year in which there were many adjournments.

F. v. McC.:
12th January 1909. Adjourned for want of time to try it.
29th January. Began late, part heard.
19th February. Part heard, referred to registrar.
26th March. } Hearing before registrar.
5th April. }
18th June. Argument on registrar's findings.

P. v. W.:
1909, 24th September. Adjourned for want of time to try it.
1909, 15th October. Part heard.
1909, 25th October. Hearing concluded.
1909, 13th December. Argument as to costs.

In neither case were the parties people of means, except the defendant in the latter case, and they could ill afford the expense of the adjournments and prolonged litigation.

Southampton County Court:—

U. C. L. v. P. Workmen's compensation case. 1st January 1910, hearing began at two o'clock and lasted until six, when it was ajourned as the judge had to get back to Winchester. 11th February 1910, adjourned hearing concluded. This adjournment entailed the usual expense of counsel, solicitors, and some witnesses attending twice over.

Epsom County Court:—

I had a light and air case in this court last year. It began about 2.30, and the hearing was adjourned at 5.30, all the evidence was concluded, and the judge gave a special appointment at his house to hear the speeches of counsel. Recently I have been in a case at Lewes County Court about a dispute of 70*l.* which has occasioned seven days hearings. As the case has been tried before the registrar, it has not occasioned any delay to other litigants, but it is a type of the kind of case which is not now infrequent in county courts.

XIX. Barrister "R" supplies the following statement:—

1. Cullen v. Aldridge. Suffolk County Court:—
25th April, 1908. The case was down for hearing, but was not reached for want of time. The place of hearing was Framlingham.
19th May, 1908. The case was heard at Saxmundham. If the case had been taken in due course at Framlingham, it would not have been reached until the middle of June.

N.B.—The county court judge did not sit until twelve, otherwise I think the case might well have been heard on the first occasion.

2. Doe v. Fox. Banbury County Court:—
29th May, 1908. Case commenced and adjourned part heard.
18th December, 1908. Further hearing.

3. Taylor v. Rowhedge Iron Works Co. Colchester County Court:—
13th June 1908. Case commenced and part heard.
22nd July 1908. Case continued and part heard.
28th October 1908. Case continued and part heard.
29th October 1908. Case continued and part heard.
1st December 1908. Case concluded.

4. Sage v. Crown Metal Syndicate. City of London Court:—
19th November 1909. Case commenced and part heard.
14th March 1910. Case concluded—it had to be practically re-heard.

N.B.—The intervention of the General Election partly accounts for the delay.

5. Fenna v. Pryke. Colchester County Court.
21st October 1909. Case commenced.
24th November 1909. Case concluded.

In many cases, e.g., 3 and 5, the delays were due to the fact that the court did not sit at the place of trial during the interval.

XX. Barrister "S" supplies the following statement:—

Case in the county court of Essex at Southend. This case began on January 2nd, 1909, and necessarily occupied four days owing to evidence of the experts. Owing to the judge giving special sittings for the adjourned hearing no inconvenience was caused to any of the ordinary suitors.

Case in the Southend County Court for breach of contract for the supply of a motor engine. This case took two days, February 14th and 15th, 1910, to try, and ended about 7.45 p.m. on the second day.

XXI. Barrister "T" supplies the following statement:—

In 1908 I appeared with a leader in the Hampshire County Court for the plaintiff in Haywood Slade v. Fullerton. The claim was for repairing a motor car, and there was a counter-claim for bad workmanship. The case was heard at Basingstoke on four days, viz., 2nd March (three parts of this day), 7th, 14th, and 21st March (these being special days, the whole of which were devoted to the case). I estimate that in the high court the case would have taken at most a short day at about one-third of the costs incurred in the county court.

A case, of which I understand you have some particulars, Gilbert v. Shutler, was recently tried at the Isle of Wight, and took five days. Plaintiff's counsel did not appear on the first day, which was an ordinary court day, but the other four were special days, viz., the 11th December, 1909, 7th, 10th, and 15th January 1910. I estimate that in the high court this case could easily have been finished at the outside in a day and a-half. I would add that on appeal the judges stated that injustice had undoubtedly been done by the decision appealed from which they were unable to remedy, because there was no appeal on decisions of fact if there were the slightest evidence to support the finding.

I don't think this result is a solitary instance of injustice arising from this state of the law.

The majority of county court cases in which counsel are engaged are adjourned part heard at least once, and not infrequently twice. My experience is the country rather than London county courts. The result of this is that refreshers necessarily largely come almost entirely out of one's client's pocket in any event, rendering litigation in the county court in any but the simplest and shortest cases as expensive if not more so than in the high court.

XXII. Barrister "U" supplies the following statement:—

My experience unquestionably is that there is serious congestion of business in the county courts, and a few years ago I could have mentioned a good many specific instances of difficulty and delay in getting cases tried in consequence. I have, however, not been very much to county courts of late, and therefore I am afraid my information must be more general than particular.

When I attended county courts more often, I have over and over again either sat all day and failed to be reached, or on information from the registrar as to the state of the list, have adjourned my case on getting to the court by agreement with my opponent. Frequently then adjournments have, on the registrar's advice, been for considerable periods.

Amongst the courts at which I well remember this kind of thing happening are Westminster, Brompton, Clerkenwell, Edmonton, Wandsworth, and Southwark; and the main cause of delay, more often than not, was a huge batch of judgment summonses, preventing the trial of actions beginning before the middle of the day or past.

As recently as last February my clerk accepted a brief for the Wandsworth court on information that it was expected to be taken quite early. I got there at 10.30 by request, only to find that the case was not reached until after 3. It was left part heard, and finally dealt with several weeks later.

No doubt you want facts rather than "views," but perhaps I may say that as far as my experience goes, any substantial addition to the work of county courts would render it impossible for them to properly get through their ordinary work. Either that work would have to stand aside, or the parties and witnesses in matrimonial cases would be kept waiting for hours, and often have to come to the court several times.

XXIII. Barrister "V" supplies the following statement:—

My clerk has been investigating my diaries from 1905 to date, and taken out the county court cases for that period. As far as I can ascertain out of 11 cases (including Mayor's Court cases), 9 were adjourned either before the day because there was no chance of their being reached or on the day because they were in fact not reached. Two were reached so late that they were part heard, and went over one for four days and the other for over three months. The latter has a good history from the point of view of economy. It was heard at the Westminster County Court, and was part heard on the 25th July. It was adjourned on the 26th July until the 5th November, when it was not reached, and was adjourned until the 9th. Speaking quite generally, and from memory, as my diaries before 1905 have been destroyed, my experience has been that more often than not, cases with counsel are adjourned if there is any substance in them. The time when you will be reached in a county court is always a matter of speculation, because there are no sufficient pleadings to guide the tribunal, and the most simple looking cases not infrequently turn out unexpectedly lengthy. Further, there are a large number of cases with litigants in person, and these take up a great deal of time. I have been in county courts until 7.30 p.m. If the county courts are to have divorce jurisdiction the congestion in the metropolitan courts will be greatly increased, and if these cases are to be tried by juries there is the additional objection that you will get on the whole a very bad class of jury, and necessarily a very varying jury, e.g., in Shoreditch and Whitechapel, and such like courts, you would get as bad a jury as you could find, whilst in Westminster and Marylebone you might get a good one. The judges vary almost as much as the juries. In some of the country districts the courts are held at inaccessible places, and at intervals of a month, and an adjournment in such a case would involve very considerable expense. County courts are always supposed to be economical, but that is by no means always the case. I recollect one case in which the claim was for 2*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.* It involved a rather nice point of law as to the rights of advertising agents, and the taxed bill of costs came out at over 30*l.* Another objection to county courts is the very bad accommodation both for counsel and witnesses. The serious feature of an adjournment in a county court is that it almost invariably means going over to some more or less distant date, because the lists are arranged for each day weeks beforehand, and the unhappy litigant who has his case adjourned has to

TABLE II.—HERTS COUNTY ASYLUM, HILL END, ST. ALBANS.

Questions 12,136, 12,139.

HISTORY OF THE RELAPSES AFTER RECOVERY OF PERSONS ADMITTED AS DIRECT ADMISSIONS—FROM THE OPENING OF THE ASYLUM FOR DIRECT ADMISSIONS (1901) TO THE END OF 1909.

(This Table refers to Persons as distinguished from Cases.)

Ages and Civil States at the Time of First Admission to Hill End Asylum.	Total Persons Admitted, 1901–09. The First Admission to Hill End only recorded.		Total Persons Discharged Recovered, 1901–09. The Result of the First Admission to Hill End only recorded.		The Number of Recovered Persons who Relapsed from their First Recovery at Hill End and were Readmitted to Hill End after an Absence from any Asylum of								Subsequent History of Persons Relapsed (as far only as Hill End records show). On December 31st, 1909, there were
					Under 1 year.		Over 1 year and under 5 years.		Over 5 and under 9 years.		Total Persons Relapsed.		Discharged Recovered.		Discharged not Recovered.		Died in Hill End.		Remaining in Hill End.
	Male.	Female.	M.	F.	M.	F.	M.	F.	M.	F.	M.	F.	M.	F.	M.	F.	M.	F.	M.	F.
Under 15 years :— Single	20	5	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
15 to 19 years :— Single	25	29	6	8	1	1	–	–	–	–	1	1	–	–	–	–	–	–	1	1
20 to 24 years :— Single	29	33	11	9	1	1	1	2	–	1	2	4	–	1	–	–	1	–	1	3
Married	3	8	3	5	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
25 to 34 years :— Single	54	70	22	24	–	1	1	3	1	1	2	5	–	–	–	–	–	–	2	5
Married	18	37	9	13	1	–	1	–	–	–	2	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	2	–
Widowed	3	2	1	2	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
35 to 44 years :— Single	33	33	13	8	–	1	1	–	–	1	1	2	–	1	–	–	–	–	1	1
Married	64	64	23	31	–	4	–	1	–	–	–	5	–	3	–	–	–	–	–	2
Widowed	2	3	–	1	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
Unknown	4	–	3	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
45 to 54 years :— Single	36	33	10	7	1	1	–	–	–	1	1	2	1	1	–	1	–	–	–	–
Married	53	53	20	22	2	3	2	4	–	–	4	7	2	1	–	1	–	2	2	3
Widowed	8	13	2	3	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
Unknown	2	–	1	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
55 to 64 years :— Single	14	16	4	3	–	1	1	–	–	–	1	1	1	–	–	–	–	–	–	1
Married	41	40	12	19	–	2	1	2	–	–	1	4	–	2	–	–	–	1	1	1
Widowed	6	16	2	6	–	–	–	2	–	–	–	2	–	–	–	–	–	1	–	1
Unknown	2	–	1	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
65 to 74 years :— Single	9	6	–	1	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
Married	23	21	1	3	1	1	–	–	–	–	1	1	–	1	–	–	1	–	–	–
Widowed	16	22	4	2	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
75 years and upwards :— Single	1	5	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
Married	12	6	1	–	1	–	–	–	–	–	1	–	–	–	–	–	1	–	–	–
Widowed	20	21	–	1	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
Totals :— Single	221	230	66	60	3	6	4	5	1	4	8	15	2	3	–	1	1	–	5	11
Married	214	229	69	93	5	10	4	7	–	–	9	17	2	7	–	1	2	3	5	6
Widowed	55	77	9	15	–	–	–	2	–	–	–	2	–	–	–	–	–	1	–	1
Unknown	8	–	5	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
Totals of each sex	498	536	149	168	8	16	8	14	1	4	17	34	4	10	–	2	3	4	10	18
GRAND TOTALS	1,034		317		24		22		5		51		14		2		7		28

APPENDIX X.

INFORMATION SUPPLIED AS REQUESTED IN ANSWER TO QUESTIONS 14,115, 14,177, 14,342-3.

1. Great James Street, Bedford Row.

London, 2nd August 1910.

DEAR SIR,

ENCLOSED I return you proof as requested together with the details of the out-of-pocket expenses in the case of Logan v. Logan.

I also enclose the taxed bill of costs in the case of Measures v. Measures, the first bill being costs up to setting down and the second being the costs of the trial.

You will see in this, a case which lasted over one day, and the whole of the costs of the respondent amounted to 64*l.* 12*s.* 2*d.*

This was a case from the country, and was contested at every point, with the exception of the question of alimony pendente lite, the amount of which was agreed.

Yours truly,

JOSEPH SYKES.

Logan v. Logan and Stockwell.

1908.		£	s.	d.
January	Forms, letters, telegrams, &c.	0	10	0
	Affidavit in support of petition	0	1	6
	Filing, &c.	1	17	0
	Notarial fees on affidavit of service	0	10	6
	Affidavits of service and affidavit of search	0	19	6
July 17	Setting down for hearing	3	2	6
	Fare from Pudsey to London	2	0	0
	Counsel's fee on brief	2	4	6
	Fare from Pudsey to London day of trial	2	0	0
	Decree absolute	0	10	2
		£13	14	8

Cash 25*l.*

In the High Court of Justice.
Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division.
(Divorce.)

Measures v. Measures, Lamberton, and Holland.

Respondent's Costs of Trial.

Michaelmas Sittings.

£ s. d.		£ s. d.	£ s. d.
	Perusing petitioner's notice to inspect and admit		0 6 8
0 13 4	Attending inspecting and bespeaking copy summons		0 13 4
	Paid for copy	0 1 4
0 1 4	Preparing notice to admit and copy		0 7 6
0 2 6	Service		0 2 6
	Preparing notice to produce		0 7 6
0 2 6	Service		0 2 6
	Instructions for brief, including journey to Wellingborough to take evidence of respondent's parents, and making inquiries as to whereabouts of the servant and shop assistant, and subsequently at Herne Hill, taking her evidence, and also the evidence of respondents, &c.		7 7 0
	Drawing same for, 65		3 5 0
	Fair copy		1 1 8
	Fee to counsel therewith	5 10 0
	Attending him		0 6 8
	Conference fee	1 6 0
0 3 4	Attending appointing conference		0 6 8
	Attending conference		0 13 4
	Copy documents to accompany brief petition, folios 7		0 2 10
	,, particulars of petition, folios 3		0 1 0
	,, answer, folios 8		0 2 8
	,, particulars of answer, folios 6		0 2 0
0 0 4	,, reply, folios 5		0 1 8
0 0 3	,, affidavit of documents, folios 9		0 3 0
	,, police court summons, folios 4		0 1 4
	,, documents disclosed, folios 10		0 3 4
1 7 0	,, correspondence, folios 90		1 10 0
0 2 0	,, petitioner's notice to produce		0 2 0
0 0 8	,, respondent's notice to produce		0 2 0
0 3 4	,, petitioner's notice to admit		0 4 0
0 0 8	,, respondent's notice to admit		0 2 0
	Drawing præcipe and subpœna and issuing		0 6 8
	Paid	0 5 0
0 1 0	Copy for service		0 2 0
0 1 0	Service of same on one witness		0 5 0
	Mileage, Herne Hill, five miles		0 5 0
	Attending searching cause lists		0 13 4
	Notice to respondent to attend court to-morrow		0 3 4
	The like, three witnesses		0 4 6
Dec. 14.	Attending court case in paper, but owing to a misunderstanding petitioner not present, and case stood over to bottom of list, and finally
2 2 0	sent over to following Thursday. Engaged all day		3 3 0
Dec. 20.	Attending court case, part heard, and adjourned to following day		3 3 0
	Refresher to counsel	3 5 6
	Attending him		0 6 8
Dec. 21.	Attending court when case finished and order made for decree nisi.
1 1 0	Costs against both co-respondents. Husband found guilty of cruelty. Decree not to be made absolute until the husband provides a weekly allowance to wife dun sola, &c. Custody of child referred to chambers. Wife to have usual order for costs as to decree of adultery. Full costs on question of cruelty		2 2 0

Dec. 21. £ s. d.		£ s. d.	£ s. d.
	Drawing this bill and copies, folios 11		0 11 0
	Attending filing		0 6 8
	Paid	0 2 6
	Notice of taxing copy and service		0 4 0
0 6 8	Attending taxing		0 13 4
	Attending agreeing amount		0 6 8
1 0 0	Attending registrar with authority for payment out		0 6 8
	Attending at paymaster, lodging same on understanding that costs are paid		0 6 8
	Attending for cheque		0 6 8
	Sittings fee		0 15 0
1 1 0	Letters, &c.		2 2 0
	Paid witnesses:
	Mrs. Measures, 2 days	1 10 0
	Fare from Brighton	1 0 0
0 10 0	Mr. Buckler (fitter in employ of Midland Railway Company), 2 days	1 10 0
0 11 0	Fares from Wellingborough	1 1 2
0 5 0	Mrs. Buckler, 2 days	1 0 0
0 11 2	Fares from Wellingborough	1 1 2
0 5 0	Miss Starmer (domestic servant), 2 days, and expenses from Herne Hill	1 0 0
10 15 0		18 12 8	34 10 10
	Disbursements	- -	18 12 8
			53 3 6
	Taxed off	- -	10 15 0
			42 8 6
	Paid taxing	- -	1 2 0
			43 10 6

In the High Court of Justice.
Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division.
(Divorce.)

Measures v. Measures, Lamberton, and Holland.

Respondent's Costs up to Setting Down.

Trinity Sittings.

1906. May 30. £ s. d.		£ s. d.	£ s. d.
	Instructions to defend		0 6 8
	Attending, retaining Mr. Morle		0 6 8
	Paid his fee and clerk	1 3 6
	Perusing petition		0 6 8
	Perusing citation		0 1 8
	Attending entering appearance		0 6 8
	Paid	0 2 0
	Notice of appearance		0 4 0
0 6 8	Instructions for petition for alimony		0 6 8
1 0 0	Drawing same		1 0 0
0 1 4	Engrossing fair copy, folios 4		0 1 4
0 3 4	Attending counsel to settle		0 3 4
1 3 6	Paid his fee and clerk	1 3 6
June 16. 0 3 6	Writing petitioner's solicitor prior to filing petition, asking what provision petitioner would make with a view of saving this expense of filing petition, &c.		0 3 6
June 21.	Drawing and engrossing summons for particulars of paragraphs 4 and 5 of the petition		0 5 0
	Attending issuing same		0 6 8
	Paid issuing	0 8 0
	Copy and service		0 3 6
	Attending hearing order made		0 6 8
	Attending obtaining order		0 6 8
	Copy and service		0 3 6
June 30. 0 3 6	On receipt of your letter offering the sum of 10*s.* per week. Alimony pendente lite. Writing my client thereon		0 3 6
0 6 8	Attending respondent and discussing the question of alimony, and I was instructed to ask for 25*s.* a week seeing that the respondent was maintaining the child		0 6 8
July 3. 0 3 6	Writing Messrs. Nicholson thereon. On receipt of reply that their client could not offer more than 10*s.* a week		0 3 6
0 6 8	Attending respondent, who finally instructed me to accept the offer rather than delay the proceedings		0 6 8

£ s. d.		£ s. d.	£ s. d.
July 18.	Writing the petitioner's solicitors thereon, and requesting them to pay
0 3 6	the alimony to respondent's mother, who had the child with her -		0 3 6
0 1 0	On receipt of reply requiring a formal authority for them to pay the mother - - - - - - - - -
	Drawing authority - - - - - - - -		0 1 0
July 26.	Writing respondent to give me a call and that she was required a formal
0 3 6	authority - - - - - - - - -		0 3 6
0 6 8	Attending on her calling and signing the authority - - -		0 6 8
July 28.
0 3 6	Writing petitioner's solicitors, enclosing same - - - -		0 3 6
	All proceedings in alimony - - - - - -		1 10 0
	Perusing petitioner's affidavit as to particulars, 3 folios - - -		0 1 0
	Instructions for answer - - - - - - -		0 6 8
	Drawing same and copy - - - - - - -		1 0 0
	Attending counsel to settle same - - - - -		0 3 4
	Paid his fee and clerk - - - - - -	1 3 6
	Instructions for affidavit. Verifying answers - - - -		0 6 8
	Drawing same - - - - - - - -		0 6 8
	Attending respondent to be sworn - - - - -		0 6 8
	Paid oath - - - - - - - -	0 1 6
	Attending filing answer and affidavit - - - - -		0 6 8
	Paid - - - - - - - - -	0 5 0
	Copy answer for service, folios 8 - - - - -		0 2 8
	Attending service - - - - - - -		0 3 4
	Summons for discovery - - - - - - -		0 6 8
	Attending issuing - - - - - - - -		0 6 8
	Paid - - - - - - - - -	0 8 0
	Copy and service - - - - - - -		0 3 0
	Attending summons order made - - - - -		0 6 8
	Attending for order - - - - - - -		0 6 8
	Copy and service - - - - - - -		0 3 6
	Paid for copy, petitioner's affidavit of discovery - - - -	0 3 0
0 3 8	Perusing same - - - - - - - -		0 6 8
0 0 6	Notice to produce documents, copy and service - - - -		0 4 6
	Attending inspecting documents - - - - -		0 13 4
	Paid for copies of documents - - - - - -	0 3 4
	Sittings fee - - - - - - - -		0 15 0
	Michaelmas Sittings.
	Attending, giving further time for reply - - - -		0 6 8
	Perusing reply - - - - - - - -		0 6 8
	Perusing notice cause set down - - - - - -		0 1 0
	Drawing bill of costs and copy, folios 12 - - - -		0 12 0
	Attending filing bill - - - - - - -		0 6 8
	Paid - - - - - - - - -	0 2 6
	Notice of taxing copy and service - - - - -		0 4 0
	Attending taxing - - - - - - -		0 13 4
	Attending agreeing amount - - - - - -		0 6 8
	Attending fixing amount of future costs - - - -		0 6 8
	Attending for order - - - - - - -		0 6 8
	Paid for same and fixing security - - - - -		0 15 0
	Copy and service - - - - - - -		0 3 6
	Sittings fee - - - - - - - -		0 15 0
5 1 0		5 3 10	20 7 10
	Disbursements - - -	- -	5 3 10
			25 11 8
	Taxed off - - -	-	5 1 0
			20 10 8
	Paid taxing - - -	- -	0 11 0
			21 1 8

APPENDIX XI.

(A.)

EXHIBITS MARKED "D. 1" TO "D. 70," REFERRED TO IN THE EVIDENCE OF MR. HERBERT GREENWOOD WRIGLEY; being notes of Cases specially investigated by the following Solicitors:—

Mr. Frank Barratt.
„ Gilbert Barratt.
„ Jas. Brooke Garner.
„ Charles Grundy.
„ A. E. Hanson.
„ Harold Scholfield.
„ H. Greenwood Wrigley.
„ Edgar Youatt.

At the Art Museum and University Settlement, Ancoats, Manchester.

D. No. 1.

20th November 1909.

Name.—G. A. A.
Occupation.—Cabinet maker, 30*s.* a week.
Date of marriage.—March 1901. Age when married, 20; wife, 18.
Place where married.—Church of England.
Nature of relief required.—Divorce.
Reason for requiring relief.—Wife committed adultery with friend of applicant of 15 years' standing. Applicant discovered offence after a child had been born to this man. Wants custody of his second child. Wife now living in adultery.
Solicitor's observations.—Might be able to raise 10*l.* to 15*l.* to pay for a divorce.
Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 2.

17th November 1909.

Name.—S. A.
Occupation.—Tram conductor.
Date of marriage.—February 1903. Age when married, 22 years.
Place where married.—Registry Office.
Nature of relief required.—As to liability to support wife. ? Divorce.
Reason for requiring relief.—Applicant's wife emigrated to Canada three years ago (being unsatisfied with applicant's position) under Salvation Army Scheme. Afterwards applied to applicant for support. It is known that she is dressing expensively and living extravagantly, an army officer being responsible for this. Inquiry if made would no doubt reveal grounds for divorce. Wife refuses to return. One child of marriage in custody of applicant.
Solicitor's observations.—Applicant earns 26*s.* per week and has no means for procuring divorce.
Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D No. 3.

10th November 1909.

Name.—H. B.
Occupation.—Fitter, 37*s.* per week.
Date of marriage.—October 1902. Age when married, 19 years.
Place where married.—Registry Office.
Nature of relief required.—Divorce.
Reason for requiring relief.—Wife left applicant 10th April. Wife has been living with a man for the last five months at various addresses. Previously, about four years ago, his wife had a child by another man, but applicant forgave her.
Solicitor's observations.—Applicant not called on to support his wife because she can get more out of the other man. Could pay a small sum for divorce, but expense of taking witnesses to London would be too great.
Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 4.

10th November 1909.

Name.—E. B., wife of P. B.
Occupation.—Rag sorter.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—October 1897. Age when married, 24.
Place where married.—Roman Catholic Church.
Nature of relief required.—Maintenance.
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband deserted her December 26th, 1908, leaving her with one child aged eight years. No proceedings taken. Cannot definitely state if living with anyone else, but believes so. Wages not exceed 10*s.* per week.
Solicitor's observations.—Would avail herself of opportunity for divorce but is penniless. Unless same absolutely free would be unable to avail herself of same.
Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

(MEMO.—In a case like this it would be impracticable to look to husband to reimburse costs.—H. G. W.)

D. No. 5.

17th November 1909.

Name.—L. B., wife of W. E. B.
Occupation of husband.—Labourer.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—May 1892. Age when married, 31.
Place where married.—Church of England.
Nature of relief required.—Maintenance.
Reason for requiring relief.—Desertion by husband nine years ago. Originally allowed 14*s.* per week. Now 5*s.* per week. Now living with another woman. Cannot say as to any children born, but reason to believe so. Never applied for summons, mutually arranged with husband for maintenance to be paid. Applicant has three children, eldest 17 years, youngest 10 years.
Solicitor's observations.—Income under 1*l.* a week.
Solicitor's initials.—J. B. G.

(See Memo. on D. 4.)

D. No. 6.

10th November 1909.

Name.—A. B., wife of J. B.
Occupation of husband.—Manager of shop.
Date of marriage.—October 1887. Age when married, 20.
Place where married.—Roman Catholic Church.
Nature of relief required.—Maintenance.
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband not worked for three months. Not really worked since September 1908. Never sober. She earns 7*s.* a week. Family four (21, 16, 14, 12). Children earning 18*s.* 6*d.* a week.
Solicitor's observations.—This is a case where the wife would be much better off if rid of husband, but he has not done anything which entitles her either to separation or divorce. No case for divorce.
Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

(MEMO.—Separation would adequately meet this case.—H. G. W.)

D. No. 7.

10th November 1909.

Name.—E. B., wife of J. B.
Occupation of husband.—Iron turner.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—November 1888. Age when married, 20.
Place where married.—Registry Office.
Nature of relief required.—Divorce.
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband cohabited with woman for the past seven years. Separation order granted in 1892. Husband is over two years in arrear.

Solicitor's observations.—Expense of investigating and taking proceedings in London precludes applicant from moving for divorce.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

(MEMO.—If applicant were helped to obtain divorce, some part of the costs could be recovered from the husband.—H. G. W.)

D. No. 8.

20th November 1909.

Name.—W. B.

Occupation.—Labourer.

Date of marriage.—December 1906. Age when married, 29; wife, 23.

Place where married.—Registry Office.

Nature of relief required.—Divorce or separation with custody of children.

Reason for requiring relief.—Deserted by wife, who is living with another man.

Solicitor's observations.—Cannot afford the luxury of divorce or separation; hence, cannot obtain custody of his child.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

(MEMO.—Would it be possible to have a simple order for custody of child in a case like this, without the necessity for proceeding for divorce or separation? —H. G. W.)

D. No. 9.

20th November 1909.

Name.—S. E. C., wife of J. C.

Occupation of applicant.—Laundress.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—November 1907. Age when married, 35.

Place where married.—Registry Office.

Nature of relief required.—Separation and (if possible) divorce.

Reason for requiring relief.—Now living apart from husband owing to his drunken habits. Children by her first husband refused to live with him. Husband very sottish, and no doubt misconducts himself with other women, but as yet no direct evidence.

Solicitor's observations.—No means whatever of taking any proceedings. Earns 5*s*. to 10*s*. per week by washing.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 10.

10th November 1909.

Name.—J. C., wife of H. C.

Occupation of applicant.—Cook, in service (living at home).

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—20 years ago. Age when married, 18.

Place where married.—Registry Office.

Nature of relief required.—Wishes to know if can re-marry.

Reason for requiring relief.—Husband went to America, 1903. Corresponded for 12 months, since then no information. Four children, ages 20, 18, 11, and 7. Strictly chaste since husband deserted her.

Solicitor's observations.—This is a case where an amendment of the law is necessary.

Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

D. No. 11.

10th November 1909.

Name.—E. C., wife of C. H. C.

Occupation of applicant.—Dressmaker.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—April 1897. Age when married, 21.

Place where married.—Independent Chapel.

Nature of relief required.—Separation.

Reason for requiring relief.—Husband and wife by mutual agreement agreed to separate, 2nd October 1907. 7*s*. a week. Not paid since April 1908. Reason for separation, another woman; believe still with her, although not living together.

Solicitor's observations.—Wife would like divorce if able to obtain same cheap. Am, however, of opinion that this is a case which would require much further inquiry as wife has only suspicions as to other woman. No direct evidence.

Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

D. No. 12.

22nd November 1909.

Name.—E. C., wife of F. C.

Occupation of husband.—Unknown.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—May 1907. Age when married 20; husband, 23.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Maintenance for child (15 months old).

Reason for requiring relief.—Desertion, coupled with cruelty. ? Adultery.

Solicitor's observations.—Applicant says she can keep herself and only wants support for the child. If she had grounds for divorce would try to obtain same, but has no means of doing so; hence had not tried to get evidence.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 13.

10th November 1909.

Name.—S. C., wife of R. C.

Occupation of applicant.—Cotton operative.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—1878. Age when married, 25; husband, 26.

Nature of relief required.—Divorce.

Reason for requiring relief.—Husband constantly going after other women. Had one child (son). After 17 years of married life husband went to America and has not since been heard of.

Solicitor's observations.—This is a case where, if divorce had been cheaper, the wife might have obtained one, as the husband had previously deserted her and also been guilty of misconduct.

Solicitor's initials.—E. Y.

D. No. 14.

20th November 1909.

Name.—N. D., wife of J. D.

Occupation of husband.—Fitter.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—1898. Age when married, 18.

Place where married.—Registry Office.

Nature of relief required.—Divorce.

Reason for requiring relief.—Husband had two children to another woman after deserting applicant. Only lived five weeks together. One child of marriage.

Solicitor's observations. — Applicant a weaver. Could not afford a divorce. Might be able to raise 10*l*. to 15*l*. if could get cheap divorce.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 15.

13th November 1909.

Name.—E. A. D., wife of J. D.

Occupation of applicant.—Weaver.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—November 1901. Age when married, 20.

Place where married.—Registry Office.

Nature of relief required. — Maintenance order obtained but not complied with.

Reason for requiring relief.—Warrant out for husband's arrest. Deserted wife four years ago and has been living with another woman over two years. Child born to her 2nd May 1908. Applicant has one child born June 1906; order, 7*s*. a week.

Solicitor's observations.—This is clearly a case for divorce, but applicant has no means. There is no evidence of any cruelty.

Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

D. No. 16.

20th November 1909.

Name.—W. D.
Occupation.—Warehouseman.
Date of marriage.—November 1883. Age when married, 25; wife, 26.
Place where married.—Roman Catholic Church.
Reason for requiring relief.—Wife left applicant, and he hears that she is drinking and living as a prostitute. Two children.
Solicitor's observations.—Could find about 15*l.* for divorce if he could get one for that amount.
Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 17.

13th November 1909.

Name.—M. D., wife of J. H. D.
Occupation of husband.—Warehouseman.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—July 1897. Age when married, 23.
Place where married.—Registry Office.
Nature of relief required.—Maintenance.
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband left England for Australia some years ago and has not heard of him since.
Solicitor's observations.—Husband left for Australia, saying he hoped to improve his position. Since his departure applicant has lost sight of him as he has not communicated with her. (?) Should not such desertion constitute civil decease of the offending party so as to enable the innocent party to re-marry.
Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 18.

13th November 1909.

Name.—T. D., wife of J. D.
Occupation of husband.—Tailor.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—May 1904. Age when married, in 16th year.
Place where married.—Roman Catholic Church.
Reason for requiring relief.—Two children. Husband left her and gone to America.
Solicitor's observations.—Husband went to America to improve his position, leaving the two children with his parents in Ireland. Applicant would like her two children, but his parents won't give them to her. She is now only 21 years of age, and the consequences of a separation at such an age may be very serious.
Is not the husband in this case practically dead so far as the applicant is concerned?
Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 19.

13th November 1909.

Name.—L. E., wife of J. E.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—January 1896. Age when married, 18.
Place where married.—Church of England.
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband left her in 1902, with three children living, applicant being pregnant. Last child died. Joined Army, then she got 10*s.* a week allowance. Now left Army, but receiving reserve pay. Never paid anything since left Army. Threatened to take children. Last Easter took possession. Mother wants children back. Children now 12, 11, and 9. Divorce wished for, but under present law impossible. No proof of adultery by husband.
Solicitor's observations.—This is a case which shows a very serious defect in the practice of granting summonses for maintenance. The husband is daily at a well-known hotel, and takes out commercial travellers' samples, &c., and is well known to the management, &c., but as the wife cannot give a definite address for service a summons will not be granted.
Solicitor's initials.—C. G.
(No case for divorce.—H. G. W.)
(The solicitor who investigated this matter informs me that the applicant emphatically stated that she was informed that the summons would not be granted unless her husband's "residence" was given. If this is so it shows laxity either in the magistrate's clerk's department or on the part of the lay magistrates.—9.6.10., H. G. W.)

D. No. 20.

13th November 1909.

Name.—F. F.
Occupation.—Sheeting Department (L. and N.W. Railway). Wages, 24*s.*
Wife.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—August 1889. Age when married, 28; wife, 21.
Place where married.—Church of England.
Reason for requiring relief. — Wife left him 13 months ago and returned for one month last March. and then left again. Has not been seen since.
Solicitor's observations.—It is probable that wife is living in adultery, only applicant has no proof. He has not attempted to get any proof up to the present time. Applicant could not possibly find more than 10*l.*
Solicitor's initials.—F. B.

D. No. 21.

10th November 1909.

Name.—L. F., wife of J. F.
Occupation of applicant.—Shirtmaker.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—January 1895. Age when married, 21.
Place where married.—Registry Office.
Nature of relief required.—Divorce.
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband deserted her October 1898. Has obtained separation order and maintenance, 10*s.* a week. Never paid. No information as to husband.
Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

D. No. 22.

20th November 1909.

Name.—E. F., wife of G. F.
Occupation of applicant.—Mantle maker.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—December 1896. Age when married.—22.
Place where married.—Church of England.
Nature of relief required.—Separation order.
Reason for requiring relief.—Persistent cruelty.
Solicitor's observations.—Applicant was not aware that husband had ever been guilty of adultery. If applicant had any ground for divorce she could not afford to pay anything; only earning 10*s.* per week. Helped by father, aged 82, who had a pension of 5*s.* per week, and another source of income which brought in 5*s.* per week.
Solicitor's initials.—G. B.
(No case for divorce —H. G. W.)

D. No. 23.

13th November 1909.

Name.—J. F.
Occupation.—Insurance agent.
Wife.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—December 1893. Age when married, 20; wife, 20.
Place where married.—Church of England.
Reason for requiring relief.—Children two, aged 14 and 15 respectively, living with applicant.
Solicitor's observations. — Wife left applicant in July 1898, and has not seen her since. He is quite certain that she is living with some other man (if she is alive), for subsequently to her leaving him he found out that in her previous life, when living with him, she was guilty of misconduct. Although applicant has no desire to be married again he is most anxious to obtain a divorce on account of his children. The expense of divorce to applicant is too great. He could afford about 20*l.* at the very most.

Solicitor's initials.—F. B.

D. No. 24.

22nd November 1909.

Name.—T. J.

Occupation.—Ring doubler.

Date of marriage.—August 1901. Age when married, 22; wife's age, 21.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Separation (? divorce) and custody of child (5 years old).

Reason for requiring relief.—Adultery of wife.

Solicitor's observations.—Applicant could pay a small sum for divorce, but, owing to his financial position, his child has to be left with his wife who is living in adultery.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 25.

13th November 1909.

Name.—J. L., wife of M. L.

Occupation of husband.—Music hall artist.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—February 1882. Age when married, 17.

Reason for requiring relief.—Number of children five, all living with applicant, aged 27, 24, 20, 14, 9. Husband left applicant six years ago. He is at present living with another woman. No means for separation, much less divorce.

Solicitor's initials.—F. B.

D. No. 26.

13th November 1909.

Name.—E. M., wife of T. M.

Occupation of husband.—Labourer.

Date of marriage.—October 1909. Age when first married, 19.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Memo.—Department had been previously consulted by applicant's present husband before they were married as to whether or not he could safely marry applicant.

Solicitor's observations.—Applicant was previously married 17 years ago at the same church to a man who left her six weeks after marriage. She has not heard of him for the last 10 years.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 27.

13th November 1909.

Name.—J. M.

Occupation.—Carter, 22*s.* per week.

Date of marriage.—December 1896. Age when married, 24.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Divorce.

Reason for requiring relief.—Wife left applicant first week in April last, leaving with a man who was lodging with them and is now living with him. One child of marriage, 13 years of age (boy).

Solicitor's observations.—Would be able to pay a small sum for a divorce (up to 10*l.*).

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 28.

13th November 1909.

Name.—S. M.

Occupation.—Labourer; wages, 32*s.*

Date of marriage.—1883. Age when married, 27.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Solicitor's observations.—Separation order made against applicant on ground of desertion in December 1908. 7*s.* 6*d.* per week. Cause of desertion, money differences. Wife is now living in adultery.

Solicitor's initials.—F. B.

D. No. 29.

13th November 1909.

Name.—W. M., wife of J. W. M.

Occupation of applicant.—Caretaker.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—March 1899. Age when married, 20.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Reason for requiring relief.—Separation order, February 2nd, 1909. 5*s.* a week. No children. Earning 17*s.* 6*d.* Rent, coal, and gas. Husband has taken furniture. Husband not paying. Husband wants to return; very drunken. If returns to husband position of caretaker lost.

Solicitor's observations.—Wife has not considered question of divorce; states that she has had enough of husbands.

Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

(Memo.—No reason for divorce as no suggestion of adultery.—H. G. W.)

D. No. 30.

13th November 1909.

Name.—C. M.

Occupation.—Warehouse porter.

Wife.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—September 1884. Age when married, 19.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Guilty party.

Reason for requiring relief.—Took drink, and hence separation. Wife now living with another man. Supposed to be lodger. Another married man frequently calling there.

Solicitor's observations.—No absolute evidence, but very strong suspicions. If the man were able to have wife watched, no doubt evidence could be found.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 31.

20th November 1909

Name.—C. W. N.

Occupation.—Cook.

Wife.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—July 1900. Age when married, 28.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Divorce.

Reason for requiring relief.—Wife living with lodger for past two years; had child by lodger 11th May 1909.

Solicitor's observations.—Might be able to raise 10*l.* for a divorce, but this would be maximum; number of witnesses.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 32.

13th November 1909.

Name.—E. O., wife of A. E. O.

Occupation of applicant.—Office cleaner.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—April 1896. Age when married, 24.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Reason for requiring relief.—Separation order granted May 1905, on grounds of cruelty and neglect.

Solicitor's observations.—Husband left the kingdom and has not complied with separation order. This is a very hard case, as the applicant is of a very superior class of woman, and if she had been free could have made a good marriage. She has to clean offices for a living.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 33.

29th November 1909.

Name.—H. P., wife of G. P.

Occupation.—Unknown.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of Marriage.—August 1874. Age when married, 21.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—As to separation obtained.

Reason for requiring relief.—Married 35 years. Seven children born, four living. On 21st January

1898, order made by magistrates for payment of 12*s.* 6*d.* per week, in consequence of desertion. Payments made irregularly. Husband been living with another woman, one child having been born but since died. On account of quarrels husband approached applicant and induced her to resume cohabitation. Now again deserted applicant. Husband resumed cohabitation with woman.

Solicitor's observations.—A fit case for divorce.

Solicitor's initials.—J. B. G.

D. No. 34.

15th November 1909.

Name.—S. A. P., wife of T. P.

Occupation of husband.—Hawker.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—November 1896. Age when married, 19.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Separation.

Reason for requiring relief.—Desertion, has been cohabiting with woman.

Solicitor's observations.—Four children (10, 5, 2 years, and 3 months); two children deceased. Cannot afford even to pay a solicitor to appear for her on application for separati n. Husband has served six months out of last 12 months for neglect of family.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 35.

19th November 1909.

Name.—W. R.

Occupation.—Railway goods porter.

Wife.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—July 1897. Age when married. 21 years.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Divorce.

Reason for requiring relief.—Two weeks after marriage wife left home and remained away three nights. Afterwards brought home by applicant: stayed at home three weeks and when applicant arrived home on the following Saturday (at end of three weeks), found house empty, furniture sold by wife which belonged to applicant. Afterwards saw wife Easter, 1899, then gave her 8*s.* per week. Afterwards found living with another man. Since ascertained had four children by other men. Wife has no children by applicant. Applicant in lodgings. Wages, 19*s.* 10*d.* per week.

A deserving case and one fit for divorce.

Solicitor's initials.—J. B. G.

D. No. 36.

13th November 1909.

Name.—M. A. R., wife of W. H. R.

Occupation of husband.—Moulder.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—August 1905. Age when married, 18.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Reason for requiring relief.—Desertion: husband has cohabited with another woman. Two children.

Solicitor's observations.—Order made, 5*s.* per week, November 1908. If could afford a divorce would prefer one. Earns 8*s.* per week by working in warehouse.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 37.

10th November 1909.

Name.—I. R.

Occupation.—Tailor, earns 20*s.* to 25*s.* per week.

Wife.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—August 1908. Age when married, 26 years.

Place where married.—Synagogue.

Nature of relief required.—Divorce.

Reason for requiring relief.—Wife cohabiting with lodger in her mother's house. One child of marriage left with applicant.

Solicitor's observations.—Applicant could not afford to take witnesses to London even if he had a free divorce.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 38.

17th November 1909.

Name.—E. A. S., wife of F. S.

Occupation of applicant.—Charwoman.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—December 1892. Age when married, 29.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Desired to know if could re-marry or could obtain divorce.

Reason for requiring relief.—Not seen husband for last 12 years. Heard of him last three years ago. Have obtained three magistrates' orders against husband for maintenance in consequence of assaults committed. Husband been convicted on many occasions for felony and other offences (stealing fowls, lead, &c.). Orders made against husband on bastardy summons.

Solicitor's observations.—Advised applicant she could obtain divorce, but could not re-marry (unless divorced) without being liable to prosecution for bigamy.

Solicitor's initials.—J. B. G.

D. No. 39.

10th November 1909.

Name.—H. S.

Occupation.—Fitter.

Wife.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—July 1904. Age when married, 24.

Place where married.—Registry Office.

Nature of relief required.—Divorce.

Reason for requiring relief.—Wife left him about April 1905. No children. Previously married; one child. Wife has been living with other men. At present in prison for assaulting man with whom she has gone through marriage ceremony. Husband has been requested to give evidence for bigamy. Wages, 25*s.* per week.

Solicitor's observations.—This is a very suitable case for divorce, but husband unable to pay any expenses.

Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

(Memo.—I have seen this applicant on several occasions and believe he ought to be able to pay 10*l.* towards cost of divorce.—H. G. W.)

D. No. 40.

8th November 1909.

Name.—R. S.

Occupation.—Engineer (when working); at present unemployed.

Date of marriage.—April 1890. Age when married, 24 years.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Reason for requiring relief.—After birth of three children wife became infatuated, leaving applicant with two children, taking the youngest child, 6 months old, with her, and lived with another man. Subsequently one child was born, this man being the father. Arrangements were made by applicant for his parents to take care of his two children, he going to Canada. On returning to England, 12 months last March, saw wife and she begged to resume cohabitation, pleading that she would reform and atone for past offences. Applicant forgave his wife on condition that the illegitimate child should not be brought to the house. After resuming cohabitation wife now threatens to bring illegitimate child to the house, and this has caused trouble between applicant and his wife who has had to leave. Wife now threatens to commence proceedings unless she receives 15*s.* per week maintenance.

Solicitor's initials.—J. B. G.

D. No. 41.

20th November 1909.

Name.—S. T., wife of W. H. T.

Occupation of husband.—Iron turner. Wages, 2*l.* and bonus.

Date of marriage. — June 1882. Age when married, 18.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Separation.

Reason for requiring relief.—For cruelty; advised no case. Children, three living, all under 21.

Solicitor's observations.—Applicant's husband has been for some time living in adultery. Could possibly pay 10*l.*

Solicitor's initials.—F. B.

D. No. 42.

10th November 1909.

Name.—M. T., wife of W. J. T.

Occupation of husband.—Sawyer.

Date of marriage. — July 1899. Age when married, 18.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—To be enabled to marry again.

Reason for requiring relief.—Not heard of husband for last seven years. Husband went to the war 10 years ago. Up to declaration of peace applicant received pay from War Office. Then War Office reported that he had been drafted home. Not heard of or from him since. Now wants to re-marry.

Solicitor's observations.—Neither War Office nor husband's people know of his whereabouts. After married short time, husband communicated venereal disease to applicant, which has since been cured. Applicant is only 28 years of age now. What will be the result of her not being in a position to enter into a valid marriage?

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 43.

10th November 1909.

Name.—W. W.

Occupation.—Drainer.

Date of marriage.—September 1895. Age when married, 23; wife, 21.

Nature of relief required.—Divorce.

Reason for requiring relief.—Wife is pregnant by a youth, aged 18. Husband positive he is not the father, but knows that proof would be difficult. This couple had 11 children in 12 years!! Four only are now living.

Solicitor's observations.—Husband seems respectable working man and is greatly incensed against the youth, but sees that his wife is probably most to blame. If the youth had means he would go in for a divorce, but is unable to do so on ground of expense, and the matter will probably end in desertion, and if the husband takes the children, as he probably would, it would probably mean a life of immorality for the wife.

Solicitor's initials.—E. Y.

D. No. 44.

29th November 1909.

Name.—J. H. D.

Occupation.—Labourer.

Wife.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—March 1893. Age when married, 20; wife, 19.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Custody of son aged 15½. Divorce in formâ pauperis desired.

Reason for requiring relief. — Wife living with another man. Four illegitimate children. Wife has caused son to leave his father. Applicant wishes to marry again (if possible).

Solicitor's observations.—The applicant has been a soldier (Garrison Artillery), 15 years' service. On return found wife living with another man. Son came to father on his return, placed with aunt, mother caused lad to come back to her. Applicant has allowed wife regular maintenance during married life up to discovery of misconduct, but nothing since. Advised to obtain custody of son.

Solicitor's initials.—H. S.

D. No. 45.

29th November 1909.

Name.—A. K., wife of A. J. K.

Occupation of husband.—Builder and contractor.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—July 1890. Age when married, 25.

Place when married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Maintenance or divorce.

Reason for requiring relief.—Husband deserted. Gone to Australia with another woman with whom he had married (bigamously).

Solicitor's observations. — Case for divorce but unable to bear expense.

Solicitor's initials.—A. E. H.

D. No. 46.

20th November 1909.

Name.—A. R., wife of A. R.

Occupation of husband.—Labourer.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.— Christmas day, 1885. Age when married, 24.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Divorce.

Reason for requiring relief.—Cruelty. Husband committed for common assault 13 years ago. Is living with a woman by whom he has a child.

Solicitor's observations. — Has no means, consequently divorce impossible.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 47.

20th November 1909.

Name.—T. S., wife of G. E. S.

Occupation of applicant.—Housekeeper.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.— June 1870. Age when married, 18.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Divorce or separation.

Reason for requiring relief.—Husband deserted applicant December 1907 (leaving her with seven children); living with another woman.

Solicitor's observations.—Applicant might be able to raise a sum up to 10*l.* if she could obtain a divorce for that sum.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 48.

20th November 1909.

Name.—M. S., wife of A. S.

Occupation of husband.—Insurance agent.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage. — August 1896. Age when married, 19.

Place where married.—Wesleyan Church.

Nature of relief required.—Separation agreement.

Reason for requiring relief.—Husband now living with another woman.

Solicitor's observations.—Husband also came and said his wife nearly ruined him by extravagant living and says that when separated he was compelled to get a housekeeper. Hence his present condition of life. Wife is not at present anxious for a divorce.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 49.

20th November 1909.

Name.—E. V., wife of M. V.

Occupation of husband.—Photographer.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—June 1907. Age when married, 19.

Place where married.—Registry Office.

Nature of relief required.—Divorce.

Reason for requiring relief.—Husband deserted applicant 16th October 1907, and went back to Belgium. Has since married again in Paris.

Solicitor's observations.—No means of obtaining divorce owing to poverty. Wants to marry again. Fear that inability will lead to immorality.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 50.

20th November 1909.

Name.—G. W.
Occupation.—Labourer.
Wife.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—1895. Age when married, 23.
Place where married.—Church of England.
Reason for requiring relief.—Wife living in adultery, and when consulted before was pledging his credit.
Solicitor's observations.—Has no immediate necessity for divorce.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 51.

13th November 1909.

Name.—W. B.
Occupation.—Labourer.
Wife.—Living apart.
Nature of relief required.—Divorce.
Reason for requiring relief. — Wife living in adultery.
Solicitor's observations.—Applicant earning 15*s.* to 20*s.* per week. Might raise very small sum if able to obtain divorce.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 52.

13th November 1909.

Name.—S. E. C., wife of J. C.
Husband.—Living apart.
Nature of relief required.—Divorce.
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband now serving time for bigamy.
Solicitor's observations.—Applicant deprived of her rights by reason of her impecunious position.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 53.

13th November 1909.

Name.—J. C.
Occupation.—Labourer.
Wife.—Living apart.
Nature of relief required.—Divorce.
Reason for requiring relief.—Wife living with another man by whom she has had four children.
Solicitor's observations.—Applicant would do his utmost to raise (say) 10*l.* (which would be his limit), if he could get a divorce.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 54.

13th November 1909.

Name.—J. H.
Occupation.—Moulder.
Wife.—Living apart.
Nature of relief required.—Divorce.
Reason for requiring relief.—Wife living in adultery.
Solicitor's observations.—This applicant might be able to raise 20*l.* towards costs of divorce. He is clearly entitled to one.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 55.

13th November 1909.

Name.—J. M.
Occupation.—Labourer.
Wife.—Living apart.
Nature of relief required.—Separation or divorce.
Reason for requiring relief.—Wife living in adultery.
Solicitor's observations. — Applicant wanted a separation in police court for his children's sake. Could not obtain same. If had been wealthier could have obtained divorce.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 56.

13th November 1909.

Name.—E. A. P., wife of J. N. P.
Occupation of husband.—Architect.
Husband.—Living apart.
Nature of relief required.—Maintenance. Divorce.
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband deserted her and is now living in Paris.
Solicitor's observations.—Misconduct could surely be inferred from surrounding circumstances and might easily be proved if applicant were in a financial position to do so.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 57.

13th November 1909.

Name.—G. A. P.
Occupation.—Salesman.
Wife.—Living apart.
Nature of relief required.—Divorce.
Reason for requiring relief.—Wife has left him and he hears that she is misconducting herself with men.
Solicitor's observations.—Applicant could be able to raise 20*l.* (at the utmost) towards cost of a divorce.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 58.

13th December 1909.

Name.—A. N., wife of A. N.
Occupation of husband.—Railway guard; wages 30*s.*
Date of marriage.—1900. Age when married, 25.
Place where married.—Church of England.
Nature of relief required.—Separation. Preferably divorce.
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband contracted venereal disease and infected applicant. Still goes with women, and tells his wife to leave him, using very filthy language.
Solicitor's observations.—When applicant infected with disease she would have left her husband and commenced proceedings for divorce if she had known it had been possible and she had possessed sufficient money. Ignorance and poverty prevented her acting. Now she cannot even obtain separation order.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 59.

6th December 1909.

Name.—W. B.
Occupation.—Carter.
Wife.— Living apart.
Nature of relief required.—Divorce.
Reason for requiring relief.—Wife left applicant and believed to be leading an immoral life.
Solicitor's observations.—Applicant could find small sum for divorce.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 60.

6th December 1909.

Name.—W. D.
Occupation.—At present unemployed.
Wife.—Living apart.
Nature of relief required.—Divorce.
Reason for requiring relief. — Wife living in adultery.
Solicitor's observations.—Applicant has no means whatever.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 61.

6th December 1909.

Name.—J. F., wife of W. A. F.
Occupation of husband.—Dairyman.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—December 1904. Age when married, 24.
Place where married.—Registry Office.
Nature of relief required.—Separation.
Reason for requiring relief.—Desertion and alleged adultery.

Solicitor's observations. — Applicant entitled to separation order.

Solicitor's initials.—J. D. R.

D. No. 62.

6th December 1909.

Name.—E. H., wife of C. W. H.
Occupation of husband.—Unknown.
Husband.—Living apart.
Nature of relief required.—Declaration of decease of husband.
Reason for requiring relief.—Not heard of husband for past five years.
Solicitor's observations.—Applicant desires to remarry. It is feared that her inability to do so will lead to immorality.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 63.

6th December 1909.

Name.—E. McN.
Occupation.—Warehouseman.
Wife.—Living apart.
Nature of relief required.—Divorce.
Reason for requiring relief. — Wife living in adultery.
Solicitor's observations.—Applicant might be able to raise 10*l.* to 15*l.*

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 64.

6th December 1909.

Name.—M. A. P., wife of J. T. P.
Occupation of husband.—Collier.
Husband.—Living apart.
Nature of relief required.—Divorce (?).
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband left applicant four years ago and lived with another woman. Applicant two years later went to live with another man. Children, three by husband, and one illegitimate.
Solicitor's observations.—If wife had been able to obtain cheap divorce would this have happened?

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 65.

6th December 1909.

Name.—W. P.
Occupation.—Colour maker.
Nature of relief required.—Divorce.
Reason for requiring relief.—Wife has misconducted herself with the lodger.
Solicitor's observations.—Applicant might be able to find small sum towards costs of divorce.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 66.

6th December 1909.

Name.—M. P., wife of G. P.
Occupation of husband.—Butcher.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—October 1907. Age when married, 22.
Place where married.—Church of England.
Nature of relief required.—Separation.
Reason for requiring relief.—Children, two; both aged under 15 months. Cruelty and adultery.
Solicitor's observations.—Good case for divorce. No means whatever. Has land. Only earning 30*s.* per week.

Solicitor's initials.—F. B.

D. No. 67.

6th December 1909.

Name.—M. R., wife of J. R.
Occupation of husband.—Warehouseman.
Husband.—Living apart.
Nature of relief required.—Divorce.
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband living with another woman. Two children of the marriage. Husband allows applicant 7*s.* per week for maintenance of herself and the children.
Solicitor's observations.—No means for divorce.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 68.

6th December 1909.

Name.—E. W., wife of J. W.
Occupation of husband.—Clerk.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—August 1906. Age when married, 30.
Place where married.—Registry Office.
Nature of relief required.—Divorce.
Reason for requiring relief.—Two children, aged 2 and 3. Adultery and desertion.
Solicitor's observations.—No money for divorce. Could afford 5*l.* or 10*l.*

Solicitor's initials.—F. B.

D. No. 69.

6th December 1909.

Name.—M. T., wife of W. T.
Occupation of husband.—Soldier (when last heard of).
Date of marriage.—1899. Age when married, 18.
Nature of relief required.—Declaration of decease of husband.
Reason for requiring relief.—Not heard of husband for three years, since he left the country.
Solicitor's observations.—Applicant desires to remarry. What will be the result seeing that she cannot?

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

D. No. 70.

13th November 1909.

Name.—A. H., wife of W. H.
Occupation of husband.—Pavior.
Date of marriage.—October 1895. Age when married, 23.
Reason for requiring relief.—One child of marriage.
Solicitor's observations.—Applicant separated from her husband by reason of cruelty and desertion. During separation husband cohabited with another married woman, who also was living separate from her husband. At the time applicant would have desired a divorce if it had been within her means. She has since forgiven her husband for the sake of this child. He still ill-uses her, and she does not know if she can continue to live with him.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

(B.)

EXHIBITS MARKED "M. 1." to "M. 90.," REFERRED TO IN THE EVIDENCE OF MR. HERBERT GREENWOOD WRIGLEY; being notes of cases specially investigated by the following solicitors:—

Mr. Frank Barratt.
" Gilbert Barratt.
" William Dutton.
" Wm. Bowker Farrington.
" Jas. Brooke Garner.
" Charles Grundy.
" H. Gilman Jones.
" Wilfred H. Sell.
" S. A. Smith.
" H. Greenwood Wrigley.
" Edgar Youatt.

At the Art Museum and University Settlement, Ancoats, Manchester.

M. No. 1.

22nd November 1909.

Name.—E. A., wife of A. E. A.
Occupation of husband.—Labourer.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—November 1908. Age when married, 22; husband, 21.
Place where married.—Registry Office.
Nature of relief required.—Support.
Reason for requiring relief.—Child born, 23rd November 1908. Now six months pregnant. Husband left last Tuesday and refused to help her. Army reservist. Has tried summons, but unable to find money to pay for summons.

Solicitor's observations. — Hard case; requires amendment of law.

Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

M. No. 2.

17th November 1900.

Name.—S. J. A., wife of J. A.

Date of marriage.—April 1908. Age when married, 21.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Reason for requiring relief.—That husband accused applicant of being immoral, she having a complaint the result of a previous illness.

Solicitor's observations.—Applicant was referred by Department to one of the charity organisations in the district, who satisfied the husband, after obtaining a medical certificate, that applicant's story was correct. Now living together again.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No 3

10th November 1909.

Name.—H. A., wife of J. H. A.

Occupation of husband.—Cabinet maker.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—June 1900. Age when married, 18.

Place where married.—Wesleyan Chapel.

Nature of relief required.—Separation.

Reason for requiring relief.—Husband was jealous of her without cause, but did not do anything which would give her ground for obtaining separation order. She left him and he now maintains the two children of the marriage who live with his mother, and wife has access to them. Neither party is cohabiting with another person.

Solicitor's observations.—This is a case of "incompatibility of temper," which would have been best met by a separation agreement.

Solicitor's initials.—E. Y.

M. No. 4.

10th November 1909.

Name.—A. A.

Occupation.—Iron turner.

Date of marriage.—April 1907. Age when married, 24; wife 23.

Nature of relief required.—Separation.

Reason for requiring relief.—Could not agree with wife who was very quarrelsome from beginning. Allowed wife to obtain summons and order for 8s. a week. One child which wife took. Had courted wife five years before marriage. Wife now living in the Midlands. Husband does not know with whom or mode of life.

Solicitor's observations.—Husband appears respectable, and this seems a case where if parties had been in higher social position separation agreement would have been entered into. If wife's people had not interfered matters would probably have been "patched up" more or less satisfactorily.

Solicitor's initials.—E. Y.

M. No. 5.

10th November 1909.

Name.—M. A., wife of G. A.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—November 1907. Age when married, 28.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Maintenance.

Reason for requiring relief.—Husband left her March 18th, 1909; ran her out of the house with razor after hitting her. No children. Has been advised to apply for summons. Summons refused until husband's address obtained.

Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

M. No. 6.

10th November 1909.

Name.—M. B., wife of W. B.

Occupation of husband.—Upholsterer.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—May 1907. Age when married, 48.

Place where married.—Registry Office.

Nature of relief required.—Separation.

Reason for requiring relief.—Husband drinks and uses filthy language, and has assaulted her when no one present. Cannot obtain separation order.

Solicitor's observations.—The applicant appeared to be a hard-working woman, and respectable. The language used was of such a vile nature that it amounted to gross cruelty. The husband cannot be considered a habitual drunkard. Hence she has no relief.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 7.

10th November 1909.

Name.—P. B., wife of S. B.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—February 1872. Age when married, 18.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Reason for requiring relief.—Has obtained separation order, about 18 months ago. Reasons, cruelty and drunkenness. Is not getting any money from husband. Had been advised by solicitor.

Solicitor's observations.—This case shows the hardship which often arises. Court not issue a warrant unless the defendant's "residence" given at time of application.

Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

(See Note on D. 19.—H. G. W.)

M. No. 8.

20th November 1909.

Name.—D. L. B., wife of W. B.

Occupation of husband.—Unknown.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—May 1905. Age when married, 25.

Place where married.—Wesleyan Chapel.

Nature of relief required.—Separation or (?) divorce.

Reason for requiring relief.—Desertion for 12 months. Husband believed to be living in adultery.

Solicitor's observations. — Owing to applicant's position (cook in factory earning 15*s.* per week), she has not the means of tracing her husband. If she could get a divorce she would endeavour to raise 20*l.*

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 9.

15th November 1909.

Name.—J. B.

Occupation.—Warehouseman.

Date of marriage.—December 1888. Age when married, 29; wife 23.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Solicitor's observations.—Three children—20, 17, and 9 years. Separation order made July 1902, 10*s.* per week. While out of work was arrested for arrears. Order reduced to 8*s.* in 1903.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

(See M. 10.)

M. No. 10.

8th November 1909.

Name.—E. A. B., wife of J. B.

Occupation of husband.—Warehouseman.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—1890. Age when married, 23.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Reason for requiring relief.—On account of persistent cruelty applicant took out summons against husband. Orders made, and afterwards in each case applicant resumed cohabitation. Now separated; order made for payment of 10*s.* per week, subsequently reduced to 8*s.* per week, which is still being paid.

Solicitor's initials.—J. B. G.

(See M. 9.)

M. No. 11.

20th November 1909.

Name.—M. H. B., wife of J. T. B.

Occupation of husband.—Dairyman.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—December 1905. Age when married, 31.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Separation.

Reason for requiring relief.—Obtained separation order in February 1909, and maintenance of 10*s.* per week. One child aged three months. Applicant separated from husband Christmas 1908.

Solicitor's observations.—From inquiries made it appears that the applicant's mother-in-law is the cause of the trouble between applicant and her husband, as she did not desire the applicant's husband to marry her.

Solicitor's initials.—J. B. G.

M. No. 12.

10th November 1909.

Name.—A. B., wife of W. B.

Occupation of husband.—Night watchman.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—June 1906. Age when married, 24.

Nature of relief required.—Advice as to liability of husband to pay expenses of confinement in respect of child born after voluntary separation.

Reason for requiring relief.—In this case the husband, after three months of married life, shirked work and habitually pretended to be ill in order that wife might support him. This went on for some considerable time and ultimately wife consulted the relieving officer who bluffed husband into paying 2*s.* 6*d.* a week. Wife is now keeping house for her sisters. Her only child is now dead.

Solicitor's observations.—This is a case which would have been suitable for a separation agreement if the parties had been advised at the proper time.

Solicitor's initials.—E. Y.

M. No. 13.

10th November 1909.

Name.—F. B., wife of F. R. B.

Occupation of husband.—Market porter.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—November 1899. Age when married, 23.

Place where married.—Registry Office.

Nature of relief required.—Separation order.

Reason for requiring relief.—Cruelty and desertion.

Solicitor's observations.—Applicant cannot work owing to heart trouble. Husband says he will save up for a new home and will live with applicant again but she fears he will be cruel to her.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 14.

10th November 1909.

Name.—E. E. C., wife of E. G. C.

Occupation of husband.—Railway goods guard.

Date of marriage.—April 1896. Age when married, 30.

Nature of relief required.—Separation.

Reason for requiring relief.—Assault and abusive language.

Solicitor's observations.—Parties are living together again, having been advised to settle their differences when applicant consulted department in May last.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 15.

22nd November 1909.

Name.—A. C., wife of F. C.

Occupation of husband.—Joiner.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—October 1888. Age when married, 24.

Place where married.—Registry Office.

Nature of relief required.—Advice.

Reason for requiring relief.—Wife wants to go to Hyde to live, but does not want her husband to know address, for she is afraid of him coming and annoying her; yet she does not want to lose the maintenance allowance of 7*s.* per week.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. J.

M. No. 16.

20th November 1909.

Name.—S. J. C., wife of J. C.

Occupation of husband.—Labourer, 25*s.* a week.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—May 1884. Age when married, 22; husband, 33.

Place where married.—Congregational Chapel.

Solicitor's observations.—Obtained separation order on ground of persistent cruelty. Order, 5*s.* per week. Husband's wages, 25*s.* a week (about). This with the wages of a small boy, 10*s.* 6*d.* a week, is the total amount applicant and boy have to live on. Applicant does not know whether he is living in adultery or not.

Solicitor's initials.—F. B.

M. No. 17.

13th November 1909.

Name.—M. C., wife of J. C.

Occupation.—Cleaner.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—About 20 years ago. Age when married, 33.

Place where married.—Registry Office.

Nature of relief required.—Maintenance.

Reason for requiring relief.—Summoned husband about 10 years ago. Order—keep peace for six months and maintenance 6*s.* per week. Maintenance paid up to July 1908.

Solicitor's observations.—Has no information as to husband, and does not care whether she gets a divorce or not so long as her money is paid regularly.

Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

M. No. 18.

10th November 1909.

Name.—M. C., wife of P. C.

Occupation of husband.—Bookmaker's clerk.

Date of marriage.—October 1904. Age when married, 27.

Place where married.—Roman Catholic Church.

Nature of relief required.—Separation order.

Reason for requiring relief.—Husband assaults applicant and leads a "fast" life. Betting and gambling. Applicant does not think that he lives with other women.

Solicitor's observations.—Applicant would be quite willing to live with her husband, but he will neither give up betting and gambling nor settle down to live at home.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 19.

10th November 1909.

Name.—M. A. C., wife of J. C.

Occupation of husband.—Tinplate worker.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—January 1901. Age when married, 22.

Place where married.—Roman Catholic Church.

Nature of relief required.—Maintenance.

Reason for requiring relief.—Husband deserted her July 6th, 1909; received nothing from him; summons refused.

Solicitor's observations.—This is another of the cases where nothing can be done unless husband's address obtained, as summons refused.

Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

(See note on D. 19.)

M. No. 20.

10th November 1909.

Name.—J. C.

Occupation.—Carter.

Date of marriage.—June 1905. Age when married, 21.

Place where married.—Registry Office.

Nature of relief required.—Separation order.

Reason for requiring relief.—Persistent cruelty.

Solicitor's observations.—Settled before summons heard and parties living together again in conjngal bliss.

Solicitor's initials.—G. B.

M. No. 21.

13th November 1909.

Name.—J. H. D.

Occupation.—Labourer.

Date of marriage.—June 1874. Age when married, 19.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Separation.

Reasons for requiring relief.—Summons taken out by wife in July last and order made for 7*s.* 6*d.* per week. Desertion.

Solicitor's initials.—F. B.

M. No. 22.

15th November 1909.

Name.—F. D., wife of R. D.

Occupation of husband.—Wireworker.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—June 1903. Age when married, 21.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Separation.

Reason for requiring relief.—Cruelty and desertion. Drinks, and will not work.

Solicitor's observations.—Applicant is a packer at jam works, and earns about 10*s.* per week, average.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 23.

13th November 1909.

Name.—M. H. D., wife of B. D.

Occupation of applicant.—Winder.

Date of marriage.—November 1901. Age when married, 36.

Place where married.—Registry Office.

Reason for requiring relief.—Husband on short time for last three years, now out of work. Husband ought to have at least 10*s.* a week from society; generally drinks same. Largest amount contributed to household, 4*s.* 7*d.* a week. Wife often has to leave home to avoid assault. Has sold up house several times. Never takes him before magistrates.

Solicitor's observations.—As wife has not taken advantage of the remedies which she at present has, cannot but think that she would not take advantage of any alteration of the law.

Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

M. No. 24.

20th November 1909.

Name.—S. D.

Occupation.—Striker.

Date of marriage.—August 1875. Age when married, 20.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Separation (now not required).

Reason for requiring relief.—Owing to wife being a Roman Catholic there is continuous friction.

Solicitor's observations.—Since previous consultation applicant has settled matters in dispute with his wife, and they are trying to live together.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 25.

13th November 1909.

Name.—R. E., wife of S. E.

Occupation of husband.—Driller.

Date of marriage.—September 1880. Age when married, 22.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Separation.

Reasons for requiring relief.—Husband drunken and dirty.

Solicitor's observations.—Since applicant consulted us her husband has improved; has become more sober and living fairly happily together.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 26.

13th November 1909.

Name.—A. F., wife of M. F.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—October 1878. Age when married, 23.

Reason for requiring relief.—Separation order obtained, maintenance 5*s.* a week and furniture. Husband very insulting when paying maintenance. Advised to see magistrates if money could not be paid into court.

Solicitor's observations.—Application refused, but effect has been no further trouble.

Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

M. No. 27.

13th November 1909.

Name.—E. F., wife of A. F.

Occupation of husband.—Scythemaker.

Date of marriage.—August 1895. Age when married, 20.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Reason for requiring relief.—Husband drinks.

Solicitor's observations.—Husband has reformed, and parties are living happily.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 28.

13th November 1909.

Name.—C. G., wife of S. G.

Occupation of husband.—Drainer.

Date of marriage.—March 1872. Age when married, 22.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Separation.

Reason for requiring relief.—Husband drinks and pawns everything; will not work. Seven children.

Solicitor's observations.—Applicant has been advised to leave her husband, it being understood that her sons would look after her.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W

M. No. 29.

20th November 1909.

Name.—E. G., wife of J. H. G.

Occupation of husband.—Joiner.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—December 1869. Age when married, 18.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Maintenance.

Reason for requiring relief.—Deserted.

Solicitor's observations.—Husband paying fairly regularly under order. No cause to interfere.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 30.

20th November 1909.

Name.—L. G., wife of W. G.

Occupation of applicant.—Household duties.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—April 1879. Age when married, 20 years.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Increase of payment of maintenance.

Reason for requiring relief.—Applicant not lived with husband for seven years. No proceedings have been commenced, but applicant receives money from her husband. Originally arranged for payment of 10*s.* per week. Now averages 5*s.* per week. Husband living in Yorkshire, and about 10 years ago he was "walking out" with a single woman; later a child was born.

Solicitor's observations.—Visits applicant yearly on his holidays. Applicant would decline to live with him. Informed applicant that court would not make an order as she declines to resume cohabitation. Thirteen children all living. Three married. One left home and eight living at home.

Solicitor's initials.—J. B. G.

M. No. 31.

13th November 1909.

Name.—S. G.

Occupation.—Legging fitter.

Date of marriage.—July 1906. Age when married, 21.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Solicitor's observations.—Summoned for separation order on ground of desertion. Case dismissed. Now living again with wife. This shows the hardship which is occasionally met with by husbands owing to summons being granted to wives without proper inquiry into the matter. Husband says that if wife could have got an allowance she would have returned home, and probably better off financially than when living with husband.

Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

M. No. 32.

13th November 1909.

Name.—A. J. W. G.

Occupation.—Labourer, out of work.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Reason for requiring relief.—Wife left him Saturday, 23rd August 1908. Slept out all night. Since May last wife living with another man. No children. No claim for support.

Solicitor's observations.—Does not want divorce.

Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

M. No. 33.

22nd November 1909.

Name.—R. H., wife of H. H.

Occupation of husband.—Carter.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—April 1904. Age when married 17.

Place where married.—Registry Office.

Nature of relief required.—Separation order.

Reason for requiring relief.—Cruelty, neglect, drink.

Solicitor's observations.—One child; wife works, and has had to keep the home going.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 34.

13th November 1909.

Name.—M. A. H., wife of G. H.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—August 1876. Age when married, 18.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Separation order obtained 1905 enforcing.

Reason for requiring relief.—Husband left 13th September 1905. Now in arrear with payments.

Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

M. No. 35.

13th November 1909.

Name.—A. H., wife of H. H.

Occupation of husband.—Labourer.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—January 1907. Age when married, 25.

Place where married.—Registry.

Nature of relief required.—Maintenance.

Reason for requiring relief.—Threats, and starved applicant.

Solicitor's observations.—Employed as a stick varnisher; earns about 10*s.*

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 36.

17th November 1909.

Name.—A. J., wife of J. J.

Occupation of husband.—Grinder.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—1879. Age when married, 21.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Separation order.

Reason for requiring relief.—Husband drunkard and abusive. Obtained separation and husband paid fairly regularly 16*s.* a week. Husband incapable of reformation. Wife would like to be free. Four children; one a cripple. No allegation of immorality.

Solicitor's observations.—Separation order seems to have met this case fairly well, but wife would prefer to be free. Drink sole cause of trouble.

Solicitor's initials.—S. A. S.

M. No. 37.

13th November 1909.

Name.—R. J.

Occupation.—Labourer.

Date of marriage.—August 1907. Age when married, 25.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Reason for requiring relief.—Separated from wife (1) November 1908; (2) April 1909; (3) September 1909. (1) six weeks; (2) three months; (3) still apart. Wife did not keep clean. Violent temper. Assaulted husband. Attempted life. One child born 31st January 1908, with wife. Had connection with wife before marriage. Wife denies his paternity. Wife at present with mother living chaste life. Wages 1*l.* a week, wife 15*s.* to 1*l.*

Solicitor's observations.—This is a case where probably a divorce is the only remedy. The husband has, however, only himself to blame, as he admits that he knew before marriage that his wife was little better than a prostitute, and that he himself had often had connection with her.

Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

M. No. 38.

13th November 1909.

Name.—E. J., wife of W. J.

Occupation of applicant.—Velvet finisher, 30*s.*

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—August 1908. Age when married, 21.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Reason for requiring relief.—Agreement entered into by wife and husband for separation. Weekly allowance, 7*s.* There is one child of the marriage. Cruelty. No adultery.

Solicitor's observations.—No observations of interest.

Solicitor's initials.—F. B.

M. No. 39.

20th November 1909.

Name.—F. K., wife of R. J. K.

Occupation of applicant.—Machinist.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—September 1895. Age when married, 24.

Place where married.—Registry Office.

Nature of relief required.—Separation order obtained and required to be enforced.

Reason for requiring relief.—Maintenance not kept up.

Solicitor's observations.—Separation order obtained about six years ago on the ground of desertion. Two previous separation orders had been obtained, but in each case applicant had subsequently commenced living again with her husband. Four children (three dead). Husband had not, ever since separation or before, lived in adultery.

Solicitor's initials.—G. B.

M. No. 40.

13th November 1909.

Name.—H. L., wife of C. L.
Occupation of husband.—Tinplate worker.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—August 1884. Age when married, 18.
Place where married.—Church of England.
Nature of relief required.—Separation.
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband would not work and drinks what he earns.
Solicitor's observations.—Matter heard by lay magistrate at City Police Court, who told her to go back to her husband, saying it was a pity to separate after 25 years married life. Could not afford to have a solicitor on the hearing. Applicant does a little charing.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 41.

13th November 1909.

Name.—H. L., wife of R. L.
Date of marriage.—1885. Age when married, 37.
Place where married.—Church of England.
Nature of relief required.—Separation for drunkenness.
Solicitor's observations.—No observations which would be of any material use.

Solicitor's initials.—F. B.

M. No. 42.

13th November 1909.

Name.—A. L., wife of T. L.
Occupation of husband.—Labourer.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—August 1898. Age when married, 17.
Place where married.—Church of England.
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband deserted and was habitually cruel.
Solicitor's observations.—Since consulting us applicant has been granted a separation order with 8*s*. per week, dated 13th October; received so far 11*s*.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 43.

13th November 1909.

Name.—S. A. L., wife of E. L.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—December 1878. Age when married, 24.
Nature of relief required.—Maintenance.
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband left about six years ago. Has paid on account of maintenance up to June last. Since then nothing and no information. Application lately (August) to police; no trace of husband. At present dependent on unmarried daughter.

Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

M. No. 44.

22nd November 1909.

Name.—E. L., wife of W. H. L.
Occupation of applicant.—Machinist.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—23rd November 1901. Age when married, 40; husband, 44.
Place where married.—Church of England.
Nature of relief required.—Maintenance.
Reason for requiring relief.—Owing to cruelty applicant left husband in 1904. He agreed to make her an allowance and only paid her 2*s*. Has already summoned husband, but not being represented, could not obtain order.
Solicitor's observations.—Applicant's only remedy is to accept parish relief and then guardians will compel husband to support. Need of cheap or even free relief shown.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 45.

20th November 1909.

Name.—R. L., wife of P. L.
Occupation of husband.—Mill worker.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—October 1906. Age when married, 58.
Place where married.—Registry Office.
Solicitor's observations.—Separation on the ground of cruelty. Dismissed at the police court. No observations of any moment.

Solicitor's initials.—F. B.

M. No. 46.

17th November 1909.

Name.—M. McD., wife of J. McD.
Occupation of husband.—Railway labourer (in England).
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—June 1905. Age when married, 26; husband, 25.
Place where married.—Roman Catholic Church.
Nature of relief required.—Separation.
Reason for requiring relief.—Desertion. Husband now in Ireland. When he returns she proposes to issue summons for desertion.
Solicitor's observations.—This is not a case where divorce would be applicable.

Solicitor's initials.—E. Y.

M. No. 47.

13th November 1909.

Name.—E. McG., wife of P. McG.
Occupation of husband.—Painter.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—August 1889. Age when married, 20.
Place where married.—Roman Catholic Church.
Nature of relief required.—Separation.
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband would drink, and would not work, and deserted family. Nine children.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 48.

13th November 1909.

Name M. M., wife of C. M.
Date of marriage.—October 1887. Age when married, 22.
Place where married.—Church of England.
Nature of relief required.—Separation.
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband uses bad language and had assaulted her when first application made. Summons refused.

Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

M. No. 49.

20th November 1909.

Name.—E. M., wife of J. M.
Occupation of applicant.—Mantle maker.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—February 1900. Age when married, 30.
Place where married.—Roman Catholic Church.
Nature of relief required.—Separation order obtained, required enforcing.
Reason for requiring relief.—Order made by magistrates on the 2nd February 1906, for payment of 4*s*. per week towards maintenance of applicant and two children, aged 8 and 4 respectively, on grounds of persistent cruelty and assaults. Maintenance in arrear and advised as to applying for warrant.

Solicitor's initials.—J. B. G.

M. No. 50.

13th November 1909.

Name.—E. M., wife of R. M.
Occupation of husband.—Collier.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—February 1902. Age when married.—Then a widow.

Place where married.—Church of England.
Nature of relief required.—Maintenance.
Reason for requiring relief.—Left and does not support.
Solicitor's observations.—Since seeing us he has regularly paid 5*s*. per week.
Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 51.

17th November 1909.

Name.—M. A. M., wife of —. M.
Occupation of husband.—Professional footballer.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—June 1900. Age when married, 21; husband, 22.
Place where married.—Church of England.
Nature of relief required.—Separation.
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband guilty of cruelty, but summons was dismissed as he alleged she was drunkard. Three children. Husband took two children. Husband footballer, 3*l*. per week. Wife is looking after one child.
Solicitor's observations.—Advised applicant that there were no means of making the husband pay for the support of child or children in her custody unless she and they became chargeable to the Poor Law Guardians.
Solicitor's initials.—E. Y.

M. No. 52.

22nd November 1909.

Name.—A. M., wife of E. M.
Occupation of husband.—Fitter.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—January 1907. Age when married, 27.
Place where married.—Registry office.
Nature of relief required.—Separation and maintenance.
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband very cruel. Applicant has been compelled to leave him and take out summons.
Solicitor's observations.—Applicant reports order made for payment of 5*s*. per week.
Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 53.

20th November 1909.

Name.—J. M.
Occupation.—Labourer, gas department.
Date of marriage.—July 1904. Age when married, 26.
Place where married.—Church of England.
Nature of relief required.—As to position with regard to wife having taken furniture.
Reason for requiring relief.—On 17th April 1907, wife took furniture away and lived with her parent. Applicant residing with his parents. Wife took ont summons against applicant for desertion, dismissed. Wife having furniture at present time. Two children of marriage. Applicant paying wife 6*s*. per week and having custody of children. Applicant's earnings 25*s*. per week.
Solicitor's observations.—Applicant at present time suffering from dyspepsia and rheumatism. Wife threatening to commence proceedings against applicant who states he intends leaving the country.
Solicitor's initials.—J. B. G.

M. No. 54.

20th November 1909.

Name.—M. E. N., wife of J. A. N.
Occupation of husband.—Painter.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—June 1889. Age when married, 22.
Place where married.—Church of England.
Husband left on Good Friday, 1906.
Solicitor's observations.—Does not desire any proceedings. Since applicant consulted, husband has regularly paid 15*s*. per week.
Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 55.

20th November 1909.

Name.—S. J. N., wife of T. N.
Occupation of husband.—Tram guard.
Date of marriage.—November 1903. Age when married, 29.
Place where married.—Church of England.
Nature of relief required.—Separation order.
Reason for requiring relief.—Cruelty and desertion. No immorality within applicant's knowledge.
Solicitor's observations.—Applicant would have preferred to be absolutely free from her husband.
Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 56.

13th November 1909.

Name.—H. N., wife of J. N.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—June 1901. Age when married, 21.
Place where married.—Church of England.
Reason for requiring relief.—Obtained separation order 10*s*. per week. Custody of child eight years old. Husband disappeared.
Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

M. No. 57.

13th November 1909.

Name.—J. O.
Occupation of applicant.—Fitter. Wages 39*s*. per week.
Date of marriage.—March 1883. Age when married, 20.
Place where married.—Roman Catholic Church.
Nature of relief required.—Separation.
Reason for requiring relief.—Wife habitual drunkard. Seven children, five sons and two daughters.
Solicitor's observations.—Has not yet applied for separation, but will do so shortly.
Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 58.

20th November 1909.

Name.—M. P., wife of J. E. P.
Occupation of husband.—Fitter.
Date of marriage.—November 1890. Age when married, 22.
Place were married. Church of England.
Nature of relief required.—Separation.
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband drank heavily, used bad language, illused applicant.
Solicitor's observations.—Since consulting us her husband has been more amenable to reason.
Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 59.

13th November 1909.

Name.—E. P., wife of A. P.
Date of marriage.—Whit Thursday, 1902. Age when married, 18.
Place where married.—Church of England.
Nature of relief required.—Maintenance.
Reasons for requiring relief.—Husband left Saturday before first call, came back on Wednesday. Now signed pledge.
Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

M. No. 60.

13th November 1909.

Name.—C. P., wife of A. E. P.
Occupation of husband.—Mill hand.
Husband.—Living apart.
Place where married.—Church of England.
Reason for requiring relief.—Obtained separation order, default made, summons taken out for commitment not attended, advised second summons, now paying 10*s*. a week. No children. Husband's wages, 24*s*. all found.
Solicitor's observations.—This is a case where the assistance of the Department ought not to be invoked, as wife is well aware of her remedies, and is negligent in exercising same. No question of divorce.

Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

M. No. 61.

13th November 1909.

Name.—E. P., wife of W. P.

Date of marriage.—March 1900. Age when married, 23.

Place where married.—Registry office.

Reason for requiring relief.—Is living with husband at his mother's; never had real home. Husband pays household expenses, but will not allow her any money. Has applied to Poor Law authorities. No satisfaction. Two children, 9 and 1½. Wages unknown. Pregnant; another child January. Husband won't give any assistance for necessities.

Solicitor's observations.—In this case there ought to be power to the Poor Law authorities, on the facts stated being properly verified, to take proceedings to compel husband to do his duty. Otherwise possible that both the mother and child may lose their lives in childbirth.

Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

M. No. 62.

13th November 1909.

Name.—A. P., wife of J. P.

Occupation of husband.—Moulder, 22*s*. per week.

Date of marriage.—November 1907. Age when married, 19.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Solicitor's observations.—Parties living happily together by reason of letter written by the Department to husband.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 63.

15th November 1909.

Name.—M. P., wife of T. P.

Occupation of husband.—Labourer.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—Easter Saturday, 1908. Age when married, 18.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Separation.

Reason for requiring relief.—Cruelty and desertion.

Solicitor's observations.—One child. Applicant works at nut and bolt works, earns 5*s*. per week. Not money for summons.

Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 64.

13th November 1909.

Name.—J. W. Q.

Occupation.—Labourer.

Date of marriage.—May 1901. Age when married, 26.

Place where married.—Roman Catholic Church.

Reason for requiring relief.—Children of the marriage, one aged 7 years, living with wife.

Solicitor's observations.—Question as to whether husband (applicant) could have an allowance reduced which he had to pay to his wife under the S.J. (M.W.) Act. No misconduct on either side.

Solicitor's initials.—F. B.

M. No. 65.

13th November 1909.

Name—K. R., wife of H. R.

Date of marriage.—May 1886. Age when married, 25.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Separation.

Reason for requiring relief.—Husband scarcely ever sober. Very violent and abusive. Family of six (eldest 23) all at home. Applicant is in bodily fear.

Solicitor's observations.—Husband apparently does not go with other women. Probably not a case for divorce, even if applicant could afford it.

Solicitor's initials.—W. H. S.

M. No. 66.

20th November 1909.

Name.—S. J. R., wife of J. R.

Date of marriage.—Over 30 years ago. Age when married, 21 (?).

Nature of relief required.—Separation order.

Reason for requiring relief.—Persistent cruelty.

Solicitor's observations.—Applicant obtained the separation order asked for. Parties lived together two weeks after the order was made and they had lived together ever since. Applicant had no cause to complain of her husband except with regard to his cruelty when he was drunk, and matters in this respect had improved very much since the parties lived together after the separation order was made.

Solicitors' initials.—G. B.

M. No. 67.

17th November 1909.

Name.—L. S., wife of S. S.

Occupation of husband.—Formerly a greengrocer.

Date of marriage.—December 1904. Age when married, 20 years; husband, 29.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Separation.

Reason for requiring relief.—Was deserted by husband and obtained a separation order with allowance of 5*s*. per week. Husband does very little work, but has army pension of 10*s*. 6*d*. per week. He has been imprisoned once for non-payment, and is very irregular in his payments. Woman has custody of the only child.

Solicitor's observations.—The wife has no knowledge of his living with another woman, and this is a case that seems adequately dealt with by means of a separation order.

Solicitor's initials.—E. Y.

M. No. 68.

17th November 1909.

Name.—E. A. S., wife of J. S.

Occupation of husband.—Bookmaker.

Date of marriage.—May 1897. Age when married, 20.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Separation on ground of drunkenness and cruelty.

Reason for requiring relief.—Husband got drink regularly and ill-treated wife. One child of the marriage. Order for 8*s*. a week paid regularly. Are now cohabiting again. Habits of drinking only come on last two years.

Solicitor's observations.—Drink cause of trouble. Order obtained but abandoned; permanent settlement questionable, as husband has already had other bouts.

Solicitor's initials.—S. A. S.

M. No. 69.

17th November 1909.

Name.—C. S., wife of W. H. S.

Occupation of applicant.—House duty.

Date of marriage.—May 1889. Age when married, 20.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Solicitor's observations.—Applicant left husband in consequence of assault and abusive and threatening language. Summoned husband on four occasions but obtained no orders. Applicant agreeing to resume cohabitation. Five children, two working, two going to school and one cripple in Swinton Schools; husband paying applicant 6*s*. per week and desires to resume cohabitation, but applicant declines on account of language used by husband. The 6*s*. per week is paid by husband on account of husband being threatened by the Guardians to take proceedings.

Solicitor's initials.—J. B. G.

M. No. 70.

10th November 1909.

Name.—E. S.

Occupation.—Labourer on L. & Y. Co. Wages, 18*s*. 10*d*. a week.

Date of marriage.—May 1905. Age when married, 23.

Place where married.—Registry office.

Reason for requiring relief.—Gave wife wages on 8th (18*s.* 10*d.*); on Saturday, 9th October 1909, when returned from work wife gone. Wife wrote to works and stated he had agreed to pay 9*s.* a week. No agreement had been entered into, and husband had no idea that wife was leaving him. Never assaulted wife, and had always paid her his full wages for the household. Three children taken away by mother. No order for payment from Guardians (see letter). Mother-in-law living with applicant is real cause of dispute.

Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

M. No. 71.

17th November 1909.

Name.—A. T., wife of T. T.

Occupation of husband.—Labourer.

Age when married.—17.

Nature of relief required.—Advice as to maintenance.

Reason for requiring relief.—Applicant's husband had struck her and left her in consequence of her inability to keep out of debt. He allowed her 19*s.* per week. She obtained order for separation, but he returned before hearing and have lived together satisfactorily since on 1*l.* a week.

Solicitor's observations. — Separation order easily obtained, but not taken advantage of. Early marriage case.

Solicitor's initials.—S. A. S.

M. No. 72.

20th November 1909.

Name.—M. E. V., wife of J. V.

Occupation of applicant.—Charing.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—August 1895. Age when married, 23.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Reason for requiring relief.—Husband left applicant, who will not resume cohabitation on account of assaults committed upon her. Husband refused to pay any sum towards maintenance of applicant and three children, eldest aged 12 years and youngest 3 years.

Solicitor's observations.—Informed applicant that no order against husband would be made if she declined to resume cohabitation, as he was out of work, earning no wages, but could earn 35*s.* per week.

Solicitor's initials.—J. B. G.

M. No. 73.

20th November 1909.

Name.—A. W.

Occupation.—Tailor's machinist.

Date of marriage.—May 1907. Age when married, 20.

Place where married.—Synagogue.

Nature of relief required.—As to relief against order made by magistrates.

Reason for requiring relief.—Order made against applicant by magistrates on wife's summons for payment of 5*s.* per week, which is second summons. First order made was for 7*s.* 6*d.* Applicant declines to resume cohabitation on account of wife's filthy habits.

Solicitor's observations. — Advised applicant to continue payments, otherwise warrant would be granted against him.

Solicitor's initials.—J. B. G.

M. No. 74.

20th November 1909.

Name.—G. W.

Occupation of applicant.—Labourer.

Date of marriage.—May 1906. Age when married, 39.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required. — Against applicant Separation order.

Reason for requiring relief.—Desertion.

Solicitor's initials.—F. B.

M. No. 75.

15th November 1909.

Name.—M. W., wife of J. W.

Date of marriage.—About Christmas, 1894. Age when married, 29.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Separation.

Reason for requiring relief.—Husband heavy drinker and very violent and abusive. Struck applicant frequently. Husband already fined for assaulting applicant. Family of six; eldest 14; very abusive to them.

Solicitor's observations.—No evidence of misconduct; no desertion. Proper case for separation.

Solicitor's initials.—W. H. S.

M. No. 76.

19th November 1909.

Name.—H. W., wife of J. W. W.

Occupation of husband.—Employed by firm of grocers.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage.—September 1905. Age when married, 22 years.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Maintenance.

Reason for requiring relief. — Husband deserted applicant, 12th October 1908, on account of applicant complaining of his not working. No assault. Summons applied for and order made by magistrates on the 29th June 1909, for payment of maintenance at the rate of 5*s.* per week. Husband in arrear with payment. Warrant granted against husband for arrears of maintenance, and served 14 days' imprisonment.

Solicitor's observations.—Husband living with his mother. No children. Advised applicant to apply to Court for further warrant for amount of arrears.

Solicitor's initials.—J. B. G.

M. No. 77.

17th November 1909.

Name.—E. W., wife of E. W.

Occupation of husband.—Iron turner.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage. — August 1908. Age when married, 24; husband, 28.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Separation.

Reason for requiring relief.—Desertion. Magistrates gave husband a warning, and she arranged to give him a further trial and is now living with him and getting on all right.

Solicitor's observations.—This is a case where the magistrates have successfully acted as peacemakers, a course frequently attempted with varying success in the case of young married couples.

Solicitor's initials.—E. Y.

M. No. 78.

17th November 1909.

Name.—A. W., wife of R. W.

Occupation of husband.—Porter.

Husband.—Living apart.

Date of marriage. — April 1900. Age when married, 19.

Place where married.—Church of England.

Nature of relief required.—Separation order and maintenance.

Reason for requiring relief. — Husband deserted applicant four years ago. Prior thereto assaulted her and threatened to take her life, and said he would put knife through her. Husband not paid any maintenance since leaving applicant. Husband met applicant in street since desertion (last Whit-week), and without any provocation or cause kicked her in back and sprained her arm. Summons taken out, and magistrates ordered him one month's imprisonment. No order for maintenance being made. Applicant receiving no maintenance from husband. No children.

Solicitor's initials.—J. B. G.

M. No. 79.

17th November 1909.

Name.—F. W., wife of W. W.
Occupation of husband.—Clogger.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—1907. Age when married, 24.
Nature of relief required.—Summons for desertion.
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband had left her several times and gone out of the country. Unable to find exact whereabouts. Applicant was in service and now living with parents, who will, however, be unable to keep her.
Solicitor's observations.—Unable to obtain separation order or payment of maintenance in consequence of husband's absence from the country.
Solicitor's initials.—S. A. S.

M. No. 80.

29th November 1909.

Name.—A. B.
Occupation of applicant.—Labourer.
Date of marriage.—November 1893. Age when married, 24; wife's age, 21.
Place where married.—Registry Office.
Reason for requiring relief.—Wife deserted applicant and is living with her people.
Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 81.

20th November 1909.

Name.—S. H., wife of J. H.
Occupation of husband.—Screw and bolt fitter.
Nature of relief required.—Separation.
Reason for requiring relief.—Cruelty.
Solicitor's observations.—Since applicant's attendance matters have been amicably settled and the parties are living together again.
Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 82.

13th November 1909.

Name.—M. E. B., wife of H. J. W. B.
Occupation of husband.—Labourer.
Husband.—Living apart.
Nature of relief required.—Separation.
Reason for requiring relief.—Desertion
Solicitor's observations.—Applicant cannot obtain summons, because she does not know husband's address although she knows where he works.
Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 83.

13th November 1909.

Name.—J. F.
Occupation.—Labourer.
Nature of relief required.—Separation order.
Reason for requiring relief.—Wife habitual drunkard.
Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 84.

13th November 1909.

Name.—M. G., wife of M. G.
Occupation of husband.—Fireman.
Husband.—Living apart.
Nature of relief required.—Separation.
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband cruel.
Solicitor's observations.—Order 6*s.* per week. Payments being made.
Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

M. No. 85.

13th November 1909.

Name.—E. R., wife of J. R.
Occupation of husband—Case Dealer.
Husband.—Living apart.
Nature of relief required.—Increase of order for maintenance.
Solicitor's observations.—Applicant has not taken any steps.
Solicitor's initials.—C. G.

M. No. 86.

Name.—A. T. 20th November 1909.
Occupation.—Packer.
Date of Marriage.—July 1906. Age when married, 22; wife's age 19.
Place where married.—Registry Office.
Nature of relief required. — Separation (wife's application).
Solicitor's observations.—Separation granted but parties are living together again.
Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 87.

6th December 1909.

Name.—G. A., wife of A. G. A.
Occupation of husband.—Cabinet maker.
Husband.—Living apart.
Age when married.—18.
Nature of relief required.—Custody of children.
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband living with another woman. Applicant living with another man, by whom she has had three children. Children of marriage, three. Husband habitually cruel.
Solicitor's observations.—This note is inserted as an example of the crude ideas of morality. Applicant told me that one day her husband brought another man, and told her that this man would look after her for the future, and that he was going. Applicant says that this man has been very kind to her, and also to all the children, and that she "could not wish for a better husband."
Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 88.

6th December 1909.

Name.—M. D., wife of I. D.
Occupation of husband.—Labourer.
Husband.—In prison.
Date of marriage.—October 1903. Age when married, 17.
Place where married.—Church of England.
Nature of relief required.—Separation order and maintenance.
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband at present serving three months for neglect of wife and family consisting of two children.
Solicitor's observations.—Husband spent all his money in betting on horses.
Solicitor's initials.—W. B. F.

M. No. 89.

6th December 1909.

Name.—A. H., wife of T. H.
Occupation of husband.—Labourer.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage.—January 1906. Age when married, 16.
Place where married.—Registry Office.
Nature of relief required.—Separation.
Reason for requiring relief. Failure to supply sufficient maintenance. Cruelty, compelling wife to have connection with him notwithstanding that she is enciente.
Solicitor's observations.—Since consulted the matter has been in the hands of the Manchester City League of Help, who have brought the parties together again.
Solicitor's initials.—H. G. W.

M. No. 90.

20th December 1909.

Name.—E. A. W., wife of W. W.
Occupation of husband.—Checker on Railway.
Husband.—Living apart.
Date of marriage. — April 1909. Age when married, 23.
Place where married.—Registry Office.
Nature of relief required.—Maintenance for self and infant daughter.
Reason for requiring relief.—Husband has deserted her.
Solicitor's observations.—Date of desertion, 10th September 1909. Payment 6*s.* a week regularly. Wife estimates wages at 25*s.* a week. Letter written by this department claiming 10*s.* a week, to which no reply received.
Solicitor's initials.—W. D.

APPENDIX XII.

A.

Replies by Legal Aid Societies of various States of the United States.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Copy Letter by Mr. J. Arthur Barratt.

DEAR MR. GATES, 17th March 1910.

I HAVE been asked to give evidence before the Royal Commission appointed to consider the reform of the Divorce Laws in England.

One of the abuses to be dealt with is the fact that poor people are unable to get divorce here because of the great cost to them, amounting at least to 100 dollars to 150 dollars. The result is that they apply for mere separation orders, and then live apart without the possibility of contracting a valid marriage. Of course this leads to the greatest difficulties and dangers.

As you have had so much experience in giving legal advice to the poor, I should much appreciate it if you can let me know what is the average cost in your experience of procuring a divorce for poor people. Do you know of any cases where such persons have been prevented from procuring a divorce by reason of the expense in doing so?

Do you find that there is any extensive recourse to the Divorce Courts by the poor in New York?

I should also like to get the fees of the legal aid societies in other parts of the United States, in say six of the chief cities, and I have accordingly enclosed letters ready to be addressed to such societies. Might I ask you to forward the same for me, and thus save time as I need the answers at an early date.

Thanking you in advance for any trouble you may take.

Believe me,
Yours, &c.,

Merrill E. Gates, jun., Esq.,
Legal Aid Society,
239, Broadway,
New York City, U.S.A.

DEAR SIR, 19th March 1910.

I HAVE been asked to give evidence before a Royal Commission of the House of Lords on Divorce Law Reform. One of the questions before the Commission is the provision for divorce at less cost than at present, so that the poor may have equal facilities with the rich for divorce if necessary. One of the evils here is that divorce is so expensive that the poor cannot afford it. They consequently simply get separation orders, live apart, and then contract relations with someone else, live as man and wife, and bring up another family.

From your great experience amongst the poor will you kindly say whether any such state of fact exists amongst them in your neighbourhood, and also what in your opinion is the average cost of a divorce for poor people.

Do you find divorce increasing amongst the poor?

I shall be pleased to put your replies before the Commission, and shall be glad of an answer to this letter at your early convenience. I shall also be glad of any suggestion as to reform you may have in mind.

Yours, &c.,

The Legal Aid Society of the City of Boston,
Chicago, St. Louis,
New Orleans, San Francisco, Philadelphia.

P.S.—Forwarded by Merrill E. Gates, jun., Esq., Secretary of the Legal Aid Society of New York.

(1.)

BOSTON LEGAL AID SOCIETY (INCORPORATED).

Boston, Massachusetts,
DEAR SIR, 20th April 1910.

YOUR inquiry dated 19th March forwarded by the New York Legal Aid Society reached this office a few days ago. I have obtained some further information than we could give ourselves, and hope that it may be of assistance to you.

In order to answer your questions satisfactorily, it is necessary to explain, first, that in Massachusetts divorces may be obtained for any one of the following causes:—(1) adultery; (2) impotency; (3) extreme cruelty or cruel and abusive treatment (an unfortunate and useless distinction), or gross and cruel neglect to support the wife; (4) utter desertion for three years; (5) gross and confirmed habits of intoxication or use of drugs; (6) conviction and sentence to hard labour for five years or more. Further, the probate courts are empowered to find as a fact that the woman is living apart from her husband for justifiable cause, and upon the foundation of such finding to order the husband to impose no restraint upon his wife, to make payments for her support or his children's, to give her the custody of the children. Failure to obey such an order is punished as contempt. The police courts treat non-support as a criminal offence, usually putting the husband on probation, on conviction, with the consequence that he has to make regular payments for the term of his probation under the direction of the probation officer.

Cost of Divorce.—It is occasionally possible for a poor person to obtain counsel in an uncontested divorce case where the grounds for divorce are easily proved (e.g., desertion or imprisonment for five years) for as little as 25 dollars. The usual minimum charge in this Commonwealth seems to be 50 dollars. This is a not uncommon charge, however. The court costs, being included in such charges, amount to 3 dollars for entering the libel and from 1.50 dollar to 5 dollars or 6 dollars for serving it or publishing an advertisement. Witness fees vary. You will bear in mind in this connexion that the distinction between solicitor and barrister does not exist in this country, and for this reason our procedure is less expensive than English procedure. Divorce cases are heard by a single justice sitting without jury. The expense is undoubtedly often deterrent, but in many of the larger cities Legal Aid Societies exist which take up meritorious cases of the greatest hardship. The Boston Society proceeds only in these extreme cases, making it a general rule not to do divorce work on charitable terms.

Results of inability to pay for Divorce.—Probably a moderate number of men simply desert their families and subsequently contract irregular relations with other women, but in our experience it has appeared that the expense of procedure is a frequent or principal cause of such behaviour. On the other hand, a woman who has children and who is deserted or maltreated by her husband is often in the worst situation. But if she is a Catholic (and a good proportion of the poor in the cities of the State are now Catholic) she probably does not want a divorce any way. This office has seen no evidence, however, that women under such conditions are often forced by economic necessity into immoral alliances with other men. If a woman has children and her husband has maltreated her, her usual desire is to establish a home alone with her children. For this she often needs legal protection. Without being divorced she can obtain a separate support decree from the Probate Court, often for an expense not exceeding 15 dollars to 25 dollars, there being in such proceedings no court costs except possible witness fees, and these are often unnecessary. Legal work at this rate is, of course, more or less charitable on the attorney's part. The Legal Aid Society prosecutes such cases for nothing or a nominal charge when the circumstances call for such action. But I have been impressed by the frequency with which attorneys undertake such petty cases when they are meritorious for a very small sum. One quarter to one third of the Boston Legal Aid Society's cases have been such cases, and the Society considers that it does no more useful and important work than in attending them.

I realize, however, that only the more worthy and deserving women would come to an institution like the Legal Aid Society; and, therefore, in order to supplement the, perhaps, too limited experience of this office, I have asked officers of the two largest charitable organizations in Boston, which annually enter and investigate hundreds of homes among the very poor irrespective of the virtue and deserts of the visited, for their opinions. I should consider their opinions as the most trustworthy obtainable in the city. The answers confirm my impressions, and I enclosed one received in writing.

As to the increase of divorce.—There are public statistics about the increase of divorce, but I do not think they discriminate between divorce among the poor and the rich. It is my impression that during the last ten years there has been no very marked increase in divorce among the very poor. Among the rural population in certain parts of the country, New England for instance, there has probably been a very considerable increase. This, however, is due to social changes, which, I believe, have little to do with any recent change of the law, My experience with these cases among the city poor in Boston is based on 400 to 500 cases in which I have examined the papers or talked with the witnesses myself during the last two years. This experience has led me to believe heartily in the importance and value of some such proceedings as our separate support proceedings in the Probate Court. These are cheap, speedy, and of great benefit to poor but honest women who have children whom they wish to bring up undisturbed by brutal and drunken husbands. Such are the clients on whom the marriage tie, if it cannot be dissolved or relaxed, weighs most heavily, and I am also much impressed by the fact that it is not for the wife's interest alone, but also greatly for the interest of the children that homes should be easily protected from the influence and bad example of drunken and brutal fathers and husbands. I have been impressed by the fact that it is very seldom that a woman in this situation really needs a divorce. She does not want to have another man in the house. It is true that the husband is probably irregular in his habits when shut out of his own home, but also it is my impression that his irregularities outside of his own home are not of the kind that increase the population, whether he is divorced or not.

Occasionally, although a woman does not wish to marry again, her husband is of so unruly and vindictive a type that a separate support order does not protect her from his incursions into her home and his various interferences with her. In such cases the possibility of securing a divorce for her cheaply is of great value to her and her children. Even the most violent and spiteful husband seems to acquiesce in the finality of a divorce.

Cost of living.—The following facts may help you in understanding the bearing of some of the information above. The city of Boston pays 2.25 dollars a day for unskilled labour. The expense of living is such that the judges appear generally to believe that a man separated from his family cannot be expected to keep himself in such health that he can work regularly unless he has 8 dollars a week. Therefore separate support orders and divorce proceedings do not result in payments to the wife unless the husband is earning more than 8 dollars or 9 dollars a week. A woman being the better manager can live somewhat more cheaply—observe the last paragraph in the letter from the Associated Charities.

Yours, &c.,
HENRY JAMES, jun.

J. Arthur Barratt, Esq.,
3, Temple Garden, Temple,
London, England.

(2.)

THE ASSOCIATED CHARITIES OF BOSTON.

Boston,
8th April 1910.

MY DEAR MR. JAMES,

I TALKED with the secretaries yesterday. There was a large attendance, covering the whole city, and only two instances were cited where we know of a man and woman living together illegally, because, owing to poverty, they could not get a divorce, and in one of these it is doubtful if that is the reason. In my own personal experience with poor families I can only recall one instance, and when I offered to help the woman get a divorce in order to legalise the present situation the couple disappeared.

In answer to your last query, roughly speaking, an able-bodied woman can usually earn enough to support herself and two children. When it comes to a definite statement of what she should be allowed in order to do this without working for compensation on her part it is tremendously difficult, as you can see, depending on previous spending, age of the children, health, &c. With two small children I should think a minimum would be 6 dollars a week, and the mother would have to supplement that with small earnings, or live with friends in a co-operative sharing of expenses. Please use this letter in any way that seems wise to you.

Yours, &c.,
ALICE L. HIGGINS.

Mr. Henry James, jun.,
84, State Street,
Boston, Massachusetts.

(3.)

LEGAL AID SOCIETY OF CHICAGO.

Chicago, Illinois,
4th April 1910.

DEAR SIR,

IN answer to your inquiry with regard to the question of divorce among poor persons in this community, I would say that there is a provision in the statutes of the State of Illinois which enables poor persons to start what is called a "pauper suit" for divorce. No advance payment of costs is necessary, but the attorney is required to make affidavit to the effect that he is receiving nothing for his services in prosecuting the suit, and that he expects to receive nothing. The litigant must sign an affidavit stating that he has no money to advance for the payment of costs and promising to pay the court costs out of the first money obtained from the defendant in the suit, if any is obtained. Upon such a showing the court will allow a pauper's suit to be started, and proceedings can be taken in the usual way toward securing a divorce.

You will see that this provision in the statutes enables poor persons to obtain a divorce almost as readily as rich persons, provided the attorney can be found who will undertake to handle the matter. It very rarely happens that the husband is not earning enough so that he can pay his attorney some small fee; or, if he is a defendant, he can be required by order of the court to pay a small fee to the attorney who is handling the matter for his wife.

There are many lawyers in this city who, through one cause or another, are glad to handle these small matters, so that it may be said that we are hardly confronted with the situation of which you speak in your letter (i.e., poor persons living in adultery because of expense of divorce suit).

The policy of this society with regard to divorce is somewhat conservative. The Board of Directors take the position that a divorce is a luxury. They feel that in almost every case persons seeking divorces should pay for services rendered in securing them. Unless the husband is conducting himself in such a way as to place the wife or children in actual physical danger, or is interfering with the education of the children, the Legal Aid Society will not undertake to secure a divorce. Of course where there are such cases and we do undertake to secure a divorce, no charge whatever is made.

As to your inquiry about whether divorce is increasing amongst the poor, I would answer that there has been no apparent increase in this community. I believe that the figures show an increase of divorce amongst all classes of people within the last few years, but I do not believe that divorces, or the conditions which bring about the necessity for divorces, are increasing; especially amongst the poor.

Yours, &c.,
GUY M. BLAKE,
Attorney for the
Legal Aid Society
of Chicago.

Mr. J. Arthur Barratt,
3, Temple Gardens,
London, England.

(4.)

THE LEGAL AID SOCIETY.

New York,
26th March 1910.

MY DEAR Mr. BARRATT,

YOUR letter of 17th March, addressed to Mr. Merrill E. Gates, has been forwarded to me. Mr. Gates resigned as Attorney-in-Chief of the Legal Aid Society on the 1st of January 1910, and I was appointed his successor. In regard to obtaining evidence to present before the Royal Commission on the question of Divorce Law, permit me to state that I will be very glad to assist you in every way possible and have to-day mailed to the various Legal Aid Societies throughout the United States the letters which you enclosed. I will forward you a brief report on the question the early part of next week and will mail you, as the same are received, the various articles from the other Legal Aid Societies in America.

Yours, &c.,
LEONARD McGEE,
Attorney for the
Legal Aid Society.

J. Arthur Barratt, Esq.,
3, Temple Gardens,
London, England.

THE LEGAL AID SOCIETY.

New York.
13th April 1910.

MY DEAR Mr. BARRATT,

I AM enclosing you herewith articles I have received from the Chicago Legal Aid Society, the Legal Aid Society of Pittsburg, the Legal Aid Society of Philadelphia, and one I have prepared on the question of Divorce. I trust the enclosed will serve their purposes, and when I receive the articles from the other societies I have written to, I will be very glad to forward the same to you.

Yours, &c.,
LEONARD McGEE,
Attorney for the
Legal Aid Society.

J. Arthur Barratt, Esq.,
3, Temple Gardens,
London, England.

THE LEGAL AID SOCIETY,

New York,
13th April 1910.

MY DEAR SIR,

IN compliance with your request of 17th March, I will outline briefly the law and practice in divorce, annulment, and separation proceedings in this State, and give you such statistics and figures on cost as I have.

Divorces may be obtained in this State only on the ground of adultery. Separation may be obtained for cruel and inhuman treatment, drunkenness, abandonment, &c. A marriage may be annulled where one of the parties had a former husband or wife living at the time of the marriage, where one of the parties to the marriage was under the age of 18 years, and has not cohabited with the other party after attaining that age, or where the marriage was contracted through fraud or duress, &c.

These actions are commenced by either the personal or the substituted service upon the defendant of a summons, or a summons and complaint. If the service is made by substitution, that is, by publishing the summons in two newspapers for six consecutive weeks, the cost runs from 20 dollars to 30 dollars for that item alone. This is not a very satisfactory way of proceeding, however, owing to the strictness required in proving service, and the leeway allowed in opening defaults. The great majority of cases are commenced by personal service of a summons on the defendant, and where this is done the person serving the summons must be examined as to the service in open court.

If the defendant appears and defends the case, it is possible for either of the parties to move for the appointment of a referee to take the testimony. This is an expensive proceeding, as the referee's fees range over 10 dollars for every hearing. As the party securing the reference must pay the cost of such reference, no one would make such an application unless he or she had the means to do so. Where no reference is ordered, the case is tried in the Supreme Court, Special Term, which is the equity side of the Court, before a justice or before a justice and a jury, at the election of the parties. If the case is undefended, an inquest is taken by the justice sitting in Special Term, and as strict proof is required as though the case were defended.

After the testimony in either defended or undefended cases has been taken in open court, the stenographer's minutes are submitted to the justice together with specific findings of fact and law, and a proposed interlocutory decree, except in a separation suit, in which case final judgment may be at once entered. The procedure slightly differs where there is a jury, which decides these specific questions of fact presented, and the interlocutory decree is entered on their findings. This interlocutory decree, the findings, and testimony are then filed in the county clerk's office, and final judgment is entered three months later.

In New York County there is a special calendar of undefended divorce, separation, and annulment cases which is called every Wednesday, and inquests taken. In this way it is possible to bring a case to hearing within a month or six weeks after it has been placed on the calendar. A defended case cannot be brought on so quickly owing to the crowded condition of the calendar in this county, and it sometimes takes eight months or a year before the case is reached for trial.

Except where a reference is ordered or service by publication is required, the chief expense in these cases is the cost of the stenographer's minutes. Where the case is defended, there is no way to tell what this cost will be, as it depends entirely on the amount of testimony produced. In this connexion I can only say that I tried a case a few weeks ago, in which nine witnesses testified, the trial lasting approximately three hours, and the costs of the minutes amounting to 25 dollars. That I believe can be taken as a fair sample of the class of defended cases in which this Society appears. According to the statistics that were compiled in this office for work done in divorce, separation, and annulment cases handled between 1st January 1907 and 20th November 1909, the total average cost in 16 undefended cases was 5.86 dollars. In similar cases concluded between 29th November 1909 and the present date, the average cost in seven undefended cases was 6.71 dollars. These items are made up of a calendar fee of 3 dollars, a trial fee of 1 dollar, the cost of the stenographer's minutes, and 50 cents for entering the final judgment. Service in these cases was made by some friend of the plaintiff, and consequently there was no expense in that connexion.

Statistics furnished me by the Clerk of the Supreme Court in New York County shows that there were 646 undefended cases disposed of in 1909. From January 1909 to April 1910 there have been either disposed of or there are still waiting trial 213 defended divorces, 183 defended separations, and 30 defended annulments. It is impossible to tell from these statistics, and I believe any statistics on the subject are very unreliable, whether divorce is on the increase in this State or not. My own personal observation made possible through frequent attendance at the Special Term of the Court, where such cases are disposed of, leads me to believe that a large proportion of the parties seeking relief in such cases are people of very moderate means. In the ordinary case I doubt whether it is often possible to get an attorney of any responsibility to handle a case for less than 100 dollars. The average fee will range from 100 dollars to 200 dollars.

In conclusion I wish to say that the laws of New York offer the possibility of relief to even the poorest, although the grounds for which an absolute divorce may be obtained seem to me unduly restricted.

Yours, &c.,

J. Arthur Barratt, Esq.,
3, Temple Gardens,
London, England.

LEONARD McGEE,
Attorney for the
Legal Aid Society.

THE LEGAL AID SOCIETY.

New York,
5th May 1910.

DEAR SIR,

IN reply to your inquiry of April 25th, in reference to the proportion of poor persons desiring divorce, who are living with others improperly without marrying, I can safely say that my experience here and the information I receive from several charity workers that I know, leads me to believe that this proportion is very small. As I set forth in my previous letter, the actual cost of divorce in New York is not much, and ordinarily within reach of most persons. You will remember, however, that divorce is allowed in New York only on a ground of adultery, and for that reason there are many persons living in adultery because it is impossible to secure a divorce. This, however, is due to the stringency of the law, and not to any question of cost.

Trusting that this meets your question,

I am,

Very truly yours,
LEONARD McGEE,
Attorney for the Legal Aid Society.

J. Arthur Barratt, Esq.,
3, Temple Gardens, Temple,
London, England.

(5.)

LEGAL AID SOCIETY OF PHILADELPHIA.

Philadelphia,
29th March 1910.

DEAR SIR,

I HAVE received your letter of 26th March with enclosure of letter of J. Arthur Barratt, Esq., of London. I can answer the questions asked in brief form.

We say the average cost of obtaining a divorce is one hundred dollars (100 dollars). This does not include counsel fees. Under Pennsylvania law fifty dollars (50 dollars) has to be deposited in court at the time the application for a master's appointment is made, and the master is entitled to claim the 50 dollars as a fee for the first meeting, and to charge ten dollars (10 dollars) for each subsequent meeting. The other costs are 2.50 dollars at the time the suit is started and a similar amount to the sheriff for the subpœna to be personally served. The same fee is paid the sheriff for serving the notice of the final decree, and a fee of ten dollars (10 dollars) is paid to the clerk of the court when the decree is granted. In cases where the sheriff cannot make personal service the law requires advertising both of the original subpœna and of the rule for the final decree. The cost of this advertising comes to between 10 dollars and 20 dollars, depending on the newspapers' charges.

We, therefore, generally state that the costs will come to 100 dollars, although in some cases it may be slightly less and in some will exceed this amount. It is undoubtedly true that the costs of obtaining a divorce do prevent many poor people from securing such relief. I cannot say from my own experience that this happens in a great many cases, and am inclined to believe that where the injured person is really desirous of obtaining a divorce he or she can find the means to do so. I believe that divorce is increasing among all classes of people, the poor as well as the rich. I have no figures to show this, but draw the conclusion from the cases which have come to the attention of our Society.

I trust this answers the questions fully enough. Should you wish any more detailed information we would be very glad to furnish it to you.

Yours, &c.,

Leonard McGee, Esq.,
Legal Aid Society
of New York,
239, Broadway,
New York City.

RUPERT S. HOLLAND.

(6.)

LEGAL AID SOCIETY OF PITTSBURGH.

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania,
8th April 1910.

DEAR SIR,

I BEG to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 19th March 1910, concerning the question of divorce among the poor, asking as to its cost and whether it is increasing. In reply I beg to submit the following report:—

Under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania absolute divorce is permitted for impotence, bigamy, adultery, desertion, cruelty, and conviction for forgery or other infamous crime. Under our method of procedure such cases may be tried in one of three ways, depending on the choice of the parties, with the right always to demand a trial by jury.

1st. By the Court sitting as a Chancellor.

2nd. By the Court and jury.

3rd. By a master appointed by the Court, who hears the evidence in private sittings, and submits a report to the Court.

An average of the costs taxed in a considerable number of cases shows the average to be about as follows:—

	Dollars.
Before the Court sitting as a Chancellor -	18.01
In cases where a master is appointed -	47.59
In cases of jury trial - - -	25.00

The average charge made by an attorney for obtaining a divorce is, so far as I can judge, in the neighbourhood of 100 dollars. Of course this latter figure varies, and I do not consider that, apart from the Court costs, it would be impossible for a poor person to find an attorney who would take a divorce case and charge a fee in proportion to the means of the client.

This Society does not handle divorce cases, and consequently has not had a great deal of experience along this line. Many of the persons who have applied to the Society for assistance have discussed with our attorney the question of divorce, and many of them have said they cannot afford to apply for a divorce, but just as many have said that they would save up their money for that purpose. My personal opinion is that the cost of divorce in the State of Pennsylvania is as cheap as it should be made, and that any further material cheapening of the process would result in detriment to the community at large in encouraging hasty applications for divorce.

I am unable to answer your question as to whether the cost of divorce compels poor people to live in adultery. This question, however, I have had up with several social workers in Pittsburgh, and two of the most experienced have advised me that it is their opinion that a considerable number of poor persons are living in open adultery because they cannot afford the luxury of a divorce.

As to your second question, I think it is a well-established fact that divorce has increased greatly in the past decade in the United States generally. Whether the ratio of increase has been higher among the poor than the well-to-do I am unable to say definitely. It is my opinion, however, from general observation, that it has been about stationary with the lower classes and has increased largely with the well-to-do. This, however, may be an error resulting from the greater notoriety attached to the divorces of the well-to-do as opposed to those of the poor. I would therefore suggest that you do not place reliance upon this last observation.

Trusting this information may be of assistance to you in appearing before the Royal Commissioners of the House of Lords, and assuring you of our desire to assist you in any other way we can.

Yours, &c.,

J. Arthur Barratt, Esq., 3, Temple Gardens, London, England.

H. V. Blaxter, Secretary to the Legal Aid Society.

P.S.—I, perhaps, should add that the costs shown above are only those taxed by the county, and do not include the witness fee bill or other incidental expenses, which vary with the particular case, and might often double or treble the above amounts.

Yours, &c.,
H. V. B.

B.

Replies by American Jurists to Questions submitted by Mr. J. Arthur Barratt.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Questions submitted by Mr. Barratt.

DIVORCE.

1. What is the state of public opinion in your neighbourhood—

(a) As to whether the existing causes for divorce should be changed in any way.

(b) As to the existing laws tending or not to lack of respect for the marriage tie.

(c) As to its tendency to lead to hasty marriages.

(d) As to the advisability of publishing details of divorce actions in the newspapers.

(e) As to the attitude of the community toward citizens who are divorced in the States where so-called "easy divorce" is procured, on their return to your home State.

2. What should you say is the average cost of procuring a divorce—

(a) To a person of moderate means.

(b) To a poor person.

Is divorce oftener resorted to by the poor, the rich, or persons of moderate means?

3. Is the tendency to divorce or separation on the increase or decrease?

4. What courts have jurisdiction to grant divorce? Have your minor or county courts such jurisdiction?

5. Is the divorce decree, when first entered, a final decree, or is it simply interlocutory, to be followed by a final decree after a certain period of time?

6. Is there any public officer in your State having authority to intervene in divorce actions on behalf of the State, or otherwise, to prevent collusion or fraud?

7. Is the husband or the wife more frequently the plaintiff in divorce actions?

8. Has the fact (if so) that citizens of other States frequently resort to your State to bring actions for divorce, the effect of lessening the respect for the marriage tie in your State?

9. State your views on divorce generally, including any suggestion for reform in your divorce laws.

10. Have your courts power to order divorce actions to be heard privately in court or before a referee, and, if so, are such actions more commonly heard in private or before a referee or in open court?

11. Do clergymen refuse to marry divorced persons?

(In all the above questions suits for nullity or separation are to be included under the name "divorce.")

Replies.

(1.)

ALABAMA.

Mobile, Alabama,
12th April 1910.

DEAR SIR,

YOUR favour of 5th March, addressed to the President of our Local Bar Association, was handed me a few days ago, and I take pleasure in replying to your inquiries, although I regret my inability to answer all of them fully. The answers are in the order of the questions.

1.—(a) Public opinion in this neighbourhood has not been aroused to an extent which would indicate any general sentiment as to whether the existing causes of divorce should be changed in any way. My own opinion is that the grounds for divorce in this State are proper, but divorces are too often granted on what seems to me to be mere formal proof.

(b) The laxity with which divorces are granted undoubtedly tends to disrespect for the marriage tie.

(c) The knowledge that a divorce may be easily obtained probably leads, in many instances, to hasty marriages.

(d) There is a general sentiment against publishing details of divorce proceedings in the newspapers.

(e) Public opinion is sufficiently strong to frown with disfavour upon persons obtaining a divorce in those States where so-called "easy divorce" is procured, but the incident is soon forgotten, and the party does not permanently lose social caste.

2.—(a) The average cost of procuring a divorce to a person of moderate means is 75 dollars and (b) 40 dollars to a poor person. Proceedings for a divorce are seldom resisted, and when they are the costs are probably double or triple the above figures. The rich, the poor, the high and the low, likewise resort to the divorce courts, but there is probably a larger percentage of divorces among persons of moderate means than among persons of other classes.

3. The tendency to divorce is on the increase.

4. Only superior courts have jurisdiction of divorce proceedings.

5. The divorce decree is final when granted on personal service, except that neither party may marry within sixty days thereafter, and, as a rule, the decree permits only the complainant to marry again, and if the respondent desires to marry again he, or she, must file a petition for such purpose, and, if a man, must show to the court that he is financially able to maintain a family, and that the cause for which the divorce was granted will not likely again occur. When service is had by publication, as for instance, where the respondent is a non-resident, the decree remains in abeyance for twelve months subject in the meantime to be set aside by proof that no notice of the proceedings was actually received.

6. There is no such public office in this State.

7. The majority of proceedings for divorce are instituted by the wife.

8. It is not a fact that citizens of other States frequently resort to the courts of this State for action for divorce. Where the respondent is a non-resident, the other party to the marriage must have been a bonâ fide resident of this State for one year next before the filing of the bill. Where the ground for divorce is abandonment by the respondent, the complainant must have been a bonâ fide resident of this State for three years next before the filing of the bill.

9. I am in favour of a divorce on any one of the following grounds:—(1) In favour of either party when the other was, at the time of the marriage, physically and incurably incapacitated from entering into the marriage state; (2) adultery; (3) voluntary abandonment from bed and board for two years next preceding the filing of the bill; (4) the commission of the crime against nature; (5) becoming addicted after marriage to habitual drunkenness; (6) in favour of the husband when the wife was pregnant at the time of marriage, without his knowledge or agency; (7) in favour of the wife when the husband has committed violence on her person, attended with danger to life or health, or when from his conduct there is reasonable apprehension of such violence.

I am not in favour of permitting either party to a divorce proceeding to marry again, except the innocent party who has obtained a divorce on the ground of adultery.

10. Our courts have power to order divorce actions to be heard privately in court, or before a referee, but private proceedings are infrequent.

11. A large number of clergymen refuse to marry divorced persons, and this is especially so in reference to clergymen of the Roman Catholic and Episcopal Churches; except that the Episcopal clergymen, as a rule, do not withhold their sanction to the marriage of the person who has obtained a divorce on the ground of adultery of the other party to the marriage.

Trusting that the above answers will be of some service to you, and assuring you of my desire to render any further assistance in my power, I beg to be,

Yours, &c.,
JNO. E. MITCHELL,
President Mobile Bar Association
(Address merely Mobile, Ala.).

Mr. J. Arthur Barratt,
London, England.

(2.)

CALIFORNIA.

San Francisco,
17th February 1910.

MY DEAR SIR,

RESPONDING to your favour of the 1st instant, asking my responses to a series of questions on the subject of divorce, you will find my replies appended below:—

1.—(a) There does not seem to be any popular outcry against the present "liberal" system.

(b) Naturally such tendency exists in a large degree.

(c) Tendency in this direction not marked.

(d) It is inadvisable, but newspapers revel in this class of sensational "news."

(2) The divorced individual is not socially ostracised, unless it is the woman who is divorced for adultery. In certain church circles where divorce is not recognised as being sanctioned by religious dogma, the divorcee is to some extent persona non grata.

There is no migration from this State for divorce purposes. It is easy enough here.

2.—(a) and (b) Statistics are wanting. It depends on magnitude of property interest and question of control of offspring. An average divorce without these elements can be obtained for 125 dollars. Where wealthy people are involved, large fees are paid. Usually property interests are adjusted out of court. Probably the larger proportion of divorces are sought by the last two classes.

3. On the increase, perceptibly.

4. Superior courts, i.e., courts of general jurisdiction, with right of appeal. Our next lower courts are police or municipal, and justices of the peace. They have no divorce jurisdiction.

5. Interlocutory—final follows in a year.

6. No. Legislation of this kind has been attempted but failed.

7. Probably the wife.

8. Outsiders rarely come to this State for this purpose. The interlocutory feature of the decree is deterrent. Nevada is the popular state for "transient" applicants.

9. I have no criticism to make of our divorce laws. I have, however, of their administration. In some courts the law is too loosely administered. There is a temperamental difficulty, which legislation cannot obviate.

10. Courts have the power, but in later years it has not been exercised to any large degree. Actions are ordinarily heard before a judge in open court. The judge has power to order private hearings or hearings with closed doors, but this power is rarely exercised.

11. Yes. Of certain denominations, i.e., Catholic and Episcopal.

Yours, &c.,
CURTIS H. LINDLEY,
President,
Bar Association of
San Francisco.

J. Arthur Barratt, Esq.,
3, Temple Gardens, Temple,
London, England.

(3.)

CONNECTICUT.

New Haven, Connecticut,
25th April 1910.

MY DEAR SIR,

I AM in receipt of a letter or circular from you addressed "H. L. Stoddart," but in view of the fact that the doctrine of reciprocity calls loudly upon me to do anything I can to aid you, I assume that the letter was intended for me, and therefore I hastily answer your various questions stated in your schedule headed "divorce."

As to Question 1, with the subdivisions a–e both inclusive, I doubt whether there is any settled public opinion in my "neighbourhood," understanding neighbourhood to mean the State of Connecticut. Such public opinion as there is in this State differs very greatly in different localities. The religious factor is important. We have a very large Roman Catholic population in certain localities. Among the members of most of the other religious communities divorce is resorted to freely; yet, speaking broadly, divorce is unfavourably regarded, and from a social point of view every divorced person assumes the burden of proof and is put upon his or her justification or palliation. I do not think there is any public demand for a change in our divorce laws, nor do I think that public opinion is that our divorce laws lead to hasty marriages. Whether the divorce is obtained in the home State or any other, the "attitude of the community" is directed toward the individual person rather than the fact of divorce. I am inclined to think that public opinion as a whole justifies our divorce laws, and upon the whole they work with fair satisfaction. Doubtless many can be found in our State who will regard any law permitting divorce to be pernicious, and you will find many who think that the divorce law ought to be broadened and divorce made easy, As to all of the above matters we have extremists on both sides.

As to your second question, it is impossible to answer as to the average cost. I do not suppose it can be approximated even. I imagine the minimum cost is probably about 50 dollars.

As to the third question, I think there is no marked tendency to increase or decrease divorce.

As to the fourth question, the Superior Court, which is our Court of highest original jurisdiction. has exclusive jurisdiction in divorce cases.

And, answering Question 5, the final decree is entered at first like any other action.

Answering Question 6, there is no public officer having special authority to intervene in divorce actions on behalf of the State or otherwise, to prevent collusion or fraud, although I apprehend that our State Attorney, so-called, would by virtue of his office have that authority, and I think it probable that it would be his official duty so to do if his attention were called to any such action.

As to Question 7, the wife is more frequently the plaintiff. A very large proportion of divorce actions are brought by the woman.

As to Question 9, I presume my views on divorce are perhaps on a general level with that of the community in general, and stated very broadly, perhaps the following theory is accurate enough for the purpose. I believe that in special cases divorce ought to be granted, but only when the marriage relation is substantially intolerable and not to be endured. I have no suggestion for reform in our divorce laws, and believe that the only real reform lies in the selection of good judges. No judge ought to grant a divorce until he is satisfied that it is for the best interests of the parties concerned that it should be granted, and this without much reference to the alleged cause. In other words, I think that the administration of divorce laws is the principal thing.

As to Question 10, the courts have power to hear the case privately or to send it to a referee or committee, so-called, and this is sometimes done, but usually the cases are heard in open court.

As to Question 11, some clergymen do and some do not refuse to marry divorced persons.

I am, &c.,
HENRY STODDARD.

J. Arthur Barratt, Esq.,
3, Temple Gardens, Temple,
London, England.

(4.)

GEORGIA.

ATLANTA BAR ASSOCIATION.

Atlanta, Georgia,
7th May 1910.

DEAR SIR,

I AM in receipt of your favour of the 28th of April advising that you had been called upon to appear before a Committee of the House of Lords on the subject of American divorce laws, and requesting replies to certain questions therein enclosed.

Assuming that you have retained copies of these questions, I will endeavour to answer them by reference to their numbers only.

1.—(a) The existing grounds for divorce in this State are (1) intermarriage within the prohibited degrees of relationship; (2) mental incapacity at the time of the marriage; (3) impotency at the time of the marriage; (4) force, menaces, duress or fraud in obtaining the marriage; (5) pregnancy of the wife at the time of the marriage, unknown to the husband; (6) adultery in either of the parties after marriage; (7) desertion continuing three years; (8) conviction of felonies involving moral turpitude; (9) cruel treatment or habitual intoxication (discretionary as to total or partial); (10) (partial) on any ground which was held sufficient in the English courts prior to 4th May 1784.

As each of these grounds is founded in sound reason, I do not believe public opinion desires any change.

(b) The existing laws do not tend to a lack of respect for the marriage tie.

(c) They do not tend to too hasty marriages.

(d) Personally I doubt the advisability of publishing details of divorce actions in the newspapers, but I doubt whether this voices the general sentiment on the subject. The vicious appetite for prurient news will not be likely to be abated in this country until we have progressed much further along lines of ethical culture.

(e) There are not a sufficient number of cases referred to herein to form the basis for an attitude of the community on the subject.

2.—(a) About 100 dollars. A deposit of 6 dollars is required in all cases to cover minimum court costs. The additional expense includes advertising in case of non-residence and service by publication, and counsel fees.

(b) 25 dollars to 50 dollars. The great majority of parties to divorce cases here are poor people or persons of moderate means, a large number of them being negroes.

3. Without any definite statistics on the subject, my observation is that the increase in divorce cases, taking the State as a whole, is not out of proportion to the increase of population.

4. Our superior courts being courts of general jurisdiction, including both equity and common law, are the only courts having jurisdiction in divorce cases. Our minor, or county courts, have no jurisdiction whatever in connection with divorce cases.

5. Our law requires two verdicts rendered at separate terms of the court, with an interval of not less than six months between these terms, before the final decree of divorce is entered. An adverse verdict at the first term, unless excepted to and reversed, would defeat the action entirely. In like manner a favourable verdict on the first trial followed by an unfavourable one on the second trial, unless the latter is excepted to and reversed, would defeat the action of the plaintiff.

6. In divorce cases proceeding ex parte it is the duty of the judge to see that the grounds are legal and sustained by proof, or to appoint the Solicitor-General, or some other attorney of the court, to discharge that duty for him.

7. It would take a very tedious amount of investigation to answer this question definitely. My impression is that the greater number of cases are instituted by the wife against the husband.

8. It is not true that citizens of other States frequently resort to our State for the purpose of bringing actions for divorce, and hence the effect of lessening the respect in our State of the marriage tie is not produced by this cause.

9. Speaking generally, I consider the laws of this State, both as to the ground for divorce and the procedure for granting the same, very admirable and about as well adjusted to the difficult problem as any which could be practically devised and administered.

10. Our superior courts have the power, in any case of seduction or divorce, or other case where the evidence is vulgar or obscene, or relates to the improper acts of the sexes, and tends to debauch the morals of the young, in the discretion of the judge presiding, and on his own motion, or on motion of either of the parties or of their attorneys, to hear and try the case after clearing the court-room of all or any portion of the audience. This power is not often exercised, and there is no opinion of approval or disapproval of the practice. There is no question that the power is rightfully vested, and on proper occasion would be exercised with the entire approval of the public.

11. Whether or not any given clergyman would refuse to marry divorced persons would depend upon the tenets of his own church. I believe the Catholic church declines to recognise civil divorce, and the Episcopal church declines to recognise any except those granted on scriptural grounds. There may be other denominations whose clergymen would have scruples on the subject. As the civil law provides for the performing of the marriage ceremony by a clergyman of any denomination or by our magistrates, there is no embarrassment about obtaining the execution of the licence to marry when once it has been granted.

12. A large percentage of our population consists of the negro race, either of the pure blood or of the various degrees of infusion of the white blood, producing what we term the "mulatto" of varying shades of colour. In even the smallest degree, the negro blood inexorably classes the person with the negro race. In my opinion, the greatest reservoir of material for all trouble about divorces springs from this mixed product. Their state of hopelessness is intensified as the infusion of Caucasian blood in their veins increases. Many of them are endowed with the aspirations of the white race and cursed with the depravity of the negro race, and out of the infractions of the marriage laws which afflict us a very large percentage is caused by this class of our population. Among the full-blooded whites it is exceedingly rare that unlawful cohabitation occurs. Among the blacks and the mulattoes the marriage tie is treated with the utmost indifference. Their only desire, in a great majority of cases, is to avoid the penalty of the criminal laws on the subject, and this they do not always succeed in doing. This view is but one of the many phases of the appalling race question which confronts and overshadows, and sometimes threatens to overwhelm, this section of the United States.

My time is such that it would not be practicable for me to make the necessary investigation to have answered some of your statistical questions. I trust that the foregoing generalities may prove of some service.

Yours, &c.,
ALEX. W. SMITH,
President,
Atlanta Bar Association.

Mr. J. Arthur Barratt,
3, Temple Gardens, Temple,
London, England.

(5.)

ILLINOIS.

REPLIES OF HON. GEO. A. DUPUY, CHANCELLOR OF THE SUPERIOR COURT OF COOK COUNTY, ILLINOIS (THAT IS CHICAGO).

DIVORCE.

1. What is the state of public opinion in your neighbourhood—

(a) As to whether the existing causes for divorce should be changed in any way?—I do not believe any change of law is demanded.

(b) As to the existing laws tending or not to lack of respect for the marriage tie?—I do not think existing laws tend toward lack of respect for marriage.

(c) As to its tendency to lead to hasty marriages?—I cannot say that it does.

(d) As to the advisability of publishing details of divorce actions in the newspapers?—As between publication and suppression, I favour the former.

(e) As to the attitude of your community towards citizens who are divorced in States where so-called "easy divorce" is procured, on their return to your home State?—Very few such cases exist. I have not come in personal contact with any.

2. What should you say is the average cost of procuring a divorce—

(a) To a person of moderate means?—50 to 75 dollars.

(b) To a poor person?—35 to 50 dollars.

Is divorce oftener resorted to by the poor, the rich, or persons of moderate means?—

Poor people are 60 per cent. of the whole.
Rich people are 5 per cent. of the whole.
Others 35 per cent of the whole (estimated).

3. Is the tendency to divorce on the increase or decrease?—Probably on the increase.

7. Is the husband or wife more frequently the plaintiff in divorce actions?—Wife, 78 per cent.; husband, 21 per cent. (Actual statistics in 181 consecutive cases in the Superior Court (Chicago), Cook County, Illinois.)

8. Has the fact (if so) that citizens of other States frequently resort to your State to bring actions for divorce, the effect of lessening the respect in your State for the marriage tie?—This is not the case in Illinois.

9. State your views on divorce generally, including any suggestions for divorce reform in your divorce laws?—I do not think the divorce laws of Illinois are defective. There is need in default cases that counsel representing the public should participate in the trials to prevent collusion. The absence of such counsel leads to divorces by collusion and to imposition upon the courts. I have presided at the trial of many hundreds of cases, and I do not believe that many divorces are granted when the interests of society demand that they be withheld.

10. Have your courts power to order divorce actions to be heard privately in court or before a referee, and, if so, are such actions more commonly heard in private or before a referee or in open court?—Nothing but public hearings in open court.

11. Are private hearings generally approved of?—

12. Do clergyman refuse to marry divorced persons?—Not generally; some Episcopal clergymen do.

(In all the above questions suits for nullity or separation are included under the name "divorce.")

SUPERIOR COURT OF COOK COUNTY, CHICAGO.

GEORGE A. DUPUY, Judge.

In Chambers, 811, Court House, Chicago.
DEAR SIR, Feb. 19th.

YOUR favour of recent date to the President of the Chicago Bar Association was handed by him to me with request that I reply thereto. I take pleasure in complying with his request. He sent it to me as Chancellor of the Superior Court of Cook County, Illinois (Chicago), because in my regular chancery court work I try about 20 divorce cases per week through the year. I hope this may be of service to you.

Very respectfully,
GEORGE A. DUPOY,
Chief Justice, Superior Court.

To Mr. J. Arthur Barratt,
3, Temple Gardens,
Temple, London.

(6.)

ILLINOIS, CHICAGO.

DIVORCE.

1. What is the state of public opinion in your neighbourhood—

(a) As to whether the existing causes for divorce should be changed in any way?—The majority of the public, I think, are satisfied with the causes as they now exist in this State.

(b) As to the existing laws tending or not to lack of respect for the marriage tie?—That they do not so tend.

(c) As to its tendency to lead to hasty marriages?—That they have no such tendency.

(d) As to the advisability of publishing details of divorce actions in the newspapers?—Opinion would be very much divided. I think the better reasoning is against publishing details of such actions on the ground that the harm done by such publication is greater than the good accomplished by the deterrent effect upon those contemplating divorce.

(e) As to the attitude of your community towards citizens who are divorced in States where so-called "easy divorce" is procured, on their return to your home State?—I have no acquaintance with any such.

2. What should you say is the average cost of procuring a divorce—

(a) To a person of moderate means?—50 to 500 dollars, depending upon whether there is a contest.

(b) To a poor person?—25 to 75 dollars.

Is divorce oftener resorted to by the poor, the rich, or persons of moderate means?—I think by persons of moderate means.

3. Is the tendency to divorce on the increase or decrease?—Large increase.

4. What courts in your State have jurisdiction to grant divorce?—Only our courts of general jurisdiction, by the chancery side thereof.

5. Is the divorce decree when first entered a final decree?—Yes, final.

6. Is there any public officer in your State having authority to intervene in divorce actions on behalf of the State or otherwise, to prevent collusion and fraud?—No public officer is charged with such a duty.

7. Is the husband or wife more frequently the plaintiff in divorce actions?—The wife, but occasionally the fact she is plaintiff is a matter of gallantry on the part of the husband.

8. Has the fact (if so) that citizens of other States frequently resort to your State to bring actions for divorce, the effect of lessening the respect in your State for the marriage tie?—It is not the fact.

9. State your views on divorce generally, including any suggestions for divorce reform in your divorce laws?—I am in favour of divorce, and think the statutes in this State adequate in that respect.

10. Have your courts power to order divorce actions to be heard privately in court or before a referee, and, if so, are such actions more commonly heard in private or before a referee or in open court?—The statute requires default cases to be heard in open court, and in practice all trials are heard in open court.

11. Do clergymen refuse to marry divorced persons?—I know of no clergyman except Roman Catholic and Episcopalians refusing to marry divorced persons.

12. Are private hearings generally approved of?—No.

JOSEPH H. DEFREES,
President of Chicago Bar Association.

(7.)

ILLINOIS, CHICAGO.

Judge WALKER.

DIVORCE.

1. What is the state of public opinion in your neighbourhood—

(a) As to whether the existing causes for divorce should be changed in any way?—I do not think public opinion demands any change. By "public opinion" I mean the opinion of the great majority.

(b) As to the existing laws tending or not to lack of respect for the marriage tie?—That they do not so tend.

(c) As to its tendency to lead to hasty marriages?—That they have no such tendency.

(d) As to the advisability of publishing details of divorce actions in the newspapers?—Opinion seems divided; there are good reasons why, on grounds of decency, they should be suppressed: there are also good reasons why, as warnings, they should be published.

(e) As to the attitude of your community towards citizens who are divorced in States where so-called "easy divorce" is procured, on their return to your home State?—I know of no such citizens.

2. What should you say is the average cost of procuring a divorce—

(a) To a person of moderate means?—About 100 dollars.

(b) To a poor person?—About 35 dollars.

Is divorce oftener resorted to by the poor, the rich, or persons of moderate means?—Of moderate means.

3. Is the tendency to divorce on the increase or decrease?—Largely on the increase, but not so much so as in most of the other States of the U.S. (see Federal Census).

7. Is the husband or wife more frequently the plaintiff in divorce actions?—The wife—much more so.

8. Has the fact (if so) that citizens of other States frequently resort to your State to bring actions for divorce, the effect of lessening the respect in your State for the marriage tie?—It is not the fact.

9. State your views on divorce generally, including any suggestions for divorce reform in your divorce laws?—I assume from Mr. Defrees' letter that this question is to be answered by him personally.

10. Have your courts power to order divorce actions to be heard privately in court or before a referee, and, if so, are such actions more commonly heard in private or before a referee or in open court?—Our statute requires default cases to be heard in open court. All trials are held in open court.

11. Are private hearings generally approved of?—No.

12. Do clergyman refuse to marry divorced persons?—None but Roman Catholics and Episcopalians.

(In all the above questions, suits for nullity or separation are included under the name "divorce."

CHARLES M. WALKER,
Judge Circuit Court, Cook Co., Chicago.

(8.)

ILLINOIS, CHICAGO.

Judge WINDES.

DIVORCE.

1. What is the state of public opinion in your neighbourhood—

(a) As to whether the existing causes for divorce should be changed in any way?—Cannot answer—have heard no discussion of the subject and very few opinions.

(b) As to the existing laws tending or not to lack of respect for the marriage tie?—Same answer.

(c) As to its tendency to lead to hasty marriages?—Same answer.

(d) As to the advisability of publishing details of divorce actions in the newpapers?—Have heard frequent criticisms of such publications, and think that the opinion is quite general that such details should not be made public.

(e) As to the attitude of your community towards citizens who are divorced in States where so-called "easy divorce" is procured, on their return to your home State?—That such citizens are not "desirable."

2. What should you say is the average cost of procuring a divorce—

(a) To a person of moderate means?—50 to 100 dollars when not contested.

(b) To a poor person?—10 to 20 dollars when not contested.

Is divorce oftener resorted to by the poor, the rich, or persons of moderate means?—The last named.

3. Is the tendency to divorce on the increase or decrease?—Increase.

7. Is the husband or wife more frequently the plaintiff in divorce actions?—The wife.

8. Has the fact (if so) that citizens of other States frequently resort to your State to bring actions for divorce, the effect of lessening the respect in your State for the marriage tie?—Do not know.

9. State your views on divorce generally, including any suggestions for divorce reform in your divorce laws?—I am opposed to divorce generally, and think before one should be granted, the Chancellor should be satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt that the evidence establishes a clear right to relief under the law. Under such practice I would not change the statutory causes for divorce in Illinois.

10. Have your courts power to order divorce actions to be heard privately in court or before a referee, and, if so, are such actions more commonly heard in private or before a referee or in open court?—Only the court has power, but to exercise such a power is entirely wrong. There should be no secrets in such cases. They are generally heard in open court.

11. Are private hearings generally approved of?—No.

12. Do clergymen refuse to marry divorced persons?—Do not know.

THOMAS G. WINDES,
Judge of Circuit Court, Chicago.

17th February 1910.

(In all the above questions suits for nullity or separation are included under the name "divorce.")

(9.)

INDIANA.

DIVORCE.

Answers by Charles Martindale, Esq., President of the Indianapolis Bar Association.

1.—(a) As to whether existing causes for divorce should be changed in any way, is a matter of some discussion generally mooted in church gatherings and most exhaustively discussed by those who have least knowledge of sociology. My observation is that the trend of opinion is not in favour of either extending or restricting the existing statutory causes for divorce in this State. It appears to me that there is a demand for a stricter application of the law to the facts in each case.

(b) As to the existing laws tending or not to a lack of respect for the marriage tie, it is a matter of general observation that there is not as great a respect for the marriage tie throughout the States as in former years, but as to whether the cause of this is the possibility of divorce is a matter upon which there is doubt.

(c) The weight of opinion seems to be that the possibility of divorce tends to ill-considered marriages, but it is also a question as to whether if the marriage and divorce laws were made quite strict, illegitimacies would not be largely increased.

(d) It is quite the general opinion that the publishing of details of divorce actions in the newspapers is harmful and that many of our social ills are due to what we call "yellow" journalism.

(e) The attitude of the community towards citizens who are divorced in the States where so-called "easy divorce' is procured on their return to their home State, is, I dare say, much the same as in the cities of the older States or of Europe. Much depends upon the facts of each case and the conduct of the parties. One or both of the parties is apt to be sent to Coventry for a period of probation, and whether they regain their former social status depends largely upon conduct. It is observable that in suburban communities, where life is simpler, the feeling towards persons who have been divorced is much more severe.

2.—(a) The cost of procuring a divorce to a person of moderate means is from 25 dollars to 50 dollars. This means that the taxable court costs are about 15 dollars and the fees of the attorney range from 10 dollars upward.

(b) The costs to a poor person are 2 dollars, which is the fee of the sheriff for the service of the writ of summons and whatever fee his attorney may require. We have professional shysters who seek this sort of business at fees of 5 dollars to 10 dollars. The taxable court costs are taxed against the losing party, but if the plaintiff or defendant has no property subject to execution above the exemption, the costs cannot be collected. Divorce is oftener resorted to by the poor because the poor are the larger class, and I think because the conditions of life make a larger demand upon mutual tolerance and also offer greater temptations.

3. Divorce is very greatly on the increase in this State, although there has been no change in the statutory causes of divorce for 37 years. Whether this increase is in a ratio to the increase of population I cannot say.

4. General jurisdiction of civil and criminal nature is in our county courts which bear the title of circuit courts for the reason that the same judge presides over a circuit sometimes composed of more than one county. These are the trial courts for all causes, and the distinctions between actions at law and suits in equity have been abolished by the code of procedure in this State.

In some of the counties of this State we have additional courts of concurrent jurisdiction which are entitled superior courts, and in one or two counties of the State probate jurisdiction is conferred on a probate judge. All of these courts have jurisdiction of petitions for divorce.

5. The decree of divorce is in the first instance a final decree.

6. The public prosecutor or prosecuting attorney, as he is called, has authority to intervene in all divorce actions for the purpose of preventing collusion.

7. Without accurate knowledge of statistics it appears that the wife is more frequently the plaintiff in divorce actions.

8. In this State the petitioner for divorce must make an oath that he has been a bonâ fide resident of the State for the last two years previous to the filing of the petition and a bonâ fide resident of the county at the time of and for at least six months immediately preceding the filing, which bonâ fide residence shall be duly proven by such petitioner to the satisfaction of the court trying the same by at least two witnesses who are resident freeholders and householders of the State. As it is difficult to find two persons who are freeholders and householders who are willing to perjure themselves, it rarely happens that citizens of other States come to this State to bring actions of divorce. There are other States, like Nevada, which are much more inviting.

9. My personal view in relation to divorce is in favour of restricting the causes and requiring strict proof as to the facts.

The causes in this State are adultery, impotency existing at the time of marriage, abandonment for two years, cruel and inhuman treatment, habitual drunkenness, failure of the husband to make reasonable provision for his family for a period of two years, conviction of an infamous crime.

The causes upon which divorce are most frequently granted are adultery, cruel and inhuman treatment, and failure to make provision.

10. Courts in this State have power to order divorce actions to be heard privately in court. Private hearings are not generally approved of, and, although sometimes allowed, are not common.

11. Clergymen, as a rule, do not refuse to marry divorced persons. I have only observed two instances —one by the rector of a Protestant Episcopal Church and the other by a Catholic priest.

Divorce is so inexpensive and easy that poor persons have no need to live with others without ceremony. Such cohabitation is not infrequent, but such relations are sure to be broken up by police interference within a very short time.

(10.)

LOUISIANA.

DEAR SIR, 17th February 1910.

UPON my return to Shreveport I find your letter addressed to the President of the Bar Association of New Orleans, and same was forwarded to me here, and I beg to send you the information desired as accurately as possible under the pressure of the necessity of your having it early in March.

In answer to the first question subdivided under (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), I beg to answer as follows:—

The state of public opinion does not favour changing the existing causes for divorce.

The existing law tends to a respect of the marriage tie, and they do not lead to hasty marriages.

Public sentiment is against the advisability of publishing the divorce evidence in the newspapers.

The attitude of our community towards citizens who are divorced in States where so-called "easy divorce" is procured is not very friendly.

2nd. As to the average cost of procuring a divorce, to a person of moderate means is from 10*l.* to 20*l.*, to a poor person 5*l.* Divorce is oftener resorted to by the poor.

3rd. The tendency of divorce in this community is not on the increase. It has been confined mainly to the negro population.

4th. The courts in our State having jurisdiction over divorce are the district courts, from which an appeal lies to the supreme court of the State.

5th. The divorce decree when first entered is not always a final decree. The only case where divorce is absolute in the first instance is where the defendant has been condemned to an infamous punishment or has been guilty of adultery. All the other causes for divorce are provisional, and the first degree is called a separation from bed and board, and at the end of a year from the date of which if there has been no reconciliation between the parties the divorce follows, but has to be made the subject of a second suit, and the proof of lack of reconciliation made.

6th. There is no public officer in our State having authority to intervene in divorce actions on behalf of the State or otherwise.

7th. The wife is more frequently the plaintiff in the case.

8th. Citizens of other States do not frequent our State to bring actions for divorce, as our law and jurisprudence of the State is hostile to the granting of divorces.

9th. In accordance with the general sentiment of the country, I am in favour of a national divorce law harmonising all the various conflicting rules in the various States. This to be made the subject of a constitutional amendment to the United States Constitution.

10th. Our courts have no power to order divorce actions to be heard privately, but must be heard as all other litigations are under our Constitution in open court.

11th. Clergymen do not refuse to marry divorced persons. It is optional, of course, with them whether they will celebrate second marriages of divorced persons, and some clergymen do refuse.

Yours, &c.,

J. Arthur Barratt, Esq.,
Temple Gardens,
London, England.

E. H. RANDOLPH,
President,
Louisiana Bar Association.

(11.)

MAINE.

UNITED STATES COURTS, JUDGE'S CHAMBERS,
PORTLAND, MAINE.

22nd February 1910.

MY DEAR MR. BARRATT,

THE pressure of judicial engagements has prevented my answering at length your favour of the 1st instant and the interrogatories therein enclosed.

As to the first question which asks not my views, but "the state of public opinion": As to all the sub-heads, (a) to (e), each inclusive, there is no crystalised public opinion at present which has any practical force with regard to each of the sub-topics. The diversified condition of public opinion in any particular neighbourhood, outside perhaps of South Carolina, is as well represented by what appears on pages 249 to 251 of The World's Almanac, 1909, which I am mailing you, as could be represented in any other way. Generally speaking, you will find in every neighbourhood as much diversity of opinion between persons as appears in the various laws of the States of the Union with regard to causes for absolute divorce, which this book points out.

Of course, this is limited by two facts: The clergy of the Protestant Episcopal Church and the clergy of the Roman Catholic Church are everywhere united in hostility to the granting of any absolute divorce, except for adultery, and refuse to re-marry persons divorced except for that reason. There are a few exceptions as to the latter with reference to the Protestant Episcopal clergy. The clergy of the other denominations are generally united in opposition to divorce except for adultery, but do not go so far as to refuse to marry. Indeed, I know of some clergymen who take the position that they are bound to marry persons applying for marriage where the law of the State does not interfere.

There is no formulated opinion with reference to the tendency of divorces to lead to hasty marriages, because the prime cause of hasty marriages is the loose laws permitting such marriages. Of course, there is a general weak sentiment against the advisability of publishing the details of divorce in the newspapers; but the classes of newspapers which do publish them have a larger circulation than those which do not.

Letter (e) is answered by the fact that the attitude of the better class of the community is generally adverse to all divorced persons, except those who have been divorced where the justice of the case makes a loud demand; and no distinction is made between those who were divorced in States where so-called "easy divorces" are procured, and those who were divorced in other States. So fine a distinction is not made, that I am aware of, beyond creating a primâ facie prejudice of not much endurance. Other classes of the community are not at all troubled by questions of that kind.

As to the second interrogatory: It is impossible to estimate the cost any more than to estimate the cost of any litigation in a country like ours where there are no fixed retainers or refreshers. Court disbursements are everywhere very small.

As to the third question: I refer you to the statistics on page 251 of The World Almanac. There are no observations of value I can add thereto or take therefrom.

As to the fourth question: The answer is the highest court of judicature, the supreme judicial court only.

As to the fifth question: The statute is changed from time to time, as public opinion changes.

As to the sixth question: I answer in the negative.

As to the seventh question: I should say the husband was more apt to be brutish than the wife.

As to the eighth question: I should say there is no definite answer to be given. The matter is hardly considered.

As to the ninth question: My personal views would not be of any value for your purposes. I have never shown any disposition to be a teacher in reference thereto.

As to the tenth question: Our own courts often hear divorces in chambers, and might, under some circumstances, hear them quite privately; but what are regarded by the law as "private hearings" are unknown to us. Our courts may, of course, appoint referees, but I have never known one to be appointed in a divorce suit.

As to the eleventh question: I have already answered.

Of course, you understand that I am a Federal Judge, and we have nothing to do with divorce proceedings except incidentally, as in Haddock v. Haddock, 201 United States Supreme Court Reports, 562.

My jurisdiction extends over four States, Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island. What I write you refers to the local courts of the State of Maine.

I am only too happy to assist you in any way, and I would be very glad to write you further if you desire.

Yours, &c.,
WILLIAM S. PUTMAN
(U.S. Circuit Judge).

STATE OF MAINE.

Notice.

SAGADAHOC, ss.—SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

April Term, 1910.

To the Honourable Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court next to be held at Bath, within and for said County, on the first Tuesday of April, A.D. 1910.

Edith L. Mariner of Topsham in said County of Sagadahoc, in said State, wife of Herbert Q. Mariner of said Topsham, respectfully represents:

That her maiden name was Edith L. Lancaster; that she was lawfully married to Herbert Q. Mariner, in Boston, State of Massachusetts, on the sixth day of December, A.D. 1899, by Franklin D. Rideout, a Justice of the Peace in and for the County of Suffolk, in said State of Massachusetts; that thereafterwards they lived together as husband and wife in Brunswick in the County of Cumberland, and later in Topsham in the County of Sagadahoc from the time of their said marriage until the sixth day of December, A.D. 1909, that your libellant has always conducted herself toward her said husband as a faithful true and affectionate wife.

That said Herbert Q. Mariner, libellee, on the first day of June, A.D. 1908, and on divers other days and times between said first day of June and the filing of this libel, to wit: on June 17th, August 14th, 15th and 17th, September 25th, December 25th and 31st in the year 1908; and on January 4th, August 7th, 12th and 13th, September 15th, and December 6th in the year 1909, committed the crime of adultery with one Pansy B. Straw of Portland, said County of Cumberland; and on other days and time in said months of June, August and September at said Brunswick and Topsham, and in the month of December in said City of Portland in the year 1908; and in the months of August, September, October, November and December in said Brunswick and Topsham in the year 1909.

That there has been born to your libellant and said libellee two children, Inez G. Mariner now eight years of age, and Herbert Q. Mariner now three years of age; that said libellee is not a suitable person to have the care and custody of said children; that said libellee has departed to parts unknown and that his present residence is unknown to your libellant and cannot be ascertained by reasonable diligence, and that there is no collusion between your libellant and said Herbert Q. Mariner, libellee, to obtain a divorce.

Wherefore said libellant, Edith L. Mariner prays that a divorce may be decreed between her and her said husband, Herbert Q. Mariner, libellee, for the cause above set forth; that she may have the custody of her said minor children Inez G. Mariner and Herbert Q. Mariner, and that the Honourable Court may further decree to her reasonable and sufficient alimony for the care of her said children and for her support.

Dated February 10, 1910.

EDITH L. MARINER.

STATE OF MAINE.

CUMBERLAND, ss.

February 10, 1910.

Personally appeared, before me, Edith L. Mariner, who subscribed and made oath to the foregoing libel that the same is true.

JOSEPH H. ROUSSEAU,
Notary Public (Seal).

STATE OF MAINE.

SAGADAHOC, ss.—SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

In vacation February 11, A.D. 1910.

Upon the foregoing libel, Ordered, That the libellant give notice the said Herbert Q. Mariner to appear before the Justice of our Supreme Judicial Court, to be holden at Bath, within and for the County of Sagadahoc, on the first Tuesday of April, A.D. 1910, by publishing an attested copy of said libel, and this order thereon, three weeks successively in The Bath Daily Times, a newspaper printed in Bath in our County of Sagadahoc, the last publication to be twenty days at least prior to said first Tuesday of April that he may there and then in our said Court appear and show cause, if any he have, why the prayer of said libellant should not be granted.

HENRY C. PEABODY,
Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court.

A true copy of the Libel and Order of Court thereon.

Attest: SANFORD L. FOGG,
14.21.28. Clerk.

MAINE.

PERKINS' DIVORCE WAITED BY WIFE.

Obtained Decree in South Dakota which was not recognised here, and Present Suit "Is to please me," she says.

Rumour says she will marry Cattle King.

[Special Dispatch to the Boston Herald.]

Colorado Springs, 13th February 1910.—The wife of Robert F. Perkins, according to her friends, left the luxury of her Boston drawing room and came to Colorado, where, living in a cottage at the foot of Cheyenne mountain, she will quietly remain until the divorce court of Massachusetts releases her from the bonds of matrimony and paves the way for her marriage, it is said, to Bronson Rumsey, the rich cattle baron of Cody, Wyo.

Robert F. Perkins is the son of the late Charles E. Perkins, former president of the Burlington railroad.

The sheriff's office served summons on Mrs. Perkins yesterday in the suit begun by her husband in Middlesex county, Mass. It now developes she came here from Hot Springs, S.D., where she obtained a divorce last October, but the Massachusetts court do not recognise the decree, "and to please me," said Mrs. Perkins, "my husband is obtaining a divorce in Massachusetts."

"It's true, I know Mr. Rumsey," continued Mrs. Perkins, "and I am not surprised that our marriage is rumoured. All I can say is we are not married yet, and I do not care to talk about the matter."

Perkins is a rich banker of Boston. There are four little Perkinses, three of whom are in the East attending school. The fourth, a year-old baby, is with Mrs. Perkins.

(12.)

MASSACHUSETTS.

735, Exchange Building, Boston,
15th February 1910.

MY DEAR SIR,

I HAVE your letter of February 1st, in which you ask me to answer certain questions which are very far reaching. I will answer them as nearly as I can, without making an investigation that would occupy more time than I could readily give.

1. Your first question relates to the state of public opinion in my neighbourhood upon five points:

(a) As to whether the existing causes for divorce should be changed in any way, I would say that our statute has stood for many years, and I am aware of no feeling that it should be changed in that respect.

(b) As to whether or not the laws tend to cause a lack of respect for the marriage tie?—So far as I am able to judge from the absence of any serious agitation for a change in the law, from the silence of the press, and from the conversation of the people whom I meet, I do not think there is any general belief that the existing laws promote any lack of respect for the marriage tie. There are some people who are entirely opposed to divorce on any ground, but I think the general opinion is in favour of the law as it stands, and that would not be the case if it was felt that it weakened respect for the institution of marriage.

(c) I do not think there is any belief that our divorce law leads to hasty marriages.

(d) As to the advisability of publishing the details of divorce actions in the newspapers, I think the general feeling is that this should be done; that the publicity which attends a divorce trial has a tendency to keep people from seeking divorce for light reasons, and that it would lead to very evil results if divorces were granted after a secret hearing. This has been done in one or two prominent cases within a few years, but generally opinion has been strongly against it.

(e) The question as to the attitude of the community towards citizens who have obtained a so-called divorce in other States upon their return to their home State. I should answer briefly thus: Wherever a person goes out of the State in which he or she resides, and obtains a divorce in another State, the Supreme Court has held the divorce binding only in the State where it is granted. Consequently persons having obtained such a divorce in another State come back in a very questionable position, and are not received as persons of unquestioned status.

2. Your second question relates to the average cost of procuring a divorce. This depends so entirely on circumstances, whether the divorce is uncontested or contested, and on the eminence of the counsel employed, that no figures which I can give you would be enlightening. The ordinary uncontested divorce would perhaps cost from 50 dollars to 150 dollars.

I do not think it possible to say whether a divorce is more often "resorted to by the poor, the rich, or by persons of moderate means," but I should be inclined to think there is very little difference between the classes, and I know of no statistics. In certain rich classes in a few of our larger cities divorce has become rather a scandal, but I fancy that if the statistics were gathered, it would be found that persons of moderate means seek it as often as the rich. Really poor people, as a rule, are not found in the divorce courts.

3. Whether "the tendency to divorce is on the increase or decrease" is a question which it is difficult to answer. As the population increases the number of divorces undoubtedly increase, but whether the percentage within 10 years is greater or less I should find it hard to say. My impression is that on the whole divorce is more frequent than it was.

4. In answer to your fourth question the Superior Court in Massachusetts alone has jurisdiction to grant divorces. This is the tribunal in which our jury trials are had, except in a few cases, and corresponds perhaps as nearly as may be to your court sitting on circuit. No court which corresponds to your minor or county court has that jurisdiction.

5. The divorce decree with us becomes final automatically six months after it is entered, unless some stay has been granted by the court.

6. There is no public officer in our State who is authorised to bring divorce actions on behalf of the State or otherwise.

7. In answer to this question, it is impossible to say whether husband or wife is most frequently complainant.

8. Citizens of other States do not resort to our State "to bring actions for divorce."

9. I am inclined to believe that our divorce laws are wise, and that nothing is gained by preventing the separation of persons whose life together is unhappy.

10. Our courts may order divorce cases "to be heard privately," but the practice is very exceptional, and the court is not inclined to extend it. As I have already said, public opinion is against private hearings.

11. In answer to this question, some clergymen refuse to marry divorced persons, but there is no general rule.

Believing that this answers the questions you put.

Yours, &c.

MOORFIELD STOREY,
President,
Boston Bar Association
(Massachusetts).

J. Arthur Barratt, Esq.,
3, Temple Gardens,
London, England.

(13.)

MINNESOTA.

Saint Paul,
17th March 1910.

DEAR SIR,

ANSWERING yours of the 5th instant addressed to the President of the Bar Association of St. Paul, beg to say that I was formerly the President of the Minnesota State Bar Association, and assume that your letter was intended for the present president, who is Mr. James D. Shearer, of Minneapolis.

I have some interest in the subjects of your inquiry, and take this opportunity (notwithstanding you intended to communicate with my successor) to express to you my impressions with reference to the questions asked.

There is no active public opinion in Minnesota upon the question whether or not existing causes for divorce could be changed in any way, but I am inclined to think there is a considerable latent opinion to the effect that divorce should be less easily obtained.

I think that the existing laws do tend in some degree at least to create a want of respect for the marriage ties, but I do not think the condition of our laws lead to hasty marriages. There are hasty marriages, no doubt, but I think the cause is to be found elsewhere than in the divorce laws.

I think details of divorce actions should not be published in the newspapers. I think the facts of suit and its result should be published.

Persons divorced in States where so-called easy divorce is procured are not ostracised socially, though I think it fair to say that social standing is, as a rule, somewhat impaired.

It is difficult to state what is the average cost of procuring a divorce. To persons of moderate means in case of default I would say from 50 dollars to 100 dollars. I think there is no ground for saying that divorce is oftener resorted to by the poor than by the rich, or vice versâ.

Generally speaking, I think the tendency to divorce is somewhat—though not markedly—on the increase.

The district courts of this State, i.e., the courts of general jurisdiction, alone have jurisdiction of such cases.

The divorce decree when entered is final. Parties are disabled from marrying in this State for a period of six months after the decree.

No public officer in this State has the power to intervene in a divorce action.

I have no means of saying whether divorces are more frequently applied for by husbands or by wives.

Minnesota is not resorted to by non-residents for the purpose of obtaining divorces.

I am not certain that I have views which I can successfully defend on the subject of divorce, but am strongly inclined to think that persons divorced ought not to be permitted to re-marry.

In our courts divorce actions are heard publicly. Our courts sturdily refuse private hearings.

Clergymen, excepting Catholics, do not refuse to marry divorced persons.

I recommend that you write to Mr. Shearer, above referred to, for his views.

Honourable E. A. Jaggard, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of this State, of St. Paul, Minnesota, has, I think, given all the subjects to which you refer painstaking attention, and I am sure would be glad to write you his views.

Yours, &c.,
PIERCE BUTLER
(formerly President of Bar Association of State of Minnesota).

Mr. J. Arthur Barratt,
3, Temple Gardens, Temple,
London, England.

(14.)

MINNESOTA STATE BAR ASSOCIATION.

Austin, Minneapolis,
19th April 1910.

DEAR SIR,

YOUR communication directed to Mr. James D. Shearer, of Minneapolis, Minnesota, has been referred to me with a request that I answer your questions.

1. In regard to the state of public opinion:
   (a) As to whether the existing causes for divorces should be changed in any way, I answer that I think the causes for divorce are satisfactory.
   (b) Public opinion is to the effect that there is lack of respect for the marriage tie, but that grows out of the mode or manner in which the law is enforced rather than the law itself.
   (c) I do not think it leads to hasty marriages.
   (d) Public sentiment is in favour of the publication of divorce actions for the reasons it gives publicity as to who are divorced, on what ground, and I think such publicity serves as a deterrent.
   (e) In regard to the attitude of the community towards citizens who are divorced in the States where so-called "easy divorce" is procured, on their return to their home State, is one of a hostile nature, and the community frowns upon any such procedure.

2. The average cost of procuring a divorce of a person of moderate means is from 75 dollars to 300 dollars, and that of a poor person from 30 dollars to 50 dollars. Divorce is oftener resorted to by the rich or of moderate means.

3. Divorces are decidedly on the increase.

4. In our State the district courts have original jurisdiction to grant divorces, the minor or county courts have no jurisdiction, and the legislature is prohibited by the constitution from granting divorces.

5. The divorce decree is final, but the court has jurisdiction to modify the decree as to alimony or the custody of children.

6. There is no public officer in this State having authority to intervene in divorce actions on behalf of the State or otherwise to prevent collusion or fraud. The law is deficient in this respect. Divorces would not be so easily granted if the County Attorney, who is the law officer of his county, could intervene in divorce cases tried in his county to see that there was no collusion or fraud.

7. Where the parties are wealthy I think that the husband more frequently resorts to divorce action, but among the poor class the wife is more frequently the plaintiff. Intoxication and lack of support being the chief reasons for the wife resorting to a divorce action.

8. The plaintiff has to be a resident for one year in this State. Citizens of another State cannot resort to an action for divorce, except there is collusion or fraud.

9. In my judgment there ought to be a uniform law relating to divorce throughout the Union. Forty-five separate and sovereign States have supreme power over the subject of divorce. What may be the ground for a divorce in this State may not be a ground in some other State. Some of the States require a residence much shorter than others, thereby opening the door to fraud and collusion. The law as to residence should be uniform. Provision ought to be made for some officer to intervene in divorce actions to see that no collusion or fraud between the parties occur, and that the rights of the State are protected in this regard. Divorce parties should not re-marry until the expiration of one year. In this State we have a statute to the effect that the parties should not re-marry for six months, but it is not an unusual thing for the parties to get married the next day or two after the divorce is granted in some adjoining State. I think that our courts are more at fault than the laws. In some jurisdictions divorces are easily granted. The judges are slack in this regard.

10. The court has power to order divorce actions to be heard privately in court or before a referee. They are usually heard in private or before a referee instead of being heard in open court, as in my judgment they ought to be.

11. Generally speaking I think that all clergymen, except the priest of the Catholic Church and the Episcopalian, clergymen have no objections to marrying divorced persons. Occasionally some Protestant clergyman has scruples, but generally performs the marriage ceremony.

I have answered your questions as fully as the limited time will permit me. If I can be of any further service please advise me.

Yours, &c.,
LAFAYETTE FRENCH,
President,
S.B. Association.

J. Arthur Barratt, Esq.,
3, Temple Gardens, Temple,
London, England.

(15.)

MISSISSIPPI.

DEAR SIR,

27th April 1910.

IT gives me great pleasure to comply with your request of the 16th instant with reference to the divorce laws and general sentiment on the subject of divorce in our State. Regarding everything except the actual laws, my answers necessarily are general, and possibly in a few instances are slightly incorrect. I am enclosing the answers on a separate sheet.

Yours, &c.,
ALEXANDER AND ALEXANDER.

Mr. J. Arthur Barratt,
3, Temple Gardens,
London, England.

1.—(a) In my opinion there is no necessity for a change of the divorce laws of Mississippi.

(b) Our statutes on the subject of divorce are so stringent that there is a healthy respect in our State for the marriage tie among the white people.

(c) I do not think that our laws in any way have a tendency to bring about hasty marriages.

(d) It is the general opinion in our State, and the newspapers seem to follow it reasonably well, that the details of divorce suits should not be published in the newspapers. Very few, if any, of the divorces in our State are aired in this way.

(e) Among the white people of our State the social standing of divorced persons is greatly affected, and I believe the general opinion on this subject greatly deters divorces among the white people.

2.—(a) A person of moderate means can procure a divorce for 25 dollars, including attorney's fees and costs of court.

(b) There are lawyers in this city especially who take cases for poor persons, and especially negroes, for 10 dollars. Divorce is very often resorted to by the negroes, which compose about 1,000,000 people out of our 1,850,000 population. Among the lower class of white people there is a small proportion of divorces, but it is very rare in our State for the better class of people to apply for a divorce.

3. Numerically divorce is on the increase, but when taken in proportion to the increase in population and the number of marriages it is on the decrease.

4. The county chancery courts only.

5. There is no interlocutory divorce decree in our State, and when the divorce decree is entered it is final so far as that petition is concerned. Of course, we have the two classes of divorce, absolute and a mensâ et thoro. The latter can be by petition and the decree ripened into the former.

6. No.

7. Husband.

8. Our divorce laws are so stringent and our courts so strict regarding divorces, especially with reference to white people, that it very rarely, if ever, happens that citizens of other States come to our State to obtain a divorce. In fact, I cannot recall a single instance.

9. Presuming that you have before you our recent statutes touching upon divorce, I will not go into details regarding same. I believe that you will agree with me that if divorce is to be allowed at all that the laws could not be closer drawn than our own statutes draw them, and in our State I believe that any one of the grounds of divorce as set forth in our statutes, if unequivocally proven, should result in a decree of divorce. The only suggestion of a change that I would make would be in the matter of procedure. Among the negroes of our State, the county chancery courts are often very lax in requiring proof, and it is very easy for them to obtain divorces. This is frequently true with reference to the better class of white people. I think that the chancellor ought to be very careful to require strict proof in order to make the case before a decree is entered to come within the strict purview of the statute.

10. Yes. These actions are nearly always heard in private, especially when the parties to the suit are of any social standing. I think it is the general opinion that these secret hearings are better. While there are some objections to them and the notoriety attendant upon a public hearing might frequently deter applicants from taking the step, at the same time, if any one of the grounds outlined in our statute is proven, as I have stated before, I think the party would be entitled to a divorce. This seems to be the general impression. On the other hand, private hearings keep the details out of the newspapers, and for that reason divorces are seldom talked of and are uncommon. The negroes of our State are so constituted that they have no pride whatever, and I believe that negroes would much prefer a public hearing in order to obtain notoriety.

11. Many of the clergymen in our State refuse to marry divorced persons. However, there is no statute in our State prohibiting such a marriage.

Personally I would suggest that the persons of our State authorised by statute to marry persons should be greatly restricted, and required by statute to have in hand more strict proof regarding age, consent of parents, &c. You are doubtless aware that the further south people live the younger is the average age of the contracting parties. People in our section marry very young, many of them under 20. I think a restriction along this line would tend to lessen the divorce evil.

None of my remarks made above touch directly on the negro situation. The whole negro race is a great problem in itself, as you doubtless know. They have no regard for the sanctity of the home; a very small proportion of them are ever married; and nine-tenths or more of the divorce cases are filed by negro men after a short term of married life. This is necessarily so, and it is impossible to frame laws which will lessen this evil, because we are required under the constitution to give everybody equal protection of the laws, and no special statute could be passed with reference to them. Nearly all of the negroes (I am ashamed to say) are guilty of at least two of the grounds of divorce. The fact is that as late as 1864 none of the negroes in the State were ever married, and the fact also is that as a whole they are a shiftless uneducated class, and to a large extent criminally inclined, and absolutely irresponsible, and this makes the divorce evil among them alarmingly large. A greater evil, however, among the negroes is their not marrying at all.

CHARLTON A. ALEXANDER,
President of the Bar
Association of Jackson,
Mississippi.

(16.)

MISSOURI.

THE BAR ASSOCIATION OF SAINT LOUIS.

Missouri,
DEAR SIR, 22nd February 1910.

REPLYING to your letter of 1st February 1910 and the questions enclosed therewith, I would respectfully state:—

I.

(a) Public opinion in Missouri does not demand any change in the legal causes for divorce.

(b) I believe there is a general opinion that existing laws tend to a lack of respect for the marriage tie.

(c) That these laws do lead to hasty marriages.

(d) That publishing the details of divorces is inadvisable, and tends to create a disrespect for the marriage ties and increase the number of divorces.

(e) The attitude of the community is more or less hostile to divorced persons wherever the decree may have been obtained.

II.

The average cost to a person of moderate means for a divorce is about 100 dollars. To a poor person, about 40 dollars. Persons of moderate means more frequently resort to divorce.

III.

The tendency to divorce is on the increase.

IV.

Courts of general jurisdiction alone have jurisdiction to grant divorce. Minor and county courts have no such jurisdiction.

V.

The only decree entered in divorce cases under our practice is a final decree.

VI.

There is no public officer having authority to intervene in divorce actions on behalf of the State to prevent collusion or fraud, though the courts do at times appoint lawyers in particular cases.

VII.

In the large majority of the cases the wives are plaintiffs.

VIII.

Comparatively few citizens of other States resort to this State to bring action for divorce.

IX.

I am of the opinion that under existing social conditions divorces should be granted under circumstances where the conduct of either party is such as to render the condition of the other intolerable, and that a wide discretion should be given to the presiding judge in each case with express provision entitling an applicant absolutely to a decree upon clear proof of certain specific acts. I believe the laws of the State of Missouri as existing are entirely reasonable and meet the conditions.

X.

Under the laws of this State, divorces must be heard publicly, and the courts have no power to either refer them or provide for private hearings.

XI.

Generally speaking, clergymen do not refuse to marry divorced persons. However, priests of the Roman Catholic Church, ministers of the Episcopal Church, in some cases, and, in some instances, Jewish Rabbis do refuse to perform ceremony for such persons.

Trusting that I have fully answered your questions, I beg to remain,

Yours, &c.,
DANIEL G. TAYLOR (A.B.),
President.

J. Arthur Barratt, Esq.,
3, Temple Gardens, Temple,
London, England.

(17.)

NEVADA.

Reno, Nevada,
15th February 1910.

My dear Sir,

I received your letter of 1st February to-day.

First, to answer your questions :—

1.—(a) There is a pretty strong sentiment that the period of residence necessary to confer jurisdiction should be extended from six months, the present period, to one year.

(b), (c), (d). Public opinion is divided on these points, but as to (b) and (c), I think that religious convictions have more to do with the opinions of the individuals than the real facts in the case. As to (d), I think the opinion of the better class of people is that details should not be published.

(e) As Reno is at present the most popular so-called divorce centre, none of our citizens go elsewhere and return hence.

2.—(a) 300.00 dollars.
(b) 150.00 dollars.

I can discover no distinction in the frequency of divorce applications dependent upon their wealth or poverty.

3. Under the peculiar circumstances existing here, it is on the increase, but eliminating those circumstances, I think it is not increasing.

4. The only court having jurisdiction is the district court.

5. The decree is always final.

6. No. But the judges invariably cross-examine the parties and exercise considerable discretion.

7. The wife is usually the plaintiff.

8. I think not.

9. See below.

10. The courts have such power, and it is frequently exercised, although the majority of cases are tried in public. I know of no general sentiment, one way or the other, as to private hearing.

11. Clergymen of the Catholic and Episcopal Churches invariably do. Sometimes, but not often, clergymen of other denominations refuse.

Answering your 9th inquiry, you are doubtless aware that just at present Reno is the so-called "Refuge of Restless Hearts," as it has been named by a writer in one of the popular magazines, and the town and the divorce colony here are the constant subject of newspaper and music-hall jokes, and the town and the people of more or less note from other places, who are here ostensibly for the purpose of securing a divorce, are the constant subjects of Sunday newspaper stories.

Of course there is no doubt that many of the people who have come here, and who have secured divorces, and many of those who are here now, have come for the sole purpose of being relieved from the marriage relation. Their residence here has not been and is not bonâ fide, and these people are guilty of fraud upon our courts, and the decrees which they have obtained are worthless both here and in any other court in this country or in England, where the decree might afterwards be questioned. On the other hand, there is much to be said in defence of the conduct of persons who come from other States to secure an easy divorce in Nevada. As you know, in our most populous State, absolute divorce is granted on one ground only, and this is true of some of the other States; and in nearly all of them the conditions upon which an absolute decree may be obtained are more or less drastic. Besides, there are many times conditions which make it expedient from social, family, and other weighty considerations not to sue for and obtain a decree upon the statutory ground of adultery. Where that ground exists desertion, cruelty, or lack of support usually exist also, and the last-mentioned grounds are sufficient in this State upon which to secure an absolute divorce. So that in many cases where the statutory ground exists in, say, New York, the party aggrieved, out of respect for her children or her family, or other considerations, comes here, secures a residence, and a divorce follows, upon the ground of cruelty or desertion, no mention being made of the graver offence.

As I have intimated before, religious conviction has much to do with the attitude of individuals toward the subject of divorce. For my own part, and I believe my opinion reflects that of the majority of people with whom I have come in contact here and elsewhere, whose judgment is unaffected by religious scruples, I not only see no harm, but, on the contrary, I believe that much good results to society, and certainly to the individuals, by relieving a man and woman legally by absolute decree from a relation that has become intolerable and where the marriage has, in fact, ceased to exist. As I say, I think the State is not harmed, but is benefited by declaring by judicial decree a state of facts which already does, in fact, exist.

Believing I have answered your inquiries,

I am, &c.,
C. L. Harwood,
Counsellor-at-Law.

J. Arthur Barratt, Esq.,
3, Temple Gardens,
The Temple,
London, England.

(18.)

NEW JERSEY.

The Prudential Insurance Company of America, New Jersey.

Home Office, Newark, N.J.,
29th April 1910.

Dear Sir,

Your letter of April 16th addressed to the President of the Bar Association has been handed to me for reply. I cannot answer your questions as fully as you would desire, but comply with your request to the best of my ability.

The causes for absolute divorce in this State are (1) adultery, (2) desertion. For cruelty a divorce from bed and board may be obtained.

1. I do not think there is any public opinion looking toward a change in the existing causes for divorce. These have existed in the State for many years, and I have heard of no suggestion as to changing them. I do not think that they tend to a lack of respect for the marriage ties or that they lead to hasty marriages. As to the advisability of publishing details of divorce actions in newspapers. I think that this is a matter which should be regulated by due sense of propriety, but under our system of government there is no method by which the press can be restricted from publishing such evidence in divorce cases as it may desire. I am unable to reply at all to your inquiry (e), as I have no data whatever on which to base an opinion.

2. The average cost of procuring a divorce to a person of moderate means, I should say, would amount to about 200 dollars. A poor person may obtain an order assigning counsel and providing for the conduct of the suit without cost. I cannot say whether divorce is oftener resorted to by the poor, rich, or persons of moderate means, but if I hazarded an opinion I should say that those of moderate means most frequently resorted to a divorce court.

3. I do not think that the tendency to divorce has changed very materially in this State. It is not a State in which a divorce is easily obtained, and I think that such suits as are brought are brought in good faith.

4. The only court having jurisdiction to grant divorce in this State is the Court of Chancery. No minor court has such jurisdiction.

5. Under our present practice the divorce decree when first entered is an interlocutory decree to be followed by a final decree after six months.

6. No public officer has authority to intervene in any divorce action.

7. I am unable to state whether the husband or wife is most frequently the plaintiff in divorce actions.

8. I do not think that citizens of other States resort to this State for the purpose of bringing actions for divorce.

9. I do not think it necessary to state my personal views on divorce beyond suggesting that I think our Divorce Act at the present time needs no substantial changes. I believe that the grounds for divorce permitted in this State are proper, and that the procedure is dignified, and that no criticism has ever been made in connection with the matter.

10. In uncontested divorce cases the usual practice is to refer the matter to a Master in Chancery, who advises the Chancellor whether a decree of divorce should be made. These hearings are generally in private, but the testimony is reduced to writing and filed with the Master's report in the office of the clerk, where it is open to public inspection. Contested divorce cases are heard in open court. I know of no practice which permits a contested divorce case to be heard privately. I have known of some few cases in which the court has directed the testimony taken before the Master to be sealed so that it is not open to public inspection.

I trust that the above will answer your purpose, and am,

Yours, &c.,
EDWARD D. DUFFIELD,
President of the Bar Association of Newark,
New Jersey.

J. Arthur Barratt, Esq.,
3, Temple Gardens, Temple,
London, England.

(19.)

NORTH DAKOTA.

Wahpeton, North Dakota,
18th February 1910.

MY DEAR ARTHUR,

YOUR letter of the 12th instant, with enclosure, was forwarded to me here, and received to-day.

Answering your questions which you propound, I would state in answer to Question 1:—

(a) That public opinion in this State does not seem to call for a change in the existing causes for divorce.

(b) Existing laws do not seem to tend towards a lack of respect for the marriage tie.

(c) I have never heard it asserted that it tends to lead to hasty marriages.

(d) But very few advise the publishing of details of divorce actions.

(e) Communities generally here do not look with favour on citizens who go to South Dakota, where divorces are more easily secured than in our State, obtaining a divorce, and then return to this State.

In answer to Question 2:—

(a) The average cost to a person of moderate means is probably 200 dollars.

(b) To a poor person probably 50 dollars. In this State, at the present time, divorce is seldom resorted to by people of standing in the community, and not often by the rich, but more often by the poor and those of moderate means.

In answer to Question 3, I would say that the tendency here is on the decrease.

In answer to Question 4, I would state that the district courts, such as the court over which I preside, have exclusive original jurisdiction, but there is the right of appeal to the Supreme Court.

5. The divorce decree in this State, when first entered, is final.

6. There is no public officer in this State having the authority stated, but the judges of the district courts inquire very fully in regard to this class of cases, and applicants knowing that to be the fact, rarely begin an action, except in good faith.

7. Divorce actions prosecuted by the wife probably number twice as many as those begun by the husbands.

8. Citizens of other States do not resort to North Dakota to procure divorces, as a bonâ fide residence of one year is required, whereas numerous States, including South Dakota, require a residence of one-half, or less than half that time.

9. It would take some time for me to express fully my personal views in regard to divorces, but I have given it much thought, and especially during the last six years that I have been upon the Bench, and come to the conclusion that the difficulty lies not so much with our law with reference to the securing of a divorce, as it does with the fact that marriages are too hastily consummated. I have no particular fault to find with our divorce laws, but from the fact that my experience has taught me that the great majority of those suing for a divorce were married in haste, I would strongly advocate the throwing of more safeguards around those contemplating marriage.

10. Our courts have power to order divorce actions to be heard before a referee, and in private, but if the testimony is taken before a referee, it must be acted upon independently by the court ordering the reference. If I remember rightly I have referred three such cases during the time I have been upon the Bench; and these were all default matters where the plaintiff was very poor, and it would have been a hardship for her and her witnesses to have travelled the long distance to the county seat where court was held.

11. I understand that clergymen of the Episcopal Church and Catholic priests refuse to marry divorced persons.

The majority of cases that have come under my personal observation have been prosecuted by women whose husbands had deserted them or treated them with such cruelty that they had been, or could be, prosecuted criminally; and in many cases the action for divorce is not brought with the idea of re-marrying, but so that the wife may be protected in the care and custody of minor children, and not be interfered with by a drunken and dissolute husband. There seems to be an impression in some localities that a husband or wife can apply for a divorce, and that if no appearance is made by the defendant, a decree will be granted as a matter of course, but that is not true, as I have personally refused to grant decrees in a number of cases, even though there was no defence whatever. And by following up the matter, I am quite certain that I have never granted a divorce to anyone who came to North Dakota for that purpose. And I am quite positive in regard to this matter, because of the fact that after I grant a decree at one term of court, I make inquiry at the next term in that county, which is about six months subsequent, in reference to the whereabouts of the parties to whom a divorce was granted, and in every instance I have found that they were still residing in the neighbourhood.

I was very glad indeed to hear from you, as it brought back to me our youthful days on 46th Street in New York. My wife and I visited father and mother last April, and found them both hale and hearty, considering their age.

With kindest regards, I am,

Yours, &c.,
FRANK P. ALLEN
(District Judge, Fourth Judicial District, North Dakota).

Mr. J. Arthur Barratt,
Temple Gardens,
Temple, London.

(20.)

OHIO.

DIVORCE.

1. What is the state of public opinion in your neighbourhood:—

(a) As to whether the existing causes for divorce should be changed in any way. See letter.

(b) As to the existing laws tending or not to lack of respect for the marriage tie. See letter.

(c) As to its tendency to lead to hasty marriages. See letter.

(d) As to the advisability of publishing details of divorce actions in the newspapers?—This is a matter of good taste. Our newspapers seem to be giving less attention to such cases than formerly.

(e) As to the attitude of the community towards citizens who are divorced in the States where so-called "easy divorce" is procured, on their return to your home State?—The cases referred to are so rare that there is no general attitude. Divorces are easily obtained here.

2. What should you say is the average cost of procuring a divorce—

(a) To a person of moderate means.

(b) To poor persons.

(a) 50 dollars.

(b) 30 dollars.

Is divorce oftener resorted to by the poor, the rich, or persons of moderate means?—By the poor, because there are more of them.

3. Is the tendency to divorce or separation on the increase or decrease?—An increase compared with 20 years ago, but no increase now compared with recent years.

4. What courts have jurisdiction to grant divorce? Have your minor or county courts such jurisdiction?—Courts of Common Pleas, which court in this county is composed of eleven judges. The Court of Insolvency, in this county, also has jurisdiction, but no cases are brought in it.

5. Is the divorce decree, when first entered, a final decree, or is it simply interlocutory, to be followed by a final decree after a certain period of time?—A final decree.

6. Is there any public officer in your State having authority to intervene in divorce actions on behalf of the State, or otherwise, to prevent collusion or fraud?—No.

7. Is the husband or the wife more frequently the plaintiff in divorce actions?—The wife, but I think that the suit is often brought by her through arrangement.

8. Has the fact (if so) that citizens of other States frequently resort to your State to bring actions for divorce, the effect of lessening the respect in your State for the marriage tie?—This is not frequent enough to have any marked effect. A bonâ fide residence of one year is required in this State.

9. State your views on divorce generally, including any suggestion for reform in your divorce laws?—See letter.

10. Have your courts power to order divorce actions to be heard privately in court or before a referee, and, if so, are such actions more commonly heard in private or before a referee or in open court?—Almost always in open court. There is power to refer to a referee, but it is rarely done.

11. Do clergymen refuse to marry divorced persons?—The Roman Catholic and most all of the Protestant Episcopal clergy refuse. The great majority of the others do not refuse, but do not like to marry divorced persons.

(In all the above questions, suits for nullity or separation are to be included under the name "divorce.")

Yours, &c.,
JAMES LAWRENCE,
President,
Bar Association of Cleveland, Ohio.

OHIO.

Cleveland, Ohio,
15th March 1910.

DEAR SIR,

IN reply to your letter of 5th March, I add the following to the answers written after the questions submitted and herewith returned.

It is not my own view, but I believe it is the view of a majority of the people in this city that, where husband and wife cannot live in some degree of harmony, they are better separated, and, if separated, that an absolute divorce is better both for them and the public. The consequence of this feeling is, in my opinion, a loose interpretation by the courts of the statutes upon the subject, and the frequent granting of divorces on insufficient evidence. For the most part suits are uncontested, and I believe that practically anyone who wishes for a divorce can obtain it. It appears to me, however, that this situation has not as yet produced a lack of respect for marriage or tended, in any marked degree, to hasty marriages, although I confess that the opposite of this would naturally be expected. The only explanation of the seeming paradox must be found in the deep seated regard for the family relation and the feeling against immoral conduct, which still exist amongst the great mass of the American people, notwithstanding some flagrant instances to the contrary which occasionally occur, and which, according to our custom, usually receive the most sensational publicity. After all, divorces are not relatively so frequent as would seem, because the statistics are based on the number of divorces granted compared with the number of marriage licenses, whereas in a rapidly growing city a large proportion of marriages occurred elsewhere. In my personal association with people I meet very few persons who have been divorced, although I do not avoid such persons.

In my judgment the cause of the frequent divorces here is the feeling that the individual has the right to happiness if he can find it, and if a marriage is a failure for him, he has a right to have it dissolved. A considerable number of divorces also occur amongst the more recent immigrants, generally because the woman learns that she does not have to stand ill-treatment here, and sometimes because the wife is unwilling to leave the old country to follow her husband here I fear that the idea of marriage as a social institution has lost ground, and the obligation to society and the common interest is too often disregarded.

The statutes of Ohio permit divorces on the grounds of wilful absence for three years, adultery, extreme cruelty, habitual drunkenness for three years, any gross neglect of duty, and a few other grounds which need not be considered. It is the "gross neglect of duty" which makes divorces so easy, especially where there are eleven judges having power to grant them. Inevitably some of these can find some "gross neglect," and divorces are occasionally granted for the most trifling reasons. This ground of divorce ought certainly to be abolished, but then I suppose the easy going judge would seize upon "extreme cruelty" as a substitute. The fact that the statute is not amended, and the fact of its exceedingly liberal interpretation indicate, however, that the prevailing public sentiment does not wish for a change.

Yours, &c.
JAMES LAWRENCE,
President of the Cleveland Bar
Association.

J. Arthur Barratt, Esq.,
3, Temple Gardens, Temple,
London, England.

(21.)

PENNSYLVANIA.

DIVORCE.

Philadelphia,
14th February 1910.

1.—(a) I do not think that there is any general feeling that existing causes for divorce should be changed. In a great majority of the States (upwards of three-fourths) the causes are practically the same. (See Report of Divorce Congress of 1906.)

(b) Existing laws do tend to promote a lack of respect for the marriage tie. The statistics for the last forty years, prepared under the direction of the United States Census Bureau, show a constantly accelerating increase in the number of divorces as compared with marriages, there being now about one to twelve.

(c) I would not say that divorce laws tend to promote hasty marriages. These arise more by reason of lax marriage laws existing in some of the States, especially with regard to the requirements of license.

(d) It is not desirable to publish details of divorce actions in newspapers, of course, but that risk must be taken in order to secure the rights of the public, which can only be obtained by open hearings in the presence of the court, and not of any delegated representative of it.

(e) The attitude of the community towards divorced persons is gradually changing. Not long ago social ostracism was the penalty, but gradually tolerance has been extended, until now the guilty party in suits for adultery is not infrequently received in society eminently respectable, and this applies to those persons who have become divorced in foreign jurisdictions and have returned thereafter to their own State,

2. The average cost of procuring a divorce to a poor person or to a person of ordinary means is the same. Where service can be obtained in this jurisdiction it would not exceed 100 dollars in an uncontested case. In contested cases, of course, the amount depends very much upon the circumstances of each case. Divorce is more often resorted to by persons of moderate means than by the rich or the poor, if I may hazard a generalisation without any statistics to base it upon.

3. The tendency to divorce in Pennsylvania is markedly on the increase; at least, such is the case in the principal city of Philadelphia.

4. In Pennsylvania the Courts of Common Pleas have jurisdiction to grant divorce. They are the courts of first instance above the grade of magistrate's courts, the latter having jurisdiction only in cases where the amount of controversy does not exceed 100 dollars.

5. In Pennsylvania the divorce decree first entered is a final decree, with a right of appeal to the Supreme Court.

In some States an interlocutory decree is first entered; a final decree after a certain period of time.

6. There is no public officer in our State having authority to intervene in divorce actions on behalf of the State, or otherwise to prevent collusion or fraud.

7. The statistics show that in 66 per cent. or thereabouts of divorce cases in the whole of the United States the wife is the plaintiff.

8. To this question I should say, in a general way, yes.

9. My personal views on divorce are, that so long as the temper of the community requires absolute divorce, the various provisions embodied in the uniform statute should be made a part of the law, in order to secure the community from imposition and fraud and remove the temptation for divorce on trifling causes. Unless the tide of divorce is checked, a social revolution is impending. In my apprehension the evils connected with an abolition of all divorce laws permitting re-marriage are far less than those attendant upon the present system.

10. Our courts have the right to hear cases privately, excepting where they are contested, when they must go through a jury trial as in other cases. The common practice is to refer to a Master, who takes the testimony privately and reports to the court. Difference of opinion exists on this subject. Those favouring divorce would prefer private hearings. Those opposed favour public hearings.

11. All Catholic clergymen and some Episcopalians and others refuse to marry divorced persons, but for the most part there is no difficulty in obtaining a minister to officiate in such cases.

I am, &c.,
WALTER GEO. SMITH,
Chairman of Resolutions Committee of the United States National Congress on Uniform Divorce Laws.

Note.—In the answer to the questions above given, suits for nullity and separation are expressly not included under the name of divorce, as the views that I would express on those subjects are very different, and cannot be included in the same reasoning as applies to suits for absolute divorce strictly so-called.—W. G. S.

(22.)

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Sioux Falls, South Dakota,
DEAR SIR, 16th February 1910.

I HAVE received your letter of February 1st, 1910, enclosing certain questions in regard to the subject of divorce which you wish me to answer as soon as possible. Such answers as I shall give are, of course, not based upon any particular study of the question involved, but are based upon such information as my experience has brought to my attention. My answers also will relate only to the conditions in South Dakota.

1.—(a) There is no particular demand by the people of South Dakota for a change in the existing causes for divorce.

(b) I do not think the existing laws have any tendency one way or the other to produce a lack of respect for the marriage tie. (c) I do not think the existing causes for divorce are ever thought of when marriage is contemplated. (d) I see no good reason for publishing the details of divorce actions; on the contrary, I believe such publication to be harmful. (e) There are no such persons in this State.

2.—(a) From 50 dollars to 150 dollars. (b) From 25 dollars to 50 dollars. This does not include court costs, which differ as between default cases and those which are contested. The average court costs would be from 20 dollars to 40 dollars. Among the divorce cases which are denominated foreign, being where persons come to this State from other States to seek a divorce, rich persons are greatly in the majority. Among bonâ fide residents those of moderate means would seem to be in the majority. I will say that since the laws of South Dakota were changed, so as to require a residence in good faith of one year before a person could commence an action for divorce, what are called foreign divorces have ceased altogether.

3. Among the average citizens of this State I do not think there is any increase in the tendency to obtain divorces.

4. The Circuit Court for each county is the court of original general jurisdiction in this State and, subject to the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the State, is the only court in which a divorce action may be commenced.

5. A divorce decree in this State is final as soon as made.

6. There is no public officer in this State having authority to intervene in divorce actions on behalf of the State or otherwise.

7. The wife is more frequently the plaintiff in divorce actions than the husband.

8. During the time that citizens of other States were resorting to this State for the purpose of bringing actions for divorce, I think such practice had a great tendency to lessen the respect for the marriage tie in the particular locality where the foreign residents lived.

9. The causes for divorce in this State are adultery, extreme cruelty, wilful desertion, wilful neglect, habitual intemperance, conviction for felony. Excepting those persons of religious denominations who think there should be no ground for divorce except that of adultery, most people approve of divorces for the above reasons, basing their belief upon the fact that mankind ought to be taken as it is and not as it ought to be, and that a reasonable liberality in granting divorce is productive of more happiness than otherwise. The great question in this country is the obtaining by appropriate legislation of uniformity in causes for divorce and in divorce procedure. As the laws now stand, each State of the United States regulates the divorce question to suit itself, and it thus results that parties may be married in one State and living in adultery in another, all depending upon whether a particular State shall recognise as valid a divorce obtained in a sister State.

10. The divorce cases are heard in open court. Private hearings are not approved of.

11. Clergymen of the Catholic and Episcopalian Churches do not marry divorced persons if they are aware of the fact that either one of the parties have been divorced.

I submit the above as a hurried response to your inquiry.

Yours, &c.,
JOHN E. CARLAND
(United States District Judge for South Dakota).

J. Arthur Barratt, Esq.,
London, England.

(23.)

TENNESSEE.

Knoxville,
DEAR SIR, 23rd May 1910.

IN reply to your letter of several days ago, enclosing a list of questions touching divorce law and practice in the State of Tennessee, we respectfully reply as follows:—

1.—(a) There is no general feeling or movement in our State looking to the changing of divorce laws therein.

(b) We do not think the existing laws on divorce in our State tend to a lack of respect for the marriage tie, although the ease with which these laws are applied by certain courts may possibly have that effect.

(c) The laws of our State on divorce are not so lax as to tend to lead to hasty marriage; undoubtedly many hasty marriages are entered into, but these are probably not affected in our State by any laxity of divorce laws as they are written on the statute books.

(d) Sentiment is divided as to the advisability of publishing details of divorce actions in the newspapers; perhaps the better sentiment is against the publishing of unpleasant details.

(e) The attitude of citizens in this State toward those who are divorced in those states where "easy divorce" is procured is, generally speaking, that of condemnation. Generally speaking, these divorcees are not admitted to best circles, and are rather looked down upon.

2.—(a) Perhaps a fair average of the cost of procuring a divorce to a person of moderate means would be $250.00.

(b) A poor person may procure a divorce at various costs from $25.00 to $100.00.

By a person of moderate means we mean those persons worth from, say, $5,000 to $15,000.

Divorce is oftener resorted to by the rich, or by the very poor, much more seldom by persons in moderate circumstances, or what we call the middle classes.

3. The tendency to divorce in our State is possibly slightly on the increase, though not materially so.

4. The courts having jurisdiction to grant divorces in our State are the chancery courts and the circuit courts; our minor, or county courts, have no such jurisdiction.

5. Ordinarily the divorce decree when first entered is final. We have in our State what is known as divorce "a mensâ et thoro," and also what is known as absolute divorce. The court may enter either of these decrees, but the decree for absolute divorce is entered 10 times, where the other decree is entered once.

6. The judge trying a divorce suit is supposed to represent the State, and to prevent collusion and fraud in the procurement of divorce.

7. Wives are more frequently plaintiffs in divorce actions in this State.

8. Citizens of other States do not resort to this State to bring action for divorce, as our laws are, perhaps, more stringent than those of most of the States in the Union.

9. We do not care to make any suggestions for the betterment of divorce laws, except we believe that there ought to be a universal divorce law throughout the United States, so as to make it impossible for citizens of one State to resort fraudulently, and with collusion, to the courts of another State to procure "easy divorce."

10. Our courts have the power to order divorce actions to be heard privately, and this is very frequently done, and where there are unpleasant details this practice is generally approved of. It is not, however, by any means universally followed.

11. Clergymen do not generally refuse to marry divorced persons, but this rule also has exceptions. We do not believe the Episcopal Church permits its clergymen to marry divorced persons.

12. We do not think there is any considerable breach of the law in the respect you mention in this question that is caused by the expense of divorce proceeding.

We have, of course, answered your questions only superficially, and without citing instances and cases, but we presume you would prefer this direct method of answer to a more extended one.

Hoping the information given may be of value to you, we remain,

Yours truly,
LUCKY, FOWLER, ANDREWS, AND TATE,
By HUGH M. TATE.

Mr. J. Arthur Barratt,
3, Temple Gardens, Temple,
London, England.

(24.)

TEXAS.

Dallas, Texas,
16th February 1910.

MY DEAR SIR,

I AM in receipt of your letter of 1st February, directed to the President of the Dallas Bar Association. As the time available for a reply is so limited, I will be unable to give some information which could be secured if I had more time. However, I will cover as fully as I can the subjects outlined in your communication.

1. As to the state of public opinion in this community, I will state:—

(a) The general opinion among more enlightened people is that our divorce laws are two liberal in the manner in which they are enforced. However, I cannot say that there is a public sentiment demanding any change in the existing causes for divorce. Texas limits the causes to four: cruelty, adultery, abandonment and conviction for crime.

(b) While our divorce laws are not considered as lax, yet there is no doubt that the ease with which divorces can be secured under these laws tends to a lack of respect for the marriage tie.

(c) The general impression is that the ease of divorce under existing laws does lead to hasty marriages. Yet my personal opinion is that the law has very little effect in producing hasty marriages, but they are due mostly to other causes, such as want of parental control, disregard of religious obligations, &c.

(d) Enlightened sentiment is against the publishing of details of divorce actions in the newspapers. Our leading papers, I am glad to say, refuse to publish these details. However, there is a public demand for the sensational, and that demand is pandered to by our yellow journals.

(e) Candour compels me to state that the general attitude of the community toward those who have secured easy divorces in other States is more favourable to the divorced parties than it should be. While the more enlightened deprecate these things, yet there is a general lax sentiment which does not look with disfavour upon such cases.

2. As to the average cost of procuring a divorce, I would say 50 dollars to 100 dollars for persons of moderate means and 20 dollars to 30 dollars for poor persons. These figures are based upon uncontested cases; in case of a real contest, which seldom occurs, of course the cost is much higher. Our divorce courts are resorted to by people of all classes, although by far the largest proportion is among the poor and ignorant classes, especially among the negroes. As a rule, divorces among well-to-do people are not so common in Texas as in most of our States.

3. The tendency to divorce seems to be on the increase in this State.

4. The courts having jurisdiction of divorce matters are our district courts, the courts of original general jurisdiction for the trial of causes at law and in equity. Our county and inferior courts do not have such jurisdiction.

5. The divorce decree when entered is a final decree, and not merely interlocutory, in this State.

6. There is no public officer charged with the duty of representing the State to prevent collusion or fraud. However, in all cases in which the defendant is cited by publication and not personally, some praticising attorney of the Bar is appointed by the court to represent the defendant so constructively served with summons. This duty, however, is usually discharged in a perfunctory way, and does not often serve the purpose intended, that is, to protect against fraud or collusion.

7. The clerk of our district courts tells me that the respective numbers of men and women applying for divorce has been practically the same for a number of years past.

8. As the causes for divorce in this State are very limited as compared to other States, citizens of other States do not resort to Texas to bring actions for divorce. To a limited extent our citizens have so used the divorce courts of other States.

9. I would not attempt, with the time at hand, to answer specifically this inquiry.

10. Divorce cases are with us heard by the court publicly, like any other causes. We have not the practice of private hearings nor of hearings before a referee.

11. Some clergymen refuse to marry divorced persons, but, as a rule, no questions are asked on this line. If the parties have a license to wed, issued by the proper authority, that is usually taken as conclusive. However, a few clergymen make further inquiries and refuse to perform such ceremonies unless they are fully satisfied.

With apologies for necessarily having to cover these matters in a hurried way, I remain,

Yours, &c.

THOS. T. HOLLOWAY,
President,
Dallas Bar Association.

J. Arthur Barratt, Esq.,
3, Temple Gardens, Temple,
London, England.

(25.)

UTAH.

Salt Lake City, Utah,
18th March 1910.

DEAR SIR,

YOURS of 5th March has been handed to me for reply. Taking up your questions in order:

I do not know that there is any special public opinion in my neighbourhood. My personal opinion is that there is not so much objection to present existing causes of divorce as to the execution of the law by the courts.

Divorces are too easily obtained. It is hard to say how the matter could be cured. Undoubtedly the great majority of people who apply for divorces ought to be separated, but if divorces were more difficult to obtain there would be less hasty marriages and people would try harder to get along together if they knew they could not be separated.

Details, of course, ought not to be published in the newspapers, but the more objectionable they are for general reading, the more the newspapers are inclined to publish them.

I do not know of anyone having left Utah to procure an easy divorce.

I think all serious-minded people are inclined to look on people who have been divorced with suspicion until they know they are not at fault.

The "costs" in our court for a divorce where there is no contest are 10 dollars, unless there is a referee appointed. The court allows him 5 dollars. Attorney's fees are anywhere from 30 dollars up.

More poor people than rich get divorces. There are more poor people than rich, and then the conditions of life are harder.

It looks to me as though more people are being divorced than in the years past; however, I do not know what statistics show.

Our State district courts have jurisdiction. No minor courts have.

The first decree is interlocutory; is made final after six months.

There is no officer authorised to intervene in the case. The judge is supposed to see there is no collusion.

I would say, without having the figures, quite two-thirds of divorces are obtained by women.

I do not know of citizens of other States coming to ours for purpose of getting divorces.

In reply to your ninth question: I think our divorce laws ought to be uniform, and the causes ought to be the same in all States.

I am not sure, if I had the power, I would eliminate any cause now on our statute, but I would, if possible, make every judge be very certain that there was good cause before he granted a divorce.

It is a very sad thing that there are so many people that cannot live together, but I am persuaded that it would be quite as bad if they were compelled to live together if they cannot get along.

Our courts have power to order private hearings, but our judges here have discontinued the practice.

I never knew of any clergyman here excepting Catholic and Episcopal refusing to marry divorced persons.

CHARLES BALDWIN,
President,
Utah Bar Association.

J. Arthur Barratt, Esq.,
3, Temple Gardens, Temple,
London, England.

(26.)

VIRGINIA.

Richmond, Virginia,
5th March 1910.

DEAR SIR,

I HAVE recently been elected President of the Bar Association of the City of Richmond, and your letter of February 1st, addressed to the President of the Bar Association of Richmond, has been handed me with the request that I reply to it.

We have, in Virginia, divorce a vinculo, and divorce from bed and board. The grounds for the first are the usual common law grounds, sentence to the penitentiary, conviction of an infamous offence prior to marriage without the knowledge of the other, and desertion and abandonment for three years.

The grounds for divorce a mensa are cruelty, reasonable apprehension of bodily hurt, abandonment or desertion.

I give below answers to your questions, in the order in which they are asked, as accurately as it is possible for me to do so.

1.—(a) Our Legislature, which is now in session, has recently shown its opposition to changing the existent causes of divorce so as to broaden their scope. The expression of opinion was strongly against any law that would make divorces easier, or give greater liberty to the guilty party.

(b) In my experience as a practitioner for some 30 years, I have found a great change in the attitude of the public towards divorce. When I first grew up, a divorced person in Virginia was looked upon as disgraced. This opinion followed the innocent party as well as the guilty one. Such persons in society were more or less ostracised. There has been a great change in this respect, however, and I regret to say that it is not unusual to have divorced persons mixing in the best circles, irrespective of their being the plaintiff or defendant. Divorces have been too often gotten simply because the persons could not get along together.

(c) Loose divorce laws are thought to lead to hasty marriage. If the parties know that they cannot be separated on slight grounds they are much more apt to give the question of marriage serious consideration.

(d) The publication of the details of divorce actions in a newspaper can do no possible good, and often lead to harm.

(e) We have not had a great number of cases in which the parties have left the State and gone to some State where divorce can be procured more easily. In cases in which this has occurred, I do not see that the parties are treated any differently on their return from those who have obtained divorces in Virginia.

2. It is impossible to state what is the average cost of procuring a divorce. I have no doubt that many divorces are obtained for poor people at a cost of less than 50 dollars. Our minimum fee for such a suit, where there is any contest, is 50 dollars, and the cost of depositions in a contested suit would vary so largely that it is impossible to say what it would be. If there is no contest in a case, a person of moderate means should obtain a divorce for from 100 dollars to 150 dollars.

Naturally there are more cases of divorce among the poor than among the rich or persons of moderate means. This is due to the fact that we have more poor persons than persons of moderate means or rich in our community. There are more divorces with the coloured people than the white people. They, as a rule, are among the poorer classes in the community.

3. I think the tendency to divorce has been on the increase in Virginia for the past thirty years. There seems at present to be a reaction against this tendency.

4. Divorces are granted in Virginia by our Circuit or Corporation Courts. We have no minor or county courts.

5. The divorce decree as entered under our law is final. In cases of divorce for abandonment or desertion, a decree a mensa, after three years, can be converted into a decree a vinculo upon the motion of the innocent party.

6. There is no public officer in Virginia with the authority to intervene in divorce actions on behalf of the State, or otherwise, to prevent collusion or fraud.

7. In my opinion, the wife is more frequently than the husband the plaintiff in a divorce action.

8. The divorce laws of Virginia are not broad enough to induce persons from other States to come to Virginia for the purpose of seeking a divorce.

9. I have always been prejudiced against divorces; I believe that if people realise that they have to live together, and that they cannot get a divorce except upon scriptural ground, they will manage to get along in the majority of instances. I realise that there are cases in which it is absolutely necessary for persons to separate. In such cases, I think it is much better for them to separate without having the right to re-marry. Our divorce a mensa covers such cases. I do not think that there should be any radical change in our present divorce laws.

10. The evidence in divorce cases is by depositions. These depositions are taken before a Commissioner in Chancery. They are generally private. It is in the discretion of the Commissioner to admit or exclude parties from the hearing. As a rule, the only persons present are those interested and the witness. I consider the private hearing infinitely preferable to a public hearing. The latter is apt to attract the morbidly curious, and to lead to newspaper publication.

11. Clergymen in the Episcopal Church are forbidden to marry divorced persons except the innocent persons in cases of divorce for adultery. The minister officiating is required, under the Canons of the Church, to get the permission of the Bishop, who is required to have the Chancellor of the Diocese examine the records of the divorce suit and satisfy him that the party has a right to re-marry. The Roman Catholic Church is even more stringent. In other Churches, so far as I am informed, it is within the discretion of the minister.

I will be pleased to give you any further information that may be within my power.

I am, &c.,
B. RAND WELLFORD,
President of Bar Association of Richmond, Virginia.

J. Arthur Barratt, Esq.,
3, Temple Gardens,
London, England.

Richmond, Virginia,
25th March 1910.

DEAR SIR,

YOUR favour of March 16th was received by me this morning.

It will give me pleasure to answer the question asked by you in reference to parties living apart without getting a divorce because of the expense of divorce proceedings.

I do not think that there are many cases of this sort with us. As I stated in my previous letter, we have cases of people living apart, because the innocent party does not wish to institute divorce proceedings.

The court fees in divorce cases, where there is no contest, are very small, and we have a class of divorce lawyers who take such cases at almost any price.

Yours, &c.,
B. RAND WELLFORD,
President of Bar Association of Richmond, Virginia.

J. Arthur Barratt, Esq.,
3, Temple Gardens,
Temple, London,
England.

(27.)

STATE OF WASHINGTON.

1. I believe the trend of public opinion in this community to be—
   (a) Towards restricting legally recognised grounds for divorce.
   (b) That existing laws tend to disrespect for the marriage tie.
   (c) The tendency is to lead to hasty marriages.
   (d) That it is inadvisable that divorce actions be published in the newspapers.
   (e) Our own divorce laws are so easy that our citizens, as a rule, patronise the home market.
2. The average cost of procuring a divorce:—
   (a) One hundred dollars.
   (b) Fifty dollars.

I cannot say that divorce is more often resorted to by the rich than by the poor, except as there are more of the poor than of the rich.

3. The tendency seems to be on the increase.

4. Jurisdiction to grant divorces is confined here to the court of first resort, entitled the Superior Court of the State of Washington for King County. It is a court of general jurisdiction.

5. The divorce decree is final when entered, but by statute re-marriage is forbidden within six months following the entry of decree.

6. Yes, the public prosecutor, entitled prosecuting attorney, of each county is required to intervene in default divorce cases. There is no public officer having authority to intervene on behalf of the State in other than divorce cases in which the defendant suffers default.

7. I cannot answer.

8. Citizens of other States are not permitted to resort to our State to bring actions for divorce. Our statute requires a bonâ fide residence of one year on the part of the plaintiff.

10. Our courts have the power to hear divorce actions privately in court, or to have them tried privately before a referee, but it is seldom done.

11. No.

Nullity decrees are granted only when the plaintiff is proven incapable of consenting to the marriage contract for want of legal age or sufficient understanding, or where such consent shall have been obtained by force or fraud.

HAROLD PRESTON,
President of Seattle Bar Association.

(28.)

WISCONSIN.

MILWAUKEE BAR ASSOCIATION.

Milwaukee,
23rd March 1910.

MY DEAR SIR,

I HAVE your communication of March 5th relating to divorce before me, and I will endeavour to answer your questions as best I can:—

(1) What is the state of public opinion in your neighbourhood on each of the specific questions you put. In my opinion public opinion is somewhat divided. The better opinion, however, in which I share, is in favour of the answers given below:—

(a) As to whether the existing causes for divorce should be changed in any way?—In my opinion the existing causes for divorce do not require any modification.

(b) As to the existing laws tending or not to lack of respect for the marriage tie?—In my opinion the present laws do not have a tendency one way or the other.

(c) As to its tendency to lead to hasty marriages?—The existing divorce laws have no tendency to lead to hasty marriages, but hasty marriages seem to strain those laws at times.

(d) As to the advisability of publishing details of divorce actions in the newspapers?—In my opinion it is detrimental to public morals and welfare to have details of divorce actions published in the newspapers.

(e) As to the attitude of the community towards citizens who are divorced in the States where so-called "easy divorces" are procured on their return to the home State?—I think all such divorces are looked upon with disfavour.

(2) The average cost of procuring a divorce depends largely upon the lawyer employed to procure it. The court costs are nominal. There are a large number of lawyers of no particular standing who seek divorce causes and carry them through for quite moderate charges, while other lawyers of standing either keep out of the practice altogether or, when occasionally employed, charge for their services sums which relatively are large. In my opinion divorce is much oftener resorted to by the poor than by the rich, or by persons of moderate means. The causes of the differences which usually lead up to divorce are "failure to support" on the part of the husband, or "desertion" by him to evade the responsibility of the relation.

(3) The tendency to divorce or separation has been largely on the increase for several years past.

(4) Our circuit courts are courts of original general jurisdiction, and have exclusive jurisdiction to grant divorces. The minor or county courts have no such jurisdiction.

(5) The divorce decree when first entered is an interlocutory judgment which fully determines the rights of the parties, provides for the care, custody and maintenance of the children, fixes the amount of alimony, and the amount of suit money and attorneys' fees.

At the expiration of one year from the entry or from the last modification or revision of such interlocutory judgment, the final judgment may be entered unless such interlocutory judgment shall be reversed or so modified on appeal as to prevent the entry of such final judgment, or unless the court, for sufficient cause, upon its own motion or upon the application of a party to the action, shall otherwise order before the expiration of such period.

(6) I enclose you a recent Act of our legislature providing for a public officer with authority to intervene in divorce actions on behalf of the State.

(7) I think the wife is more frequently the plaintiff in a divorce action than is the husband, because the most frequent ground claimed for divorce is desertion or failure to support.

(8) Citizens of other States very rarely resort to this State to bring actions for divorce because the statute provides:—"No divorce shall be granted unless "the plaintiff shall have resided within this State for "one year immediately preceding the time of the "commencement of this action, except for adultery "alleged to have been committed while the plaintiff "was a resident of this State; or unless the marriage "was solemnised in this State, and the plaintiff shall "have resided therein from the time of such marriage "to the time of the commencement of the action; or "unless the action be brought by the wife and the "husband shall have resided in this State for one year "next preceding the commencement thereof."

(9) I have no suggestions to make as to the reform of any of the divorce laws of this State. Personally my view on divorce generally is this: That it is better to provide a legal way for separation or divorce than to compel persons to continue to live together under the marital tie when the causes for divorce now provided in our statute exist.

(10) Our rule of court is as follows: "No judgment "of divorce shall be granted except upon testimony "taken in open court, unless upon reference by order of "the court for cause shown." The common practice is to deny a reference except for very particular reasons and a reference is almost an unknown practice, all actions for divorce being heard upon testimony taken in open court. Secrecy is only permitted to this extent: "No officer of court with whom the pro-"ceedings in an action for divorce in which adultery "has been charged against either party are filed or "before whom the testimony is taken, and no clerk "of such officer, either before or after the termination "of such action, shall permit a copy of any of the "testimony or pleadings, or the substance of the "details thereof, to be taken by any person, except "either party or the attorney or counsel for such "party who has appeared therein, without the special "order of the court." It is common practice for the court in such actions to order the pleadings and testimony to be sealed and filed. See Section 2360j.

(11) Some clergymen refuse to marry divorced persons, but it is rather the exception than the rule.

Yours, &c.,
GEO. D. VAN DYKE,
President of Milwaukee,
Wisconsin,
Bar Association.

Mr. J. Arthur Barratt,
3, Temple Gardens, Temple,
London, England.

No. 191, S.] [Published 11th June 1909.

CHAPTER 323, LAWS OF 1909.

AN ACT to repeal sections 2349, 2350, 2351, 2353, 2354, 2355, 2359, and 2360 of the statutes; to amend sections 2330, 2362, 2366, 2370, 2371, and 2373 of the statutes; and to create sections 2351, 2353, 2354, 2355, 2360, and 2360f, 2360g, 2360h, 2360h—1 to 2360h—4, inclusive, 2360i, 2360j, 2360k, 2360l, 2360n, 2360r, and 2360s of the statutes providing for divorce laws uniform with those of other States.

THE people of the State of Wisconsin, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:—

Section 1. Sections 2349, 2350, 2351, 2353, 2354, 2355, 2359, and 2360 of the statutes are repealed.

Section 2. Section 2330 of the statutes is amended to read: Section 2330. 1. No marriage shall be contracted while either of the parties has a husband or wife living, nor between . . . persons who are nearer of kin than first cousins, computing by the rule of the civil law, whether of the half or of the whole blood; and no insane person or idiot shall be capable of contracting marriage.

2. . . . It shall not be lawful for any person . . . . who is a party to an action for divorce from the bonds of matrimony . . . in any court of this State to marry again . . . until the final judgment of divorce is entered; and the marriage of any . . . such person solemnised . . . before the entry of the final judgment of divorce shall be null and void. . . .

3. It shall not be lawful for any person divorced from the bonds of matrimony by the judgment of any court of this State prior to the time this Act shall go into effect to marry again within one year from the date of the entry of such judgment or decree, and the marriage of any such person solemnised within one year from the date of entry of any such judgment or decree of divorce shall be null and void.

Section 3. Section 2362 of the statutes is amended to read: Section 2362. In rendering a judgment of nullity of marriage or for divorce, whether from the bond of matrimony or from bed and board, the court may make such further provisions therein as it shall deem just and proper concerning the care, custody, maintenance, and education of the minor children of the parties, and . . . give the care and custody of the children of such marriage to one of the parties to the action, or may, if the interest of any such child shall demand it, and if the court shall find that neither of the parents is a fit and proper person to have the care and custody of any such child, give the care and custody of such child to any fit and proper person, who is a resident of this State and willing to receive and properly care for such child, or to any institution incorporated for such purposes and willing and authorised to receive and care for such child, having due regard to the age and sex of such child. Whenever the welfare of any such child will be promoted thereby, the court granting such decree shall always have the power to change the care and custody of any such child, either by giving it to or taking it from such parent or other person or such institution, provided that no order changing the custody of any child shall be entered until after notice of such application shall have been given the parents of such child, if they can be found, and also to the person or institution that then has the custody of such child.

Section 4. Section 2366 of the statutes is amended to read: Section 2366. In a judgment in an action for a divorce . . . although such divorce be denied, the court may make such order for the support and maintenance of the wife and children, or any of them, by the husband or out of his property as the nature of the case may render suitable and proper.

Section 5. Section 2370 of the statutes is amended to read: Section 2370. . . . In all cases of divorce from bed and board for any of the causes specified in section 2357, the court may decree a separation forever thereafter, or for a limited time, as shall seem just and reasonable, with a provision that in case of a reconciliation at any time thereafter, the parties may apply for a revocation or suspension of the decree; and upon such application the court shall make such order as may be just and reasonable.

Section 6. Section 2371 of the statutes is amended to read: Section 2371. Upon rendering a judgment annulling a marriage the court may make provision for restoring to the wife the whole or such part, as it shall deem just and reasonable, of any estate which the husband may have received from her or the value thereof, and may compel him to disclose what estate he shall have received and how the same has been disposed of . . .

Section 7. Section 2373 of the statutes is amended to read: Section 2373. When a marriage shall be dissolved by the . . . granting of a decree of divorce from the bonds of matrimony, the wife shall not be entitled to dower in any lands of the husband.

Section 8. There are created 19 new sections of the statutes to read. Section 2351. A marriage may be annulled for any of the following causes existing at the time of marriage:—

1. Incurable physical impotency or incapacity of copulation at the suit of either party, provided that the party making the application was ignorant of such impotency or incapacity at the time of marriage.

2. Consanguinity or affinity where the parties are nearer of kin than the first cousins, computing by the rule of civil law, whether of the half or of the whole blood, at the suit of either party; but when any such marriage shall not have been annulled during the lifetime of the parties the validity thereof shall not be inquired into after the death of either party.

3. When such marriage was contracted while either of the parties thereto had a husband or wife living, at the suit of either party.

4. Fraud, force, or coercion, at the suit of the innocent and injured party, unless the marriage has been confirmed by the acts of the injured party.

5. Insanity, idiocy, or such want of understanding as renders either party incapable of assenting to marriage, at the suit of the other, or at the suit of a guardian of the lunatic or incompetent, or of the lunatic or incompetent on regaining reason, unless such lunatic or incompetent, after regaining reason, has confirmed the marriage; provided that where the party compos mentis is the applicant, such party shall have been ignorant of the other's insanity or mental incompetency at the time of the marriage, and shall not have confirmed it subsequent to such person's regaining reason.

6. At the suit of the wife when she was under the age of 16 years at the time of the marriage, unless such marriage be confirmed by her after arriving at such age.

7. At the suit of the husband when he was under the age of 18 at the time of the marriage, unless such marriage be confirmed by him after arriving at such age.

Section 2353. Divorce shall be of two kinds:—

1. Divorce from the bonds of matrimony, or divorce a vinculo matrimonii.

2. Divorce from bed and board, or divorce a mensa et thoro.

Section 2354. For the purposes of annulment of marriage, jurisdiction may be acquired by publication as provided in the statutes, or by personal service upon the defendant within this State, when either party is a bonâ fide resident of this State at the time of the commencement of the action.

Section 2355. For purposes of divorce, either absolute or from bed and board, jurisdiction may be acquired by publication as provided in the statutes or by personal service upon the defendant within this State, under the following conditions:—

1. When, at the time the cause of action arose, either party was a bonâ fide resident of this State and has continued so to be down to the time of the commencement of the action, except that no action for absolute divorce shall be commenced for any cause other than adultery or bigamy, unless one of the parties has been for the two years next preceding the commencement of the action a bonâ fide resident of this State.

2. If, since the cause of action arose, either party, for at least two years next preceding the commencement of the action, has continued to be a bonâ fide resident of this State.

Section 2360. No decree for divorce shall be granted if it appears to the satisfaction of the court that the suit has been brought by collusion, or that the plaintiff has procured or connived at the offence charged, or has condoned it, or has been guilty of adultery not condoned; provided that the parties may, subject to the approval of the court, stipulate for a division of estate, for alimony, or for the support of children, in case a divorce be granted or a marriage annulled.

Section 2360f. Anyone charged as a particeps criminis shall be made a party, upon his or her application to the court, subject to such terms and conditions as the court may prescribe.

Section 2360g. All hearings and trials to determine whether or not a decree shall be granted shall be had before the court, and not before a referee, or any other delegated representative, and shall in all cases be public.

Section 2360h. In each county of the State the circuit judge or judges in and for such county shall by order filed in the office of the clerk of the circuit court on or before the first Monday of July of each year, appoint some reputable attorney, of recognised ability and standing at the Bar, divorce-counsel for each county. Before entering upon the discharge of his duties, such counsel shall take and file in the office of the clerk of the circuit court, an oath to support the constitution of the United States and of the State of Wisconsin, and to faithfully, fearlessly, and impartially discharge the duties of such office. The person so appointed shall continue to act until his successor is appointed and duly qualified, but such counsel may be removed at any time by an order signed by the judge or judges who appointed him, and filed in the office of the clerk of the circuit court of such county. Provided that in any county having a population of two hundred and fifty thousand or more according to the last State or national census, there shall be no appointment of divorce-counsel, but the district attorney or any assistant district attorney shall be the divorce-counsel thereof and perform all the duties of such office.

Section 2360h—1. In any action to affirm or annul a marriage, or for a divorce, the plaintiff shall, within ten days after making service on the defendant, serve a copy of the summons and complaint upon the divorce-counsel of the county in which the action is begun.

Section 2360h—2. No decree in an action to affirm or annul a marriage, or for divorce, shall be granted in any action in which the defendant shall not appear, and contest the right to a divorce in good faith, until such divorce-counsel or the divorce-counsel of the county in which the action is tried shall have appeared in open court and on behalf of the public made a fair and impartial presentation of the case to the court and fully advised the court as to the merits of the case and the rights and interests of the parties and of the public, nor until the proposed findings and judgment shall have been submitted to such divorce-counsel.

Section 2360h—3. Neither such divorce-counsel nor any law partner of such divorce-counsel shall appear in any action to affirm or annul a marriage, or for a divorce, in any court of the county in which he shall be acting as such divorce-counsel, except as herein provided. In case such divorce-counsel or his partner shall be in any way interested in any such action, the presiding judge shall appoint some reputable attorney to perform the services enjoined upon such divorce-counsel herein, and such attorney so appointed shall take and file the oath and receive the compensation provided for herein.

Section 2360h—4. For each case in which such divorce-counsel appears as provided herein, excepting counties having a population of two hundred and fifty thousand or more, he shall receive the sum of ten dollars, to be paid by the county wherein the action was tried, upon the order of the presiding judge, and the certificate of the clerk of the circuit court; provided that when any case shall occupy more than one day of the time of such divorce-counsel, the court may, in its discretion, require the parties to the action or either of them to pay such additional sum to compensate such divorce-counsel, as the justice of the case may require, having due regard to the financial ability of such parties, which additional sum in counties having a population of two hundred and fifty thousand or more shall be paid in the treasury of the county.

Section 2360i. No decree for annulment of marriage, or for divorce, shall be granted in any action in which the defendant does not appear and defend the same in good faith unless the cause is shown by affirmative proof aside from any admission to the plaintiff on the part of the defendant.

Section 2360j. No record or evidence in any case shall be impounded, or access thereto refused except by special written order of the court made in its discretion in the interests of public morals.

Section 2360k. 1. In every action brought to affirm or annul a marriage, or for divorce from the bonds of matrimony, in which it shall be determined by the verdict of a jury or by the findings of a court that the marriage be annulled or the divorce granted, an interlocutory judgment shall be entered which shall fully determine the rights of the parties, provide for the care, custody, and maintenance of the minor children of such marriage, fix the amount of alimony to be paid for the support of the wife, and the amount of suit money and attorney fees.

2. Such judgment shall also determine the status of the parties to such action, but such determination of the status of the parties shall not be effective except for the purposes of an appeal to review the same, until after one year from the date when such interlocutory decree was entered.

3. Any of the provisions of such interlocutory judgment may be reviewed by an appeal therefrom, if taken within one year from the date on which such interlocutory judgment was entered or from the date of the last modification or revision of the same, if it shall be modified or revised by the court after it is first entered.

Section 2360l. 1. At the expiration of one year from the entry or from the last modification or revision of such interlocutory judgment, the final judgment may be entered, unless such interlocutory judgment shall have been reversed or so modified on appeal as to prevent the entry of such final judgment, or unless the court, for sufficient cause, upon its own motion, or upon the application of a party to the action, shall otherwise order before the expiration of such period.

2. If an appeal from such interlocutory judgment be pending at the expiration of said year no final judgment shall be entered until such appeal shall have been finally determined.

3. Such final judgment shall be entered by the court upon application of either party, or of their heirs or personal representatives, if they are deceased, and shall, when entered, be final and conclusive, and no appeal shall be taken therefrom; but such final judgment shall be subject to modification upon application to the court granting the same, so far as it shall have provided for alimony or for the care, custody, and maintenance of the children of such marriage. An appeal may be taken from any determination of the court made upon such application to modify the judgment after such final judgment shall have been entered.

Section 2360n. The court, upon granting a divorce from the bonds of matrimony, may allow the wife to resume her maiden name or the name of a former deceased husband in case there be no children of the marriage.

Section 2360r. Full faith and credit shall be given in all the courts of this State to a decree of annulment of marriage or divorce by a court of competent jurisdiction in another State, territory, or possession of the United States, when the jurisdiction of such court was obtained in the manner and in substantial conformity with the conditions prescribed in sections 2358 and 2359. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit the power of any court to give such effect to a decree of annulment or divorce by a court of a foreign country as may be justified by the rules of international comity; provided that if any inhabitant of this State shall go into another State, territory, or country for the purpose of obtaining a decree of divorce for a cause which occurred while the parties resided in this State, or for a cause which is not ground for divorce under the laws of this State, a decree so obtained shall be of no force or effect in this State.

Section 2360s. Nothing in this Act contained shall affect or apply to any action for annulment of marriage or for divorce now pending.

Approved 9th June 1909.

C.

SUPPLEMENT TO MR. J. ARTHUR BARRATT'S EVIDENCE.

SUMMARY OF UNITED STATES STATUTES RELATING TO INSANITY AS A GROUND FOR DIVORCE.

Insanity is now a ground for absolute divorce only in Idaho, Maine, Utah and Washington. I do not find it was a cause in California.

The United States Census Report, vol. 2, pp. 4–164, gives statistics of divorce for insanity between 1867 and 1906 in Arkansas, District of Columbia, Florida, Indian Territory, Indiana, Maryland, Mississippi, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota, Virginia, West Virginia and Wisconsin, in addition to the states above mentioned.

I have carefully examined the statutes, however, in all these states, but the only states now making insanity a ground for absolute divorce by statute are those first mentioned above. It was a cause for divorce absolute in Arkansas from 1873 to 1895; in Florida from 1901 to 1905; in North Dakota from 1899 to 1901, and in Wisconsin from 1881 to 1882, in which latter years respectively the statutes were repealed in those states. It is obvious, therefore, that the statistics given in the Census Report in those states since the date of repeal must be statistics of nullity suits and not of divorce, as I do not find that insanity is a cause for judicial separation in any state. It is also obvious that the Census Report statistics of divorces in the states in which there is not now and has not been any statute making insanity a ground for divorce, and also in any state for the period prior to the enactment of such a statute, must be statistics of nullity suits only.

I have carefully gone over the number of cases in the Census Report, and find that the entire number of "divorces" (so-called) for insanity in all the above-mentioned states for the 40 years between 1867 and 1906 was 309. And in the states which do not make insanity a ground for absolute divorce, the following number of divorces (so-called) were granted for that cause:—

In Arkansas, 1873–1895, for the insanity of the husband	48
In Arkansas, 1873–1895, for the insanity of the wife	35
In Florida, 1901–1905, for the insanity of the husband	7
In Florida, 1901–1905, for the insanity of the wife	1
In North Dakota, 1899–1901, for the insanity of the husband	12
In North Dakota, 1899–1901, for the insanity of the wife	3

In Wisconsin, 1881–1882, this year is not given separately; but from 1877–1886 there were of the husband, 17, and of the wife, 3. But it is not possible to tell from the Census Report what proportion of these "divorces" are absolute and what number are nullity suits.

Arkansas.—The statute of Arkansas, enacted in 1873, read, while in force, that divorce absolute could be had "where either party shall, subsequent to such marriage, have become permanently or incurably insane." (Repealed in 1895.)

Washington.—The statute of Washington read, "in case of incurable chronic mania or dementia" of either party having existed for ten years or more, the court may, in its discretion, grant a divorce.

Florida (enacted 1901, repealed 1905).—The statute of Florida provided that divorce absolute could be had for "incurable insanity," but only if it has existed for at least four years prior to the bill, and if the party has been an inmate of some asylum, hospital, home or retreat for the cure of the insane, and shall have been adjudged a lunatic by a competent court, and a committee or guardian of the person and property of the lunatic has been appointed before filing the bill. The superintendent of the asylum or home must be examined as a witness as to the insanity, and the defendant must be proven to have been incurably insane for four years, and that the particular form of insanity must be one generally recognised as incurable. Service of process must be made on the defendant and on the guardian. It is the duty of the court to appoint a competent counsel to act as guardian ad litem to appear and defend the suit, and his compensation is taxed as costs. The committee or guardian may also appear and defend. It is the duty of the court in making the decree to require the husband to provide for the insane wife for life if her property is insufficient for that purpose, and supplemental orders therefor can be made if the provision is inadequate. The petitioner must state in his bill what the wife's means are.

Idaho.—The law of Idaho as amended in 1903 provides for divorce absolute when either husband or wife has become "permanently insane," provided he or she shall have been regularly confined in an insane asylum in the United States for one year (formerly six years) next preceding the filing of the bill, and "it "shall appear to the court that such insanity is "permanent and incurable." Plaintiff must have been an actual resident for one year next preceding the action. The court must appoint a guardian ad litem; process must be served on the defendant and on the guardian, and also on the county attorney of the district. The latter must appear and defend the action, and no such divorce can be granted in his absence. The plaintiff must pay all the costs of court, the expenses of the county attorney and the expenses and fees of the guardian as fixed and allowed by the court.

Maine.—The laws of Maine provide that divorce absolute may be granted for "insanity" where the party has been confined in a state asylum for the insane for 15 consecutive years next prior to the filing of the bill and is found incurable. The decree will not affect the liability of the plaintiff or petitioner for the support of the defendant, and the court may require the former to furnish security therefor. The decree does not entitle the plaintiff to any portion of defendant's property. Process must be served on the defendant and on the guardian, and if the latter does not appear in court or defendant has no guardian the court must appoint a guardian ad litem.

North Dakota.—The laws of North Dakota provided for absolute divorce where defendant confined in an asylum for two years and proven incurably insane.

Wisconsin.—I cannot procure the full text of the law of Wisconsin. It provided for care and maintenance of the defendant and also for a guardian ad litem —some competent lawyer appointed by the court.

Pennsylvania.—Pennsylvania in 1905 passed a peculiar statute providing for divorce from an insane husband or wife when the latter has committed an act recognised in that state as a cause for divorce, but insanity itself is not a ground for divorce. It must be proven that the husband or wife of the petitioner is "hopelessly insane," but if he or she "has been for 10 "or more years an inmate of an asylum for the insane, "it shall be conclusive proof of hopeless insanity." The lunacy must be fully established by expert testimony, and the issue tried before the court, a master, or by a jury. Where the wife is insane the court has power to require the husband to enter into a bond to provide for her support during life, and likewise if the wife has sufficient means, the same bond may be required of her if the estate of the husband is insufficient for his support. The Act also provides for an insane wife obtaining a divorce from her husband by means of a petition presented through any relative or next friend of the wife. The insanity must be proven as any other fact in a divorce action.

Utah.—The law of Utah provides that divorce absolute may be granted for "permanent insanity of defendant," who must first be "duly and regularly adjudged to be insane," for at least five years prior to the commencement of the action, and it must appear to the satisfaction of the court, by competent witnesses, that the insanity of the defendant is incurable. A guardian ad litem must be appointed for the defendant and service of process must be made on him, on the defendant, and on the county attorney, whose duty it is to investigate the merits of the case, attend the trial of the cause and make such defence as is "just and "proper to protect the rights of the defendant and "the interests of the state." Either plaintiff, or defendant, or legal representatives, are entitled to have defendant brought into court on the trial, or have an examination of defendant by two or more competent physicians to determine the mental condition of the defendant, and for that purpose may have process to enter any asylum or institution where defendant is confined. The court is to assess or apportion the costs "according to the equities of the case."

I take pleasure in sending herewith the full statutes above-mentioned relating to insanity, as a cause for or connected with divorce.

27th June 1910. J. ARTHUR BARRATT.

Full Text of Statutes as to Insanity a Ground for Divorce.

FLORIDA.

This law was repealed by the Act 11th May 1905, Chapter 4972 (No. 88).

An Act making Incurable Insanity a Ground for Divorce of Husband and Wife, and Regulating Proceedings in such Cases.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Florida:

Section 1. Incurable insanity in either husband or wife shall be a ground for the dissolution of, and divorce from, the bonds of matrimony upon the application of the other party to the marriage; Provided, however, that no divorce shall be granted upon such ground unless such condition upon the part of the defendant, or party so insane, shall have existed for at least four years prior to the filing of the bill for divorce; nor unless such party shall at the filing of the bill be, and shall have been for such period, an inmate and in the care of some asylum, hospital, home, or retreat for the treatment and care of insane persons located in or out of this state, and shall have been, before the filing of such bill, adjudged a lunatic by a competent court within or without this state, and a committee or guardian of the person or property, or both where there is any property of the lunatic, shall have been appointed before the filing of such bill. No such divorce shall be granted unless the superintendent or other principal officer of the asylum, hospital, home, or retreat in which the defendant may be at the time of the trial shall be examined as a witness upon the issue of such insanity, nor unless it be proved that the defendant is and has been for the period last above mentioned incurably insane, and that the class or form of insanity of which the defendant may be suffering is one which is generally recognised as incurable. Nothing in this Act shall be construed to require the appointment of, in any case, any guardian or committee of the person in more than one state or jurisdiction.

Section 2. In all such suits for divorce actual service of the subpœna in chancery shall be made upon the defendant and upon the committee or guardian of the person, and also upon the committee or guardian of the estate of such lunatic, where there is such a committee or guardian, whether such committee, guardian, or guardians have been appointed by a court of this state or a court without this state; and where such service is made out of this state, proof of service shall be made by affidavit of the party making the service of the time and manner of service, and the copy of subpœna delivered in making such service shall have endorsed thereon the title of the cause and the words "copy of subpœna," and the name of the complainant's solicitor.

Section 3. Whenever the defendant shall at the time of the filing of the bill of complaint be confined in some such asylum, hospital, home, or retreat out of this state there shall be made, whether such defendant shall either be domiciled in or a citizen or resident of this state, but absent therefrom, or shall not be domiciled in nor a citizen nor resident of this state, an order for publication, to be made by the court and to be published and mailed as is provided by section 1413 of the Revised Statutes of the State of Florida as amended by chapter 4129 of the Laws of said state, approved May 31st, 1893, as is provided herein for cases of defendants residing without the United States as distinguished from defendants residing therein, and persons whose residence is unknown; Provided, however, that the only affidavit which shall be necessary for obtaining such an order of publication shall be one to be made by the complainant to the effect that the facts stated in the bill of complaint are true, and setting forth the place of confinement and post office address of the defendant and the names and residences and post office addresses of the committee or committees, guardian or guardians, of such defendant.

Section 4. The return day of the subpœna in chancery in such cases shall be the same as that fixed in the order of publication.

Section 5. It shall be the duty of the court to appoint some competent attorney at law to act as guardian ad litem and appear for and defend the suit for the defendant, and his compensation shall be fixed by the court and shall be taxed as other costs of the suit. Any such committee or guardian of the person, whether appointed within or without this state, may also appear and defend any such suit on behalf of the defendant.

Section 6. In case of any suit of a husband against an insane wife under the provisions of this Act, it shall be the duty of the court to inquire into the pecuniary condition of the wife, and if it shall be found that she has no property, or not sufficient property in her own right for her proper care and maintenance during her probable life, the court shall in the decree of divorce require that the husband shall make ample provision therefor, specifying the same; and the decree of divorce shall be of no effect until there has been a decree affirming and approving the provision made by the husband in accordance with such former decree. In determining upon such provision the court shall take into consideration any property which the wife may have in her own right. In case from any cause the provision made for the wife shall at any time become inadequate for her proper care and maintenance, the court may, by supplemental proceedings, require the husband to make necessary provision for her care and maintenance. Should the court find that the wife has sufficient means for her care and maintenance, it shall so adjudicate in the decree for divorce. It shall be the duty of the complainant to state in his bill of complaint what the wife's means of support in her own right are, and whether or not they are sufficient for her support and proper care, or that she has no means as the case may be; Provided, however, that whenever it shall be found that the husband is not able to make such provisions, no requirement of such provisions shall be made in the decree further than the means of the husband will justify.

Section 7. This Act shall take effect immediately upon its passage and approval by the Governor, or upon its becoming a law without the approval of the Governor.

Approved, April 25, 1901.

IDAHO.

H.B. No. 108.

DIVORCE.

An Act authorizing Divorces to be Granted in cases of Insanity, and regulating the Duties of the District Attorney therein.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Idaho:

Section 1. That in addition to the causes for divorce mentioned in section 2457 of the Revised Statutes of this state, a divorce may be granted when either husband or wife has become permanently insane. Provided, that no divorce shall be granted under the provisions of this Act unless such insane person shall have been duly and regularly confined in the insane asylum of this state for at least six years next preceding the commencement of the action for divorce; nor unless it shall appear to the court that such insanity is permanent and incurable. And provided further, that no action shall be maintained under the provisions of this Act unless the plaintiff shall be an actual resident of this state and shall have resided therein for six years next preceding the commencement of such action.

Section 2. The district courts of the several judicial districts of this state shall have jurisdiction of actions for divorce under the provisions of this Act; and such action shall be brought in the county of this state in which the plaintiff resides. And the court in which such action is about to be commenced shall, upon the filing by the plaintiff of a petition duly verified showing that a cause of action exists under this Act, appoint some person to act as guardian of such insane person in such action, and the summons and complaint in such action shall be served upon the defendant by delivering a copy of such summons and complaint to such guardian and by delivering a copy thereof to the county attorney of the district in which such action is brought.

Section 3. It shall be the duty of the county attorney upon whom the summons and complaint in such action shall be served, to appear for such defendant in such action and defend the same, and no divorce shall be granted under the provisions of this Act except in the presence of the county attorney.

Section 4. In any action brought under the provisions of this Act, the said courts and the judges thereof shall possess all the powers relative to the payment of alimony, the distribution of property and the care and custody of children of the parties that such courts now have, or may hereafter have in other actions for divorce.

Section 5. All the costs of the court in such action, as well as the actual expenses of the county attorney therein, together with the expenses and fees of the guardian therein, shall be paid by the plaintiff; such expenses of the county attorney and the expenses and fees of the guardian shall be fixed and allowed by the court, and the court, or the judge thereof, may make such order as to the payment of such fees and expenses as to the court or judge, may seem proper.

Section 6. Whereas an emergency is declared to exist this Act shall take effect and be in force from and after its approval by the Governor.

Approved February 14th, 1899.

(Sec. 1 amended by Act of 27th February 1903.)

SENATE BILL No. 4.

An Act to amend section one of an Act entitled "An "Act authorising Divorces to be Granted in cases of "Insanity, and regulating the Duties of the District "Attorney therein." Approved February 14th, 1899.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Idaho:—

Section 1. That section 1 of an Act of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, entitled, An Act authorising Divorces to be Granted in cases of Insanity, and regulating the Duties of the District Attorney therein, approved February 14, 1899, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:—

That in addition to the causes for divorce mentioned in section 2457 of the Revised Statutes of the State of Idaho, a divorce may be granted when either husband or wife has become permanently insane: Provided, that no divorce shall be granted under the provisions of this Act unless such insane person shall have been duly and regularly confined in the insane asylum of this state, or of a sister state or territory, for at least six years next preceding the commencement of the action for divorce, nor unless it shall appear to the court that such insanity is permanent and incurable. And provided further, that no action shall be maintained under the provisions of this Act unless the plaintiff shall be an actual resident of this state and shall have resided therein for one year next preceding the commencement of such action.

Approved the 27th day of February 1903.

MAINE.

Section 2. A divorce from the bonds of matrimony may be decreed by the supreme judicial court in the county where either party resides at the commencement of proceedings, for causes of adultery, impotence, extreme cruelty, utter desertion continued for three consecutive years next prior to the filing of the libel, gross and confirmed habits of intoxication from the use of intoxicating liquors, opium, or other drugs, cruel and abusive treatment, insanity, when in consequence thereof the libellee has been committed to and confined in a state asylum for the insane for fifteen consecutive years next prior to the filing of the libel and is found to be incurable, or on the libel of the wife where the husband being of sufficient ability or being able to labor and provide for her, grossly or wantonly and cruelly refuses or neglects to provide suitable maintenance for her; provided that the parties were married in this state or cohabited here after marriage, or if the libellant resided here when the cause of divorce accrued, or had resided here in good faith for one year prior to the commencement of proceedings, or if the libellee is a resident of this state. But when both parties have been guilty of adultery, or there is a collusion between them to procure a divorce, it shall not be granted.

"Either party may be a witness. But a divorce granted for cause of insanity shall not affect the liability of the libellant for the support of the libellee, unless, upon proof that the libellee is possessed of property sufficient for such libellee's maintenance, the court shall otherwise decree; nor shall it entitle the libellant to any portion of the libellee's property; and the court in its discretion may order the libellant to provide for or contribute to the support of the libellee and to furnish security therefor. Where insanity is alleged as a cause for divorce, a copy of the libel shall be served on the libellee and on the guardian, if any, of the libellee, and if such guardian does not appear in court, or if the libellee has no guardian, the court shall appoint a guardian ad litem for such libellee."

Section 2. This Act shall take effect when approved.

Approved March 26th 1907.

NORTH DAKOTA LAWS, 1899, CH. 77.

"Incurable insanity" a cause for divorce absolute. Revised Code, section 2737.

Section 2743. "Incurable insanity must continue " for two years, the person so affected to have been " confined in an asylum for the insane during such " time, before it is a cause for divorce, and the " testimony of the superintendent of such asylum " showing such person to be incurably insane must be " produced before the court granting such divorce " before the same shall be granted."

(Repealed in 1901.)

LAWS OF WASHINGTON.

In effect 1887.

Divorce a vinculo.

"8. In case of incurable chronic mania or dementia of either party having existed for ten years or more the court may in its discretion grant a divorce."

LAWS OF ARKANSAS, CODE 1873, SECTION 464.

Divorce a vinculo.

"7. Where either party shall, subsequent to such marriage, have become permanently or incurably insane."

PENNSYLVANIA LAWS OF 1905.

No. 152.

An Act to amend section 8 of the Act approved the 13th day of April 1843, entitled, "An Act to convey " certain Real Estate, and for other purposes," so as to extend its provisions to the husband or wife of a lunatic or non compos mentis, and to further regulate the procedure in action for divorce.

Section 1. Be it enacted, &c., that section 8 of an Act approved the 13th day of April 1843, entitled " An Act to convey certain Real Estate, and for other " purposes," which reads as follows:—

"Section 8. That in cases where the wife is a " lunatic or non compos mentis, the courts of common " pleas of this Commonwealth are invested with " authority to receive a petition or libel for a divorce, " which may be exhibited by any relative or next friend " of the wife; and the affidavit required by the Act " concerning divorces may be made in the manner " required by the Act by such relative or next friend; " and all the provisions of the several Acts relating " to divorces shall apply to all applications made under " the directions of this section: Provided, that the " fact of the lunacy of the wife and such circum- " stances as may be sufficient to satisfy the mind of " the court as to the truth of the allegation shall " be set forth in the statement; and upon the hearing " of the case before the court, or upon an issue to be " tried by jury, the question of lunacy, with every " other matter of fact that is affirmed by one side " and denied by the other, shall be heard and investi- " gated in the manner prescribed by the provisions " of the several Acts concerning divorces," be and the same is hereby amended so as to read as follows:—

Clause A. That from and after the passage of this Act, in cases where the husband or wife is a hopeless lunatic or non compos mentis, the courts of common pleas of this Commonwealth are invested with the authority to receive a petition or libel for divorce; the affidavit as now required by law to such petition for libel to be made by the petitioner; and the service of subpœna in divorce shall be made as now provided, such service to be made upon the committee of such lunatic; and all the provisions of the several Acts relating to divorces shall apply to all applications made under this Act.

Clause B. That the fact of the lunacy of the husband or wife, and such circumstances as may be sufficient to satisfy the mind of the court as to the truth of the allegation, shall be set forth in the petition; and upon the hearing of the case before the court, a matter, or issue to be tried by jury, the question of lunacy shall be fully established by expert testimony, together with every other matter of fact that is affirmed by one party and denied by the other, and the same shall be heard and investigated in the manner prescribed by the provisions of the several Acts concerning divorces.

Clause C. No divorce shall be granted under this Act to any petitioner or libellant unless it be proved beyond a reasonable doubt that the husband or wife of the petitioner is hopelessly insane; Provided, however, that if the husband or wife has been for 10 or more years an inmate of an asylum for the insane, it shall be conclusive proof of hopeless insanity.

Clause D. In case of the application of a husband for divorce from an insane wife, under the provisions of this Act, the courts of common pleas of this Commonwealth, or the judges thereof to whom application is made, are hereby invested with full and complete authority to provide alimony for the support of such insane wife during the term of her natural life, by requiring the petitioner to file a bond, with surety or sureties if necessary, in such sum as they may direct, conditioned as aforesaid, before granting the divorce prayed for. And if the wife be the petitioner, and have sufficient means, the courts aforesaid, or the judges thereof, may provide for the support of the insane husband as in this section required for an insane wife; provided the insane husband has not sufficient estate in his own right for his support.

Clause E. This Act shall in no way interfere or prevent an insane wife from obtaining a divorce from a husband, as provided in the Act of April 13th, 1843, to which this is a supplement.

Approved the 18th day of April 1905.

(Note.—It has been held by the Supreme Court that this Act does not make insanity a ground for divorce.)

UTAH.

Chapter 43.

Divorce.

An Act to amend section 1208 Revised Statutes of Utah, 1898, and providing for Divorce upon grounds of permanent Insanity.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Utah . . . . § 8. Permanent insanity of defendant; Provided, that no divorce shall be granted on the grounds of insanity unless, first, the defendant shall have been duly and regularly adjudged to be insane by the legally constituted authorities of this state, or some other state, at least five years prior to the commencement of the action; second, unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court, by the testimony of competent witnesses, that the insanity of the defendant is incurable. In all such actions, the court shall appoint for the defendant a guardian ad litem, who shall take such measures as may be necessary and proper to protect the interests of the defendant; and a copy of the summons and complaint must be duly served on the defendant in person, on his guardian ad litem, and on the county attorney for the county in which such action is prosecuted; it shall be the duty of such county attorney to make an investigation into the merits of the case, and to attend the court upon the trial of said cause, and make such defence therein as may be just and proper to protect the rights of the defendant, and the interests of the state.

In all such actions the court and judge thereof shall have all the powers relative to the payment of alimony, the distribution of property, and the custody and maintenance of minor children, which such courts now have or may hereafter possess, in other actions for divorce.

Either the plaintiff or defendant, or legal representatives, shall, upon proper notice, be entitled to have the defendant brought into court upon the trial, or to have an examination of the defendant, by two or more competent physicians, to determine the mental condition of the defendant, and for such purpose either party may, upon application, have process from the court to enter any asylum or institution within the state where such defendant may be confined.

The costs of court in such action shall be assessed or apportioned by the court according to the equities of the case, as may be just and proper.

Approved this 9th day of March 1903.

D.

SUPPLEMENT TO MR. J. A. BARRATT'S EVIDENCE.

Marriage licence laws were not enacted till—

1887 in Arizona.
None in Alaska.
1899 in Idaho.
1887 in Michigan.
1887 in Montana.
1897 in New Jersey (for non-residents only; none yet for residents).
1905 in New Mexico.
1907 in New York.
1891 in North Dakota.
1890 in South Dakota.
1897 in Oklahoma.
None in South Carolina.
1888 in Utah.
1899 in Wisconsin.

LAWS OF PENNSYLVANIA, 1815.

Marriage with particeps criminis.

Section 29. The wife or husband who shall have been guilty of the crime of adultery shall not marry the person with whom the said crime was committed during the life of the former wife or husband; but nothing herein contained shall be construed to extend to or affect or render illegitimate any children born of the body of the wife during coverture.

Section 30. When any woman shall be divorced as aforesaid and shall afterwards openly cohabit at bed and board with the person named in the petition or libel and proved to be partaker in her crime, she is hereby declared to be incapable to alienate directly or indirectly any of her lands, tenements or hereditaments; but all deeds, wills, appointments, and conveyances thereof shall be absolutely void and of none effect, and after her death the same shall descend and be subject to distribution in like manner as if she died seized thereof intestate.

Incompatibility of Temper.

Incompatibility of temper is not a cause for divorce specifically mentioned in the statutes of the States for which statistics of this cause are given in the Census Report, vol. 2, nor, indeed, in the statutes of any states at present. Divorces solely for this cause, therefore, must have been deemed to come under some broad ground mentioned in the statutes. Statistics for this cause solely cease in Arkansas, Maine, and Utah in 1886, and continue to 1905 in Indiana and 1906 in Washington, the total in those two states being 380, as stated in my evidence. (Census Report. vol. 2, pp. 22 and 73.)

APPENDIX XIII.

Statutory Causes for Absolute Divorce, for Limited Divorce, and for Annulment, Marriage and Divorce,

[D represents absolute divorce or divorce a vinculo matrimonii; S, legal

	CAUSE.	New England.						Southern North Atlantic.			Northern South Atlantic.					Southern South Atlantic.				Eastern North Central.
		Maine.	New Hampshire.	Vermont.	Massachusetts.	Rhode Island.	Connecticut.	New York.	New Jersey.	Pennsylvania.[1]	Delaware.	Maryland.[2]	District of Columbia.	Virginia.	West Virginia.	North Carolina.	South Carolina.	Georgia.[3]	Florida.	Ohio.	Indiana.	Illinois.	Michigan.	Wisconsin.
	Desertion:
1	Abandonment or desertion	D	[4]D	DS	D	DS	D	S	D	DS	D	DS	S	DS	DS	S	–	D	D	D	DS	D	DS	DS
2	Refusal to move to state	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
	Cruelty:
3	Extreme cruelty	D	[5]D	DS	D	DS	D	S	S	S	D	S	S	[6]S	[6]S	S	–	DS	D	D	DS	D	DS	DS
4	Attempt to take life	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	D	–	–
5	Violence endangering life	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	DS	–	–	–	–	–	S	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
6	Indignities and defamation	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	DS	–	–	–	–	–	S	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
	Sexual immorality:
7	Adultery	D	D	DS	D	DS	D	D	D	DS	D	D	D	D	D	D	–	D	D	D	DS	D	D	D
8	Crime against nature	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
	Lewd conduct	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
10	Loathsome disease	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
	Intemperance:
11	Habitual drunkenness	D	D	–	D	DS	D	–	–	–	D	–	S	–	S	S	–	DS	D	D	DS	D	D	DS
12	Habitual use of drugs	D	–	–	D	DS	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	S	–	–	–
	Neglect of responsibilities:
13	Neglect to provide	D	–	DS	D	DS	–	S	–	–	DS	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	DS	–	DS	DS
14	Neglect of duty	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	D	S	–	–	–
	Defects of disposition:
15	Violent temper	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	D	–	–	–	–	–
16	Intolerant religious belief	–	D	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
	Crime:
17	Conviction or imprisonment	–	D	DS	D	–	D	–	–	D	D	–	–	D	D	–	–	D	–	D	D	D	D	D
18	Fugitive from justice	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	D	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
	Lack of real consent to marriage:
19	Duress or force	–	–	A	–	–	–	A	–	D	–	–	A	–	–	–	–	D	–	–	–	–	A	A
20	Fraud or fraudulent contract	–	–	A	–	–	D	A	–	D	–	–	A	–	–	–	–	D	–	D	–	–	A	A
	Incapacity to contract marriage:
21	Mental incapacity	A	–	A	A	–	–	A	D	D	A	–	A	A	A	A	–	D	–	–	–	–	A	A
22	Want of age	A	–	A	A	–	–	A	–	–	DS	–	A	A	A	A	–	–	–	–	–	–	A	A
	Personal unfitness to contract marriage:
23	Impotency or physical incapacity.	D	D	A	D	DS	–	A	D	D	D	D	A	DA	DA	DA	–	D	D	D	D	D	DA	D
24	Pregnancy before marriage	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	D	D	D	–	D	–	–	–	–	–	–
25	Illicit carnal intercourse before marriage.	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	D	–	D	D	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
	Illegality of marriage:
26	Bigamy	A	–	A	A	–	–	A	A	DA	A	A	A	A	A	A	–	–	D	D	–	D	A	A
27	Consanguinity	A	–	A	A	–	–	–	A	D	A	A	A	A	A	A	–	D	D	–	–	–	A	A
28	Miscegenation	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	A	–	–	A	A	A	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
	Other causes:
29	Void and voidable marriages (not otherwise specified).	–	A	–	–	DS	A	–	–	–	–	D	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
30	Previous divorce in another State.	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	D	D	–	–	D	–
31	Misconduct	–	–	–	–	DS	–	S	–	–	–	S	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	DS
32	Vagrancy	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
33	Voluntary separation	–	–	–	–	[6]DS	..	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	D
34	Civil death	–	–	–	–	DS	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
35	Presumption of death	–	–	–	–	DS	D	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
36	Causes deemed sufficient by court.	–	–	–	–	S	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–

[1] After hearing any cause for divorce the court may decree the divorce or that the marriage is null and void.
[2] Limited divorce may be decreed in a case where absolute divorce is prayed, if the causes prove to be sufficient to entitle the party to the same.
[3] Limited divorce may be granted on any ground which was held sufficient in the English courts prior to May 4, 1784.
[4] There are six provisions dealing with different phases of desertion.

APPENDIX XIII.

BY STATES AND TERRITORIES—extracted from the United States Census Report, 1867–1906 (p. 268).

separation, limited divorce, or divorce a mensa et thoro; and A, annulment.]

Western North Central.							Eastern South Central.				Western South Central.					Rocky Mountain.					Basin and Plateau.			Pacific.
Minnesota.	Iowa.	Missouri.	North Dakota.	South Dakota.	Nebraska.	Kansas.	Kentucky.	Tennessee.[1]	Alabama.	Mississippi.	Louisiana.	Arkansas.	Indian Territory.	Oklahoma.	Texas.	Montana.	Idaho.	Wyoming.	Colorado.	New Mexico.	Arizona.	Utah.	Nevada.	Washington.	Oregon.	California.
DS	D	D	D	D	DS	D	DS	DS	DS	D	DS	DS	DS	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	1
–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	D	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	2
DS	–	–	D	D	DS	D	DS	DS	S	D	DS	–	–	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	3
–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	D	–	–	DS	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	4
–	D	D	–	–	–	–	DS	–	DS	–	–	DS	DS	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	5
–	–	D	–	–	–	–	–	DS	–	–	DS	DS	DS	–	–	–	–	D	–	–	–	–	–	D	D	–	6
D	D	D	D	D	D	D	DS	D	DS	D	DS	DS	DS	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	7
–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	DS	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	8
–	–	–	–	–	–	–	DS	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	9
–	–	–	–	–	–	–	DS	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	10
D	D	D	D	D	D	D	DS	D	DS	D	DS	DS	DS	D	–	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	11
–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	D	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	12
S	–	–	–	–	DS	–	–	DS	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	–	–	13
–	–	–	D	D	–	D	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	D	–	D	D	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	D	14
–	–	–	–	–	–	–	DS	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	15
–	–	–	–	–	–	–	DS	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	16
D	D	D	D	D	D	D	DS	D	DS	D	DS	DS	DS	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	D	17
–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	DS	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	18
A	–	–	A	A	A	–	DSA	–	–	–	A	A	A	–	–	A	A	A	–	–	–	A	–	D	A	A	19
A	–	–	A	A	A	D	DSA	–	–	–	–	A	A	D	–	A	A	A	–	–	–	A	A	D	A	A	20
A	A	–	A	A	A	A	–	–	–	D	–	A	DSA	A	–	A	DA	A	–	–	–	D	A	D	A	A	21
A	–	–	A	A	A	A	A	–	–	–	–	A	A	A	–	A	A	A	–	A	–	A	A	–	A	A	22
D	A	D	A	A	AD	D	DS	D	DS	D	–	DSA	DSA	D	A	A	A	D	D	D	DA	D	D	D	D	A	23
–	D	D	–	–	–	D	DS	D	DS	D	–	–	–	D	–	–	–	D	–	D	D	–	–	–	–	–	24
–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	25
A	[7]A	D	A	A	A	D	–	D	–	D	A	DS	DS	D	–	A	A	A	D	–	–	–	–	–	A	A	26
A	A	–	–	–	A	–	–	–	A	D	A	–	–	–	–	A	–	A	–	A	–	–	–	–	A	A	27
–	–	–	–	–	A	–	–	–	–	–	A	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	A	–	28
–	A	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	A	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	A	–	A	29
–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	30
S	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	31
–	–	D	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	D	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	32
–	–	–	–	–	–	–	[9]DS	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	33
–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	34
–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	35
–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	–	D	–	–	36

[5] Includes "treatment endangering reason or injuring health."
[6] Also for "reasonable apprehension of bodily hurt."
[7] Provided they have not lived and cohabited together after the death of the former husband or wife.
[8] Living separate and apart for the space of at least 10 years.
[9] Living apart without any cohabitation for five consecutive years next before the application.

APPENDIX XIV.

Decree "Ne Temere" on Marriage.

Instruction of the Archbishop and Bishops of England and Wales. With the Latin Text of the Decree of the S. Congregation of the Council, 2nd August, 1907, a translation of the same, and a Letter addressed to the Bishops, 5th March 1908, by His Eminence the Cardinal Prefect of Propaganda. Lent, 1908.

The New Law of Marriage.

The decree "Ne temere" has now reached the Archbishops and Bishops of the Province of Westminster, and by the terms of the decree ("Praesens "decretum legitime publicatum et promulgatum "habeatur per ejus transmissionem ad locorum "Ordinarios") it is now promulgated, and its provisions will have the force of law throughout England and Wales from Easter Sunday next.

A copy of the decree in Latin, and of an English translation, is sent herewith; and in addition a copy of a letter from Propaganda, dated 5th March 1908, containing the answer of the S. Congregation of the Council to the question which arose out of the words "nisi pro aliquo particulari loco aut regione aliter a S. Sede sit statutum."

The duty is laid upon the Bishops of taking care that, in all the public Churches of their dioceses, the decree shall be explained to the people in order that all may understand this important law. Instruction should, therefore, be given in every Mission as soon as possible on all the points which the faithful ought to know, particularly as to the conditions required for validity and lawfulness, the change of the law with regard to mixed marriages in England, and the invalidity of every marriage which is not celebrated with the assistance of the proper priest (except as provided in VII. and VIII.).

With regard to the Clergy, it is thought well to draw attention to some points which seem to require explanation.

1. In Section II., which gives the definition of Parochus in its new and extended meaning for the purpose of the new law of clandestinity, there is firstly the Parochus who has ordinary jurisdiction strictly so-called. There are none in England.

2. As England has not any canonically erected parishes, but only missions, the priests serving the districts are, for the purpose of this law, to be considered to be on the same level as Parochi, in virtue of the "cura animarum" committed to them by the Bishop in the faculties granted to them. Thus they become the valid assistants at all marriages "intra "limites dumtaxat sui territorii," whether the parties are or are not their subjects. As identical faculties are usually granted to both head priests and assistants in missions, some difficulty arises as to the powers of assistant priests, which Propaganda has been considering, and upon which an authoritative decision is expected. Meanwhile, it will be safe to follow what is in accordance with present practice: namely, that in each mission the head priest is the valid and lawful assistant at marriages; and that, with his authority and consent, the other priests of the mission, and other priests of the diocese, may lawfully and validly assist.

Section V. calls attention to the free state of those who contract marriage.—The banns must be published as heretofore. But most careful enquiries must be made into the freedom of each party; and such enquiry should extend back over a sufficient number of years, so that the priest may be morally certain of their freedom.

Section IX. introduces fresh duties:

1. As to the Register of Marriages.—The entry is now to be made by the priest in charge of the Registers; and therefore the form in our present Registers should be slightly altered, if need be, so as to read "conjunxit," and not "Ego conjunxi."

2. As to the Register of Baptisms.—This entirely new regulation is considered to be binding sub gravi, in exactly the same way as the regulation of making the usual entries in the Register of Marriages. The obligation is now imposed on the head priest of each mission of forwarding a notification of the marriage to the priest in charge of the parish or mission where each of the married parties was baptised. The object of this regulation is to provide a ready means, in the future, of discovering by reference to the Register of Baptisms whether parties who wish to contract marriage have at any time in their lives, or in any part of the world, been married to any one else.

Without express direction to the contrary, it must be presumed that the Episcopal officials of a diocese will not undertake to forward these notices of marriages to their destination, so that this duty will rest upon the local clergy.

The only satisfactory way of fulfilling this onerous duty will be for the clergy of the mission where a marriage is to be celebrated to insist that, as a preliminary to the marriage, each of the parties shall produce either a certificate of baptism, or a note from the priest of the church where the baptism took place, stating that he has ascertained by investigation that the party was baptised in that church. In the case of married converts, if they receive baptism on their reception into the Church, when the entry is made in the Register of their baptism, details should be added with respect to their marriage.

Until new Registers are in use, an entry must be made in the existing Registers according to the following form:

Ipse (or Ipsa) die mensis anni matrimonium contraxit cum in Ecclesia apud

Signed on behalf of the Bishops of the Province.

✠ FRANCIS, Archbishop of Westminster.

Decretum

De Sponsalibus et Matrimonio, iussu et Auctoritate SS. D. N. Pii Papae X., a S. Congregatione Concilii Editum.

Ne temere inirentur clandestina coniugia, quae Dei Ecclesia iustissimis de causis semper detestata est atque prohibuit, provide cavit Tridentinum Concilium, cap. I., Sess. XXIV. de reform. matrim. edicens: "Qui aliter quam praesente parocho vel alio sacerdote de ipsius parochi seu Ordinarii licentia et duobus vel tribus testibus matrimonium contrahere attentabunt, eos Sancta Synodus ad sic contrahendum omnino inhabiles reddit, et huiusmodi contractus irritos et nullos esse decernit."

Sed cum idem Sacrum Concilium praecepisset, ut tale decretum publicaretur in singulis paroeciis, nec vim haberet nisi iis in locis ubi esset promulgatum; accidit ut plura loca, in quibus publicatio illa facta non fuit, beneficio tridentinae legis caruerint, hodieque careant, et haesitationibus atque incommodis veteris disciplinae adhuc obnoxia maneant.

Verum nec ubi viguit nova lex, sublata est omnis difficultas. Saepe namque gravis exstitit dubitatio in decernenda persona parochi, quo praesente matrimonium sit contrahendum. Statuit quidem canonica disciplina, proprium parochum eum intelligi debere, cuius in paroecia domicilium sit, aut quasi domicilium alterutrius contrahentis. Veram quia nonnunquam difficile est iudicare, certo ne constet de quasi-domicilio, haud pauca matrimonia fuerunt obiecta periculo ne nulla essent: multa quoque, sive inscitia hominum sive fraude, illegitima prorsus atque irrita deprehensa sunt.

Haec dudum deplorata, eo crebrius accidere nostra aetate videmus, quo facilius ac celerius commeatus cum gentibus, etiam disiunctissimis, perficiuntur. Quamobrem sapientibus viris ac doctissimis visum est expedire ut mutatio aliqua induceretur in iure circa formam celebrandi connubii. Complures etiam sacrorum Antistites omni ex parte terrarum, praesertim e celebrioribus civitatibus, ubi gravior appareret necessitas, supplices ad id preces Apostolicae Sedi admoverunt.

Flagitatum simul est ab Episcopis, tum Europae plerisque, tum aliarum regionum, ut incommodis occurreretur, quae ex sponsalibus, id est mutuis promissionibus futuri matrimonii privatim initis, derivantur. Docuit enim experientia satis, quae secum pericula ferant eiusmodi sponsaliia: primum quidem incitamenta peccandi causamque cur nexpertae puellae decipiantur: postea dissidia ac lites inextricabiles.

His rerum adiunctis permotus SSmus D. N. Pius PP. X. pro ea quam gerit omnium Ecclesiarum sollicitudine, cupiens ad memorata damna et pericula removenda temperatione aliqua uti, commisit S. Congregationi Concilii ut de hac re videret, et quae opportuna aestimaret, Sibi proponeret.

Voluit etiam votum audire Consilii ad ius canonicum in unum redigendum constituti, nec non Emorum Cardinalium qui pro eodem codice parando speciali commissione delecti sunt: a quibus, quemadmodum et a S. Congregatione Concilii, conventus in eum finem saepius habiti sunt. Omnium autem sententiis obtentis SSmus Dominus S. Congregationi Concilii mandavit, ut decretum ederet quo leges a Se, ex certa scientia et matura deliberatione probatae, continerentur, quibus sponsalium et matrimonii disciplina in posterum regeretur, eorumque celebratio expedita, certa atque ordinata fieret.

In executionem itaque Apostolici mandati S. Concilii Congregatio praesentibus litteris constituit atque decernit ea quae sequuntur.

De Sponsalibus.

I. Ea tantum sponsalia habentur valida et canonicos sortiuntur effectus, quae contracta fuerint per scripturam subsignatam a partibus et vel a parocho, aut a loci Ordinario, vel saltem a duobus testibus.

Quod si utraque vel alterutra pars scribere nesciat, id in ipsa scriptura adnotetur; et alius testis addatur, qui cum parocho, aut loci Ordinario, vel duobus testibus, de quibus supra, scripturam subsignet.

II. Nomine parochi hic et in sequentibus articulis venit non solum qui legitime praeest paroeciae canonice erectae; sed in regionibus, ubi paroeciae canonice erectae non sunt, etiam sacerdos cui in aliquo definito territorio cura animarum legitime commissa est, et parocho aequiparatur; et in missionibus, ubi territoria necdum perfecte divisa sunt, omnis sacerdos a missionis Moderatore ad animarum curam in aliqua statione universaliter deputatus.

De Matrimonio.

III. Ea tantum matrimonia valida sunt, quae contrahuntur coram parocho vel loci Ordinario vel sacerdote ab alterutro delegato, et duobus saltem testibus, iuxta tamen regulas in sequentibus articulis expressas, et salvis exceptionibus quae infra n. VII. et VIII. ponuntur.

IV. Parochus et loci Ordinarius valide matrimonio adsistunt:

§ 1° die tantummodo adeptae possessionis beneficii vel initi officii, nisi publico decreto nominatim fuerint excommunicati vel ab officio suspensi.

§ 2° intra limites dumtaxat sui territorii: in quo matrimoniis nedum suorum subditorum, sed etiam non subditorum valide adsistunt.

§ 3° dummodo invitati ac rogati, et neque vi neque metu gravi constricti requirant excipiantque contrahentium consensum.

V. Licite autem adsistunt:

§ 1° constito sibi legitime de libero statu contrahentium, servatis de iure servandis.

§ 2° constito insuper de domicilio, vel saltem de menstrua commoratione alterutrius contrahentis in loco matrimonii.

§ 3° quod si deficiat, ut parochus et loci Ordinarius licite matrimonio adsint, indigent licentia parochi vel Ordinarii proprii alterutrius contrahentis, nisi gravis intercedat necessitas, quae ab ea excuset.

§ 4° quoad vagos, extra casum necessitatis parocho ne liceat eorum matrimoniis adsistere, nisi re ad Ordinarium vel ad sacerdotem ab eo delegatum delata, licentiam adsistendi impetraverit.

5° in quolibet autem casu pro regula habeatur, ut matrimonium coram sponsae parocho celebretur, nisi aliqua iusta causa excuset.

VI. Parochus et loci Ordinarius licentiam concedere possunt alio sacerdoti determinato ac certo, ut matrimoniis intra limites sui territorii adsistat.

Delegatus autem, ut valide et licite adsistat, servare tenetur limites mandati, et regulas pro parochus et loci Ordinario n. IV. et V. superius statutas.

VII. Imminente mortis periculo, ubi parochus, vel loci Ordinarius, vel sacerdos ab alterutro delegatus, haberi nequeat, ad consulendum conscientiae et (si casus ferat) legitimationi prolis, matrimonium contrahi valide ac licite potest coram quolibet sacerdote et duobus testibus.

VIII. Si contingat ut in aliqua regione parochus locive Ordinarius, aut sacerdos ab eis delegatus, coram quo matrimonium celebrari queat, haberi non possit, eaque rerum conditio a mense iam perseveret, matrimonium valide ac licite iniri potest emisso a sponsis formali consensu coram duobus testibus.

IX. § 1° Celebrato matrimonio, parochus, vel qui eius vices gerit, statim describat in libro matrimoniorum nomina coniugum ac testium, locum et diem celebrati matrimonii, atque alia, iuxta modum in libris ritualibus vel a proprio Ordinario praescriptum; idque licet alius sacerdos vel a se vel ab Ordinario delegatus matrimonio adstiterit.

§ 2° Praeterea parochus in libro quoque baptizatorum adnotet, coniugem tali die in sua parochia matrimonium contraxisse. Quod si coniux alibi baptizatus fuerit, matrimonii parochus notitiam iniit contractus ad parochum baptismi sive per se, sive per curiam episcopalem transmittat, ut matrimonium in baptismi libri referatur.

§ 3° Quoties matrimonium ad normam n. VII. aut VIII. contrahitur, sacerdos in priori casu, testes in altero, tenentur in solidum cum contrahentibus curare, ut initum coniugium in praescriptis libris quam primum adnotetur.

X. Parochi qui heic hactenus praescripta violaverint ab Ordinariis pro modo et gravitate culpae puniantur. Et insuper si alicuius matrimonio adstiterint contra praescriptum 2i et 3i n. V., emolumenta stolae sua ne faciant, sed proprio contrahentium parocho remittant.

XI. § 1° Statutis superius legibus tenentur omnes in catholica Ecclesia baptizati et ad eam ex haeresi aut schismate conversi (licet sive hi, sive illi ab eadem postea defecerint), quoties inter se sponsalia vel matrimonium ineant.

§ 2° Vigent quoque pro iisdem de quibus supra catholicis, si cum acatholicis sive baptizatis, sive non baptizatis, etiam post obtentam dispensationem ab impedimento mixtae religionis vel disparitatis cultus, sponsalia vel matrimonium contrahunt; nisi pro aliquo particulari loco aut regione aliter a S. Sede sit statutum.

§ 3° Acatholici sive baptizati sive non baptizati, si inter se contrahunt, nullibi ligantur ad catholicam sponsalium vel matrimonii formam servandam.

Praesens decretum legitime publicatum et promulgatum habeatur per eius transmissionem ad locorum Ordinarios; et quae in eo disposita sunt ubique vim legis habere incipiant a die solemni Paschae Resurrectionis D. N. I. C. proximi anni 1908.

Interim vero omnes locorum Ordinarii curent hoc decretum quamprimum in vulgus edi, et in singulis suarum diocesum parochialibus ecclesiis explicari, ut ab omnibus rite cognoscutur.

Praesentibus valituris de mandato speciali SSmi D. N. Pii PP. X., contrariis quibuslibet etiam peculiari mentione dignis minime obstantibus.

Datum Romae die 2a mensis Augusti anni 1907.

† VINCENTIUS Card. Ep. Praenest, Praefectus.

C. DE LAI, Secretarius.

DECREE CONCERNING SPONSALIA AND MATRIMONY.

Issued by the Sacred Congregation of the Council by the Order and with the Authority of Our Holy Father Pope PIUS X.

The Council of Trent, cap I., Sess. XXIV. de reform. matrim., made prudent provision against the rash celebration of clandestine marriages, which the Church of God for most just reasons has always detested and forbidden, by decreeing: "Those who otherwise than " in the presence of the parish priest himself or of " another priest acting with the licence of the parish " priest or of the Ordinary, and in the presence of " two or three witnesses, shall attempt to contract " matrimony, the Holy Synod renders them altogether " incapable of contracting marriage thus, and decrees " that contracts of this kind are null and void."

But as the same Sacred Council prescribed that the said Decree should be published in all the parishes and was not to have force except in those places in which it had been promulgated, it has happened that many places in which the publication has not been made have been deprived of the benefit of the Tridentine law, and are still without it, and continue to be subject to the doubts and inconveniences of the old discipline.

Nor has all difficulty been removed in those places where the new law has been in force. For often there has been grave doubt in deciding as to the person of the parish-priest before whom a marriage is to be celebrated. The canonical discipline did indeed decide that he is to be regarded as the parish-priest in whose parish one or other of the contracting parties has his or her domicile or quasi domicile. But as it is sometimes difficult to judge whether a quasi-domicile really exists in a specified case, not a few marriages were exposed to the danger of nullity; many too, either owing to ignorance or fraud, have been found to be quite illegitimate and void.

These deplorable results have been seen to happen more frequently in our own time on account of the increased facility and celerity of intercommunication between the different countries, even those more widely separated. It has therefore seemed expedient to wise and learned men to introduce some change into the law regulating the form of the celebration of marriage, and a great many Bishops in all parts of the world, but especially in the more populous states where the necessity appears more urgent, have petitioned the Holy See to this end.

It has been asked also by very many Bishops in Europe, as well by others in various regions, that provision should be made to prevent the inconveniences arising from sponsalia, that is mutual promises of marriage, privately entered upon. For experience has sufficiently shown the many dangers of such sponsalia, first as being an incitement to sin and causing the deception of inexperienced girls, and afterwards giving rise to inextricable dissensions and disputes.

Influenced by these circumstances, our Holy Father Pope Pius X. desiring, in the solicitude he bears for all the churches, to introduce some modifications with the object of removing these drawbacks and dangers, committed to the S. Congregation of the Council the task of examining into the matter and of proposing to himself the measures it should deem opportune.

He was pleased also to have the opinion of the commission appointed for the codification of Canon Law, as well as of the Eminent Cardinals chosen on this special commission for the preparation of the new code, by whom, as well as by the S. Congregation of the Council, frequent meetings have been held for this purpose. The opinions of all having been taken, His Holiness ordered the Sacred Congregation of the Council to issue a decree containing the laws approved by himself on sure knowledge and after mature deliberation, by which the discipline regarding sponsalia and marriage is to be regulated for the future and the celebration of them carried out in a sure and orderly manner.

In execution, therefore, of the Apostolic mandate the S. Congregation of the Council by these letters lays down and decrees as follows :—

Concerning Sponsalia.

I. Only those are considered valid and produce canonical effects which have been contracted in writing signed by both the parties and by either the parish-priest or the Ordinary of the place, or at least by two witnesses.

In case one or both the parties be unable to write, this fact is to be noted in the document and another witness is to be added who will sign the writing as above, with the parish-priest or the Ordinary of the place or the two witnesses.

II. Here and in the following articles, by parish-priest is to be understood not only a priest legitimately presiding over a parish canonically erected, but in regions where parishes are not canonically erected the priest to whom the care of souls has been legitimately entrusted in any specified district and who is equivalent to a parish-priest; and in missions where the territory has not yet been perfectly divided, every priest generally deputed by the superior of the mission for the care of souls in any station.

Concerning Marriage.

III. Only those marriages are valid which are contracted before the parish-priest or the Ordinary of the place or a priest delegated by either of these, and at least two witnesses, according to the rules laid down in the following articles, and saving the exceptions mentioned under VII. and VIII.

IV. The parish-priest and the Ordinary of the place validly assist at a marriage :—

(i) only from the day they have taken possession of the benefice or entered upon their office, unless they have been by a public decree excommunicated by name or suspended from office

(ii) only within the limits of their territory: within which they assist validly at marriages not only of their own subjects, but also of those not subject to them;

(iii) provided when invited and asked, and not compelled by violence or by grave fear, they demand and receive the consent of the contracting parties;

V. They assist licitly : —

(i) when they have legitimately ascertained the free state of the contracting parties, having duly complied with the conditions laid down by the law;

(ii) when they have ascertained that one of the contracting parties has a domicile or at least has lived for a month in the place where the marriage takes place;

(iii) if this condition be lacking, the parish-priest and the Ordinary of the place, to assist licitly at a marriage, require the permission of the parish-priest or the Ordinary of one of the contracting parties, unless it be a case of grave necessity which excuses from this permission;

(iv) concerning persons without fixed abode (vagos), except in case of necessity it is not lawful for a parish-priest to assist at their marriage, until they report the matter to the Ordinary or to a priest delegated by him and obtain permission to assist;

(v) in every case let it be held as the rule that the marriage is to be celebrated before the parish-priest of the bride, unless some just cause excuses from this.

VI. The parish-priest and the Ordinary of the place may grant permission to another priest, specified and certain, to assist at marriages within the limits of their district.

The delegated priest, in order to assist validly and licitly, is bound to observe the limits of his mandate and the rules laid down above, in IV. and V., for the parish-priest and the Ordinary of the place.

VII. When danger of death is imminent and where the parish-priest or the Ordinary of the place or a priest delegated by either of these cannot be had, in order to provide for the relief of conscience and (should the case require it) for the legitimation of offspring, marriage may be contracted validly and licitly before any priest and two witnesses.

VIII. Should it happen that in any region the parish-priest or the Ordinary of the place or a priest delegated by either of them, before whom marriage can be celebrated, is not to be had, and that this condition of things has lasted for a month, marriage may be validly and licitly entered upon by the formal declaration of consent made by the spouses in the presence of two witnesses.

IX.—(i) After the celebration of a marriage the parish-priest, or he who takes his place, is to write at once in the book of marriages the names of the couple and of the witnesses, the place and the day of the celebration of the marriage, and the other details, according to the method prescribed in the ritual books or by the Ordinary; and this even when another priest delegated either by the parish-priest himself or by the Ordinary has assisted at the marriage.

(ii) Moreover, the parish-priest is to note also in the book of baptisms, that the married person contracted marriage on such a day in his parish. If the married person has been baptised elsewhere the parish-priest who has assisted at the marriage is to transmit, either directly or through the episcopal curia, the announcement of the marriage that has taken place, to the parish-priest of the place where the person was baptised, in order that the marriage may be inscribed in the book of baptisms.

(iii) Whenever a marriage is contracted in the manner described in VII. and VIII., the priest in the former case, the witnesses in the latter are bound conjointly with the contracting parties to provide that the marriage be inscribed as soon as possible in the prescribed books.

X Parish-priests who violate the rules thus far laid down are to be punished by their Ordinaries according to the nature and gravity of their transgression. Moreover, if they assist at the marriage of anybody in violation of the rules laid down in (ii) and (iii) of No. V. they are not to appropriate the stole-fees, but must remit them to the parish-priest of the contracting parties.

XI.—(i) The above laws are binding on all persons baptised in the Catholic Church and on those who have been converted to it from heresy or schism (even when either the latter or the former have fallen away afterwards from the Church) whenever they contract sponsalia or marriage with one another.

(ii) The same laws are binding also on the same Catholics as above, if they contract sponsalia or marriage with non-Catholics, baptised or unbaptised, even after a dispensation has been obtained from the impediment mixta religionis or disparitatis cultus; unless the Holy See decree otherwise for some particular place or region.

(iii) Non-Catholics, whether baptised or unbaptised, who contract among themselves, are nowhere bound to observe the Catholic form of sponsalia or marriage.

The present decree is to be held as legitimately published and promulgated by its transmission to the Ordinaries, and its provisions begin to have the force of law from the solemn feast of the Resurrection of Our Lord Jesus Christ, next year 1908.

Meanwhile let all the Ordinaries of places see that this decree be made public as soon as possible, and explained in the different parochial churches of their dioceses in order that it may be known by all.

These presents are to have force by the special order of our Most Holy Father Pope Pius X., all things to the contrary, even those worthy of special mention, notwithstanding.

Given at Rome on the 2nd day of August in the year 1907.

† VINCENT, Card. Bishop of Palestrina, Prefect.
C. DE LAI, Secretary.

ILLMĒ AC RMĒ DOMINE.

Post latum a S. Congregatione Concilii die 2 mensis Augusti superioris anni, iussu et auctoritate SS. D. N. Pii PP. X. Decretum "Ne temere" de Sponsalibus et Matrimonio, quamplures Ordinarii huic S. Consilio Propagandae Fidei subiecti petierunt utrum vim suam adhuc retineret Declaratio a Benedicto PP. XIV. data die 4 Novembris anni 1741 pro matrimoniis in Foederatis Belgii provinciis inter haereticos contractis et contrahendis, quae deinde a S. Sede multis aliis regionibus extensa fuit. Haec Ordinariorum petitio cum iudicio EE. Patrum S. Congregationis Concilii subiecta fuerit in causa Romana et Aliarum, iidem E.E. Patres in generali conventu habito die 1 Februarii u. p. ad Dubium IV.: "An sub art. XI. § 2, in exceptione "ennuciata illis verbis 'nisi pro aliquo particulari loco "aut regione aliter a S. Sede sit statutum' comprehendatur tantummodo Constitutio Provida Pii P P. X.; "an potius comprehendantur quoque Constitutio Benedictina et cetera eiusmodi indulta impedimentum "clandestinitatis respicientia" respondendum censuere: "Comprehendi tantummodo Constitutionem Provida; "non autem comprehendi alia quaecumque Decreta, facto "verbo cum Sanctissimo": quae resolutio a SSmo Dño. Nro. confirmata et approbata fuit.

Haec pro meo munere cum Amplitudine Tua communico, et precor Deum ut Te diu sospitem incolumemque servet.

Datum Romae ex Aedibus S. C. de Propaganda Fide die 5 Martii 1908.

Amplitudinis Tuae
addictissimus servus
HIERONYMUS CARD. GOTTI, Praefectus
ALOISIUS VECCIA, Secretarius.

OBSERVATIONS UPON THE DECREE "NE TEMERE."

The Decree "Ne Temere" was issued by the Holy See on August 2nd 1907, and came into force generally on Easter day, April 19th 1908. (A delay was granted for Scotland until September 1st 1908, and for all China, until Easter 1909.)

(1) It is binding upon all Catholics, except Uniates (Catholics of the Oriental rites) and Catholics in any particular countries "for which the Holy See has otherwise ordered." This last exception applies to Catholics in the German Empire for which the Holy See only a short time before (January 1906) had already provided new marriage regulations in the Bull "Provida." This exemption and special provision has been extended to Catholics in the Austro-Hungarian Empire.

The Decree Ne Temere does not affect in any way the marriage contracts of Non-Catholics between themselves.

The Decree bears upon—

(a) Promises of marriage that are called espousals or Sponsalia, and

(b) Marriages in which both parties and Catholics or one party is Catholic (viz., mixed marriages).

(2) The gist of the Decree—

1. Espousals, viz., solemn promises of marriage between Catholics—or between a Catholic and a non-Catholic—are declared to be canonically invalid, unless they are—
   (a) made in writing, and signed by the parties,
   (b) and signed either by the parish priest, or at least by two witnesses.
2. Marriages between Catholics, or between a Catholic and a non-Catholic (mixed marriages) are declared to be invalid,* unless—
   (a) the marriage be celebrated before the Catholic bishop or priest of the place, or a priest delegated by him,
   (b) in the presence of at least two witnesses.

(3) Espousals (sponsalia) are promises of marriage to be contracted at a future time.

Such promises, if solemnly made and accepted between qualified persons have entailed in Church law certain canonical effects, viz.:—

1. The parties are so bound to each other that the marriage of either to any other person is barred or prohibited. (The bar is merely prohibitive, and not diriment or invalidating, so that if either party did marry another person, the marriage, although sinful, would be valid.)

---

* When the Church declares a marriage to be null and invalid, it does not follow that she declares the children of the marriage to be illegitimate. In Canon Law, the children of an invalid marriage are held to be legitimate, if either of the two parties has contracted the marriage in good faith and believing it to be valid. Cf. De Angelis. Praelectiones Juris Canonici, vol. III., p. 270.

2. The parties are so bound to each other, that if either party marry any blood-relation of the other in the first degree, such marriage is invalid.

(4) The result of the new Decree "Ne Temere" is to require that all such espousals or promises of marriage between Catholics, or between a Catholic and a non-Catholic, shall be made by the parties—

1. in writing,
2. and attested by the parish priest, or at least two witnesses.

And that such espousals or promises not fulfilling these conditions are in the law of the Church invalid and deprived of the canonical effects above mentioned.

(5) This invalidity the Church affirms to be in the sphere of conscience and of Church law. It involves no incursion on the domain of civil law, which in this country is quite independent of Catholic Canon law. The Civil law is free within its own sphere to treat such promises of marriage according to its own principles of contract, to determine their validity according to its own standards, and to punish by civil penalties all breaches of law or justice from its own point of view.

(6) The right of the Church to determine for her members in these matters the conditions of canonical validity, viz., validity in conscience, and in the sight of God, is based upon her claim to have Divine Authority over Christian Marriage as a Sacrament, and therein over the contract which is its basis, as well as over the contract of espousals which is prefatory to it.

(7) While the Church teaches that she holds from God this power for the good of the Christian people, she teaches that her laws can never override, or be meant to override, any right or obligation of natural justice. Thus, in cases in which A, a Catholic, has made a promise of marriage either to B, a Catholic, or to C, a non-Catholic, outside of the required conditions, the Church holds that such promise is invalid in Church law, and in conscience, but that, in so far as A, by non-fulfilment of the promise, has inflicted injury on B or C, he is bound in conscience to make all due compensation for such injury, and that he cannot be absolved by the Church, or admitted to Sacraments, until he has pledged himself to do so. Thus Cardinal Gennari, in his commentary upon the Decree, says "It "does not follow that the deceiver of another in this "matter is under no obligation in conscience. He is "bound to make reparation for all the injuries he has "caused through his invalid promise, and he may not "be absolved until he has made this reparation." Commento. p. 20.

(8) The same obligation of conscience applies to cases of marriages which are invalid, by non-fulfilment of the conditions required by the Decree.

(9) The purpose and object of the Decree as well as the separate provision made for the German Empire, and extended (23rd February 1909) to the Kingdom of Hungary, can be best understood from the following facts:—

(a) From the earliest times: it had been the rule and custom of the Catholic people to have their marriages blessed by a priest in their churches.

(b) Nevertheless, before the time of the Council of Trent (1563), marriages made, not in church, but privately by the parties themselves, each taking the other, were held by the Church to be valid, if, upon other grounds, no invalidating impediment existed. Such clandestine marriages were discouraged and forbidden, but if made and proved, they were recognised as valid.

(c) The reason of this recognition lay in the fact that the Church teaches that marriage is a sacrament, in which the contracting parties themselves are the ministers, and that they administer this Sacrament to themselves to their mutual consent, and that the officiating priest is only the witness, and not the effector of the sacrament.

(d) Many evils and abuses in the course of time were found to arise from these clandestine marriages, which were liable to be disavowed by the parties later on, or to become incapable of being juridically proved owing to death or absence of witnesses. For this reason, the Holy See at the Council of Trent felt bound to take order against the evil, and the Christian States, notably France, urged strongly upon the Council the necessity of treating as invalid all clandestine marriages.

(e) It was felt to be necessary in the interest of society, that all marriages, under pain of nullity, should be celebrated before some official authority. The proposition that marriages might be celebrated before any three witnessss or before public notaries was rejected in favour of the plan that the parish priest of the parties should be one of the required witnesses on the grounds that the parish priest was the more competent judge as to Church marriage law, and that the marriages thus celebrated before him would be public in the highest sense as celebrated and attested "before the face of the Church" as a sacramental act ought to be.

(f) At the same time, the Council wished to safeguard the liberty of contract, and refused to enact as a condition of validity that the parish priest should "preside over the marriage," and even though the Ambassadors of the French King were most pressing upon this point, the Church would only consent to require that the marriage should be contracted in the presence of the parish priest of the parties, and at least two other witnesses. (Pallavicini, Istoria del Concilio di Trento. V. 8.)

(g) The Council of Trent (Session xxiv., c. 1) thus issued the Decree well-known as Tametsi, which declared clandestinity to be in future an invalidating impediment to marriage, and that a marriage, under pain of nullity, must be celebrated in the presence of the parish priest of the contracting parties and at least two witnesses.

(h) As in 1563, when this Decree (Tametsi) was made, many countries had already separated from the Church and followed the Reformation, the Council, out of consideration of the difficulties which might be created in non-Catholic Countries, caused that it should be promulgated only in those countries in which the bulk of the population was Catholic, and that in mixed districts it should not come into force until 30 days after promulgation, so that Protestants living in such districts would have time to form themselves into a separate congregation and so exempt themselves from the effect of the promulgation.

(i) It thus came to pass that over a large area of the Catholic Church—representing broadly the Catholic nations—the marriage law was regulated by the decree Tametsi, and in it marriages of Catholics and mixed marriages not celebrated before the Catholic parish priest were adjudged to be not only sinful but invalid.

(j) At the same time, over another area—representing broadly the non-Catholic countries or districts—the marriage law continued to be regulated by the Pre-Tridentine legislation, and in it, marriages of Catholics or mixed marriages not celebrated before the Catholic parish priest were adjudged sinful, but valid.

(k) This latter or non-Tametsi area, in which the Decree of Trent was not promulgated, included England, Scotland, Prussia, and Protestant States of Germany and Cantons of Switzerland Norway, Sweden and Denmark, Turkish Empire, Abyssinia, a great part of the United States, and some parts of Canada.

(l) This area was further exteuded by the action of the Holy See. Pope Benedict XIV. issued a Declaration (4th November 1741) to the effect that in the Federated States of Holland and Belgium, the Decree Tametsi, although promulgated under Philip II., was to be taken as not promulgated owing to the altered political and religious circumstances of the country, and that consequently mixed marriages not celebrated before the Catholic priest were to be recognised as valid.

(m) This Declaration, known as the Benedictine Declaration, was extended to other countries, viz., to Ireland (in 1795), Hungary, Bavaria, Prussian Poland, Russia and Russian Poland, Canada, parts of United States, and certain Catholic districts in Germany and Rhine Provinces.

(n) On January 18th, 1906, with a view towards the simplification of the Canon law, in Germany, where the Tametsi and non-Tametsi area was much mixed, the present Pope issued a Bull ("Provida"), by which—

1. All marriages between Catholics in the German Empire must, under pain of nullity, be celebrated before the Catholic parish priest, as required by the Decree Tametsi.

2. Marriages between Protestants and mixed marriages are recognised as illicit but valid.

(o) In August 1907, as many questions were found to arise in many parts of the world as to domicile and as to who was the parish priest of the contracting parties, and as to delegation of his authority, the Holy See, with a view to meet these difficulties and to simplify the law, issued the Decree Ne Temere, by which Catholics can contract marriage before the Catholic parish priest of the place, and such celebration is required for Catholics under pain of nullity, whether the marriage be between Catholics or a mixed marriage.

(p) As only a few months before (January 1906) arrangements had been made with Germany, and a simplification of the law had already been provided under the Bull "Provida," the Holy See, in issuing the Decree Ne Temere, exempted from certain provisions as to mixed marriages "any particular place or country "for which the Holy See had otherwise "regulated" (nisi pro aliquo particulari "loco aut regione aliter a S. Seda sit statu- "tum."—Decree Ne Temere, XI., 2).

(q) More recently (23rd February 1909) the exemption provided for the German Empire has been extended to the Kingdom of Hungary.

(10.) The motives of the Ne Temere Decree have been—

1. To simplify and unify the Catholic marriage law throughout the world, and obviate doubts and uncertainties implicated by the requirements of domicile.

2. To make certain the conditions of espousals, and thus prevent the evils complained of in many parts of the Catholic world, by which innocent girls have been deceived and misled by fictitious or merely verbal promises of marriage.

(11) The following are standard authors upon the subject:—

The New Matrimonial Legislation, by the Rev. T. Crouin, D.D., Vice-Rector of the English College, Rome. 8vo. pp. 340. (R. and T. Washbourne.)

De Forma Sponsalium ac Matrimonii post Decretum "Ne Temere." Rev. Arthurno Vermeersch, S.J., Professor I.C. Lovanii. 8vo. pp. 75. (Lethielleux, Paris.)

Commentarius im Decretum "Ne Temere." Rev. Ludovicus Wouters, C.S.S.R. 8vo. pp. 64. Amsterdam (C. L. Van Langenhuysen).

Le Mariage et les Fiançailles, Commentaire du Décret "Ne Temere," par l'Abbé Boudinhon, professeur à l'Institut Catholique de Paris. 8vo. pp. 132. (Lethielleux, Paris.)

Die Verlobungs-und Eheschliessungsform nach dem Dekrete "Ne Temere." Prof. Leitner. (Regensburg.)

Les Espousales y el Matrimonio Segum la novíssima disciplina. R. P. Ferreres. (Barcelona.)

Breve Commento della nuova legge sugli Sponsali e sul Matrimonio. Cardinal Gennari. (Rome.)

Die neuen eherechtlichen Dekrete "Ne Temere" und "Provida." R. D. Aug. Knecht. (Cologne.)

I. MOYES.

Cathedral Clergy House,
Westminster,
March 10th, 1911.

APPENDIX XV.

NOTE BY SIR JAMES CRICHTON-BROWNE.

In my memorandum submitted, I set forth that to recognise insanity of any kind or duration, as under any circumstances a valid ground for the disruption of the conjugal tie, would, in my opinion, be to encourage imprudence in marriage, conduce to instability of the matrimonial state, and to still further impair the sanctity of family life.

Insanity is simply a bodily disease, manifesting itself in mental derangement, and although by reason of the many disabilities it involves it interferes more than most other diseases with married life, the question is merely one of degree, and if it be once admitted that disabling disease of any kind is to justify divorce, it would, it seems to me, be impossible to continue to draw the line at diseases of the highest nervous centres. To allow any disease, no matter what its nature or extent, to annul a mutual contract explicitly or tacitly acknowledged hitherto by all who enter into it to be "for better and for worse, in sickness and in health," would be, it seems to me, to truckle to selfishness and to undermine those altruistic sentiments which have played so great a part in human progress, and to be in some measure a reversion to the ruthlessness of savage life. It would also be to lift divorce generally into a less objectionable position than it has hitherto occupied by associating it with infirmity, and so reducing the stigma which now attaches to it as being invariably connected with vice.

I do not suggest that anyone contemplating matrimony would make the deliberate calculation "if my "intended husband or wife should hereafter go mad I "can divorce him or her" would weigh. But the knowledge that in such an event divorce would be practicable must in some measure diminish the sense of responsibility with which marriage is and ought to be contracted. To provide remedies for the consequences of rash or inconsiderate conduct is to discount caution and self-control, and to allow divorce on the ground of insanity would be to withdraw one check on injudicious marriage, just in these cases in which in the interests of the community it is most desirable it should be maintained, where, for instance, a family predisposition to insanity exists on one side or on the other, or on both. So all who are capable of looking "before and after," that indissolubility of marriage is one of the guaranties that it will be undertaken with discretion. Just in proportion to the difficulty in setting it aside will, I think, be the circumspection with which its obligations will be undertaken. It is desirable by all possible means to increase care and forethought in marriage selection.

No doubt it is a grievous fate for any man or woman to be bound to a helpmate who is no longer helpful, in some cases to be linked to what is practically a corpse; but sadness and suffering wait on all forms of disease and are not without their compensations, for they often elicit and foster fine moral qualities. I have seen many instances of most touching and heroic devotion displayed by a wife towards a husband, or a husband towards a wife, stricken with life-long insanity. The faithfulness of sane towards insane spouses has been in my experience quite remarkable, and I do not believe that if divorce on account of insanity were legalised to-morrow it would be taken advantage of to any considerable extent. A few selfish, heartless, or indifferent persons might avail themselves of the opportunity of shaking off their bonds, but I am under the impression that the demand for divorce in insanity has arisen not so much from those who suffer from existing limitations, but from doctrinaire reformers, and short-sighted philanthropists. And that social sentiment, amongst the humble classes at any rate would be against it and restrict resort to it.

It is unquestionably hard that a man of perhaps straitened means, or a wage earner, should have to contribute for years to the maintenance of an insane wife in an asylum, while he has also to pay for supplying her place in the household. But it would be hard, also, that he should be able by divorce to throw on the rates the cost of maintenance of his lawful wedded wife simply because she is suffering from incurable disease; and if divorce on the ground of insanity did not carry with it relief from maintenance charges, then I believe it would be but little resorted to by the humble classes. It is hard that a father perhaps in straitened circumstances has to contribute to the support of a child in a lunatic asylum, and that a son should have to contribute to the support of a father, but I have not heard it suggested that filial and paternal obligation should be wiped out by mental disease.

But whatever might be the relief, pecuniary or domestic, afforded to a few husbands and wives of chronic lunatics, what would be the effect of such legislation on their children where there are any? Disastrous I do not doubt. Childreu often remain tenderly attached to an insane parent, even after years of insanity, and would resent divorce as an indignity to that parent and to themselves. Constant suspicions as to the sane parents' intentions would be introduced into family circles, and when effect was given to these intentions, the family circle would sometimes be broken up. The position of the unoffending children would often be painful and intolerable, and the difficulty of the stepmother's rôle would be considerable. And what would be the effect of such legislation on the insane generally? Disastrous, again, I feel sure. It would deepen the shadow that already rests and must always rest on our lunatic asylums, and would add a new slur and pang to insanity, already opprobrious and distressing enough. Many lunatics, and especially recent and acute cases are hypersensitive, and the possibility of divorce in course of time would in many instances mingle with their delusions, and retard their recovery, if indeed it did not prevent it altogether. In case of divorce proceedings being taken on the ground of insanity it would, I presume, be necessary to serve notice on the lunatic from whom divorce was sought. In a number of cases the notice or citation would not be understood or attended, but there are many chronic lunatics who, although lunatic, would be able to grasp its meaning, and to them it would be an aggravation of their sufferings. Some of them entirely denying their own insanity would regard it as a wanton outrage. Although insanity is for the most part highly egotistic, some chronic lunatics retain undimmed their family affections, and to them the divorce notice would be humiliating, distressing, and cruel.

If insanity is to justify divorce then à fortiori, dipsomania and habitual drunkenness should do so, as in their etiology there is generally more of a voluntary element. In some of the United States drunkenness is accepted as a ground for divorce. The insurmountable difficulty must be to determine what constitutes habitual drunkenness? What frequency of intoxication amounts to it. I have known spells of habitual drunkenness with complete recovery. In many cases to divorce and disgrace the alleged habitual drunkard would be to extinguish saving grace and seal his or her ruin where that was not already sealed.

As regards divorce generally—apart from lunacy—I am not entitled to express an opinion any more than the man in the street, but I cannot help thinking that instead of allowing greater laxity in divorce and popularising it, the sound policy in the long run would be to abolish it altogether, and to hold men and women to their matrimonial bargains, however foolish or bad they may be. I am aware that that is not at present within the range of practical politics. The abolition would, in many cases, cause hardship and misery, but it is expedient that a few hundreds should suffer for the people. The trend of public opinion is, I suppose, at present, in the opposite direction, towards giving greater facilities for divorce, and granting it on grounds not hitherto recognised. That there is some lowering and materialization of the conception of marriage is, I think, indicated by the continuous decrease during the last 60 years of marriages solemnized in places of worship; and by the continuous increase of civil marriages in the office of the Superintendent-Registrar.

Increased facilities for divorce would, I fear, put the thought of it in the minds of married people when it would not otherwise occur to them on trifling differences and irritations. One becomes reconciled to the inevitable but is prone to fidget under terminable worries.

No doubt pitiful blunders are made in entering into the marriage contract, unforeseen difficulties are encountered, cruel desecrations of its vows and abandonment of its most hallowed duties occur. In many cases unspeakable individual relief would be afforded by the judicial severance of its bonds, and yet, from my point of view, it would be for the benefit of the community at large that it should be held inviolable. Nothing should, in my opinion, be done to weaken its obligations, or diminish its solemnity, for the easier the annulment is made, the more lightly will it be covenanted, the less scrupulous will be the observance of these conditions upon which its success and happiness depend. This has, I understand, been found to be the case in these American states, in which divorce has been made cheap and easy.

Ideals still count for much, and our object should be to idealise marriage, and raise it above the level of mere actual cohabitation, or a business co-partnery. It is a good old superstition that the wedding ring should never be taken off, as a symbol of fixity of tenure.

The total abolition of divorce would put an end to these suggestive and prurient newspaper reports of divorce cases which are admittedly pernicious in their effects.

APPENDIX XVI.

RETURNS SUPPLIED TO THE COMMISSION BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS AS TO LAW AND PRACTICE WITH REFERENCE TO THE PUBLICATION OF REPORTS IN CERTAIN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Royal Commission on Divorce and
Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square,
January 12th, 1910.

SIR,

I HAVE been directed to ask whether you will be good enough to cause inquiries to be made in foreign countries as to "whether there are any, and if "so, what laws, regulations, or rules dealing with the "publication in the public Press of reports of pro-"ceedings in divorce and matrimonial causes," since the question of the publication in the Press of such reports in this country is one which has been referred to this Commission for consideration, and it is deemed of importance to know what are the provisions of other countries with reference thereto. Annexed is a list of those countries as to the laws of which I venture to suggest inquiries might be made, the result of which would be of considerable assistance to this Commission.

I am also desirous of obtaining the same information with regard to the various States of the United States of America. With regard to this Mr. Secretary Gladstone has recently supplied for the use of the Commission a "Special Report of the Census Office—Marriage and Divorce, 1867–1906," prepared by the Department of Commerce and Labour Bureau of the Census at Washington, and I apprehend that probably that department would, on inquiries being made of it, be able and willing to supply the required information, and this appears to me to be the most convenient method by which it can be obtained. I am not, however, sure whether a request of this character should be addressed to you or to Mr. Secretary Gladstone. Perhaps you will be good enough to inform me whether the above suggestion appears feasible, and, if so, with whom I ought to communicate with the view of attaining that object.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Signed) H. GORELL BARNES,
Secretary.

The Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs,
Foreign Office,
Whitehall, S.W.

Austria-Hungary.	Norway.
Belgium.	Portugal.
Denmark.	Russia.
France.	Spain.
Germany.	Sweden.
Greece.	Switzerland.
Italy.	United States.
Netherlands.

Foreign Office,
SIR, January 18th, 1910.

I AM directed by Secretary Sir E. Grey to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 12th instant, requesting that inquiries may be made in certain foreign countries as to "whether there are any, "and if so, what laws, regulations, or rules dealing "with the publication in the public Press of reports of "proceedings in divorce and matrimonial causes."

In reply, I am to inform you that, in accordance with your request, His Majesty's representatives at Vienna, Brussels, Copenhagen, Paris, Berlin, Athens, Rome, The Hague, Christiania, Lisbon, St. Petersburg, Madrid, Stockholm, and Berne have been instructed to furnish a report on any laws, regulations, or rules concerning this subject which may exist in the country to the Government of which they are accredited.

I am to add that His Majesty's Ambassador at Washington has been instructed to inquire of the United States Government whether the information desired by the Royal Commission can be obtained with regard to the various States of the Union.

I am, Sir,
Your most obedient humble servant,
(Signed) W. LANGLEY.

The Secretary,
Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, S.W.

AUSTRIA.

Consular, No. 3.
SIR, Vienna, January 26th, 1910.

WITH reference to your circular despatch of this series of the 18th instant, I have the honour to report that, according to the law of Austria, all divorce and matrimonial causes must take place in public, and the proceedings may consequently be published in the Press.

Exceptions to this rule are, however, provided for in the following paragraph (section 172 of the Law No. 113 of August 1, 1895), which runs as follows:—

"The proceedings are not to be conducted in public, if morality or public order appear to be endangered thereby, or if there is reasonable ground for apprehension that publicity may be misused with the object of disturbing the proceedings or of interfering with the conduct of the case.

"The Court may moreover on the appeal of one only of the parties exclude the proceedings from publicity if private family affairs have to be proved or discussed in order to settle the dispute.

"Publicity may be excluded for the whole or part of the proceedings; but in every case the verdict must be given in public. In so far as publicity is excluded from the proceedings the publications of those proceedings is also forbidden."

It will thus be seen that the advisability of conducting any proceedings in private lies within the jurisdiction of the Court. The publication in the Press of any such proceedings is punishable under section 309 of the Austrian Penal Code by imprisonment from one to three months. Any proceedings not conducted in private may be published without restriction in the Press.

I have the honour to be, with the highest respect,
Sir,
Your most obedient, humble servant,
(Signed) FAIRFAX L. CARTWRIGHT.

The Right Hon. Sir E. Grey, Bart., M.P.,
&c. &c. &c.

BELGIUM.

Consular, No. 7.
SIR, Brussels, January 20th, 1910.

WITH reference to your circular despatch of this series (1436) of the 18th instant with regard to the publication in the public Press of reports of proceedings in divorce and matrimonial causes, I am informed by the Legal Adviser to His Majesty's Legation that there are no special laws or regulations in Belgium on this subject. The Press being free, any journalist may report what is said in open court, though if the report is incorrect the damaged party can bring an action against the paper. As a rule the Belgium Press does not report divorce cases unless they present a real and special public interest, and even then the names are not mentioned. The witnesses in Belgian divorce cases are heard in camera, and therefore no report of their evidence can get into the Press unless a lawyer gives it, which is entirely against the etiquette of the Bar, and there is believed to be no instance of such a thing happening.

I should point out that divorces are frequently granted in Belgium for incompatibility of temper or by mutual consent, and these cases being undefended give no opportunity for Press reports.

I have the honour to be, with the highest respect,
Sir,
Your most obedient, humble servant,
(Signed) ARTHUR H. HARDINGE.

The Right Hon. Sir E. Grey, Bart., M.P.,
&c. &c. &c.

DENMARK.

Consular, No. 5.
SIR, Copenhagen, February 21st, 1910.

WITH reference to your circular despatch in this series (1436/10) of the 18th ultimo, requesting information as to whether any "laws, regulations or "rules dealing with the publication in the public "Press of reports of proceedings in divorce and "matrimonial causes" exist in Denmark, I have the honour to enclose, herewith, copy of a note which I have received from Monsieur Scavenius, stating that there are no laws or regulations of that nature in Danish legislation.

His Excellency proceeds to explain that in Denmark matrimonial causes are very seldom carried before the courts of law, divorces being pronounced by the administrative authorities.

I have the honour to be, with the highest respect.
Sir,
Your most obedient, humble servant.
(Signed) ALAN JOHNSTONE.

The Right Hon. Sir E. Grey, Bart., M.P.,
&c. &c. &c.

Enclosure in Sir A. Johnstone's No. 5 Consular of February 21st, 1910.

Copenhague, le 19 février 1910.

MONSIEUR LE MINISTRE,

PAR sa note en date du 23 janvier dr. M. Vaughan a exprimé le desir de savoir si en Danemark il y a des règles et prescriptions à l'égard de la publication dans la presse des rapports sur la procédure dans les causes matrimoniales.

En réponse, j'ai l'honneur de vous faires connaître qu'il n'existe pas de règles ou prescriptions de cette nature dans la legislation danoise. Cela s'explique par le fait que les litiges matrimoniaux ne sont portés devant les tribunaux que très rarement.

En effet, les divorces sont soumis—pour la plupart—à la décision administrative et les séparations de corps et de biens ne trouvent leur solution que par cette voie. En outre est à remarquer que dans les rares cas où une affaire de divorce est portée devant les tribunaux, la procédure n'est orale qu'à la cour suprême, et que cette cour est autorisée à décréter le huit-clos lorsqu'elle le juge convenable.

Veuillez agréer, &c.,

(Signed) ERIK SCAVENIUS.

Sir Alan Johnstone,
Ministre de Sa Majesté Britannique.

FRANCE.

Consular, No. 5.

SIR, Paris, January 27th, 1910.

IN compliance with the instructions contained in your circular despatch of this series of the 18th instant (1436/10), I have the honour to transmit to you herewith a memorandum in regard to the laws and regulations in force in France in regard to the publication in the public Press of reports of proceedings in divorce and matrimonial cases.

I have the honour to be, with great truth and respect, Sir,

Your most obedient, humble servant,

(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

The Right Hon. Sir Edward Grey, Bart, M.P.,
&c. &c. &c.

MEMORANDUM.

Publication in the Press of Proceedings in Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in France.

The publication in the Press of proceedings in divorce causes is prohibited by Article 239 of the Civil Code, which states that:

> "The publication in the Press of proceedings in actions for divorce is prohibited under penalty of a fine of from Fr. 100 (4*l.*) to Fr. 2,000 (80*l.*) as provided by Article 39 of the Law of July 30, 1881."

This is the principal law relating to the Press, and Article 39 is worded as follows:—

> " . . . . In all civil causes the Courts and Tribunals may prohibit the report of the proceedings. Such prohibition shall not be applicable to the judgments, which may always be published. It is similarly forbidden to report the private deliberations of the jury or of the Courts and Tribunals. Every infraction of these provisions is punishable by a fine of from Fr. 100 to Fr. 2,000."

This prohibition is made applicable to actions for separation by Article 307 of the Civil Code.

In either case the publication is permitted of all judgments, either preparatory, interlocutory or on the merits, and it has been held that it is also permissible to publish such portions of the pleadings as may be of interest from a juridical point of view.

Applications for the conversion of judgments of separation into judgments of divorce are argued in Chambers to which the public is not admitted.

The Tribunal in whose jurisdiction publication has taken place is alone competent to deal with infractions of the laws above-mentioned.

Paris, January 27th, 1910.

GERMANY.

Consular, No. 14.

SIR, Berlin, March 2nd, 1910.

WITH reference to your circular despatch (1436/10) of the 18th January last, relative to the regulations in force in Germany dealing with the publication in the public Press of reports of proceedings in divorce and matrimonial causes, I have the honour to inform you that I have received a Note Verbale from the Imperial Foreign Office in reply to the enquiry which I addressed to them on the subject.

The Note Verbale states that, in the absence of special Imperial legal regulations, Press reports of Divorce Court proceedings are only subject to the general provisions laid down in the Criminal Code (Strafgesetzbuch). In this connection section 184*b* may be noted, by which a fine not exceeding 300 marks or imprisonment not exceeding six months is inflicted for the publication of legal proceedings which, for the sake of public morality, have been held in camera, or for publishing from official documents connected with these proceedings anything which may be of a vexatious nature.

I have the honour to be, with the highest respect, Sir,

Your most obedient, humble servant,

(Signed) W. E. GOSCHEN.

The Right Hon. Sir Edward Grey, Bart., M.P.,
&c. &c. &c.

GREECE.

Consular, No. 4.

SIR, Athens, February 15th, 1910.

IN reply to your circular despatch of this series of the 18th ultimo, inquiring "whether there are any, "and if so, what laws, regulations, or rules dealing with "the publication in the public Press of reports of "proceedings in divorce and matrimonial causes," I have the honour to report that there are no such laws, regulations, nor rules in Greece.

Article 14 of the Constitution, however, provides that any person has the right to publish his opinions . . . . in the Press, provided only that he observe the laws of the State, while Article 21 of the Press Law of the 6th/18th of September 1833 prohibits the publication of anything hurtful to religion or to public morals.

It would seem that it would thus be possible under the combined provisions of the Constitution and the Press Law of 1833 to suppress the publication of reports of proceedings in divorce cases on the ground of their being harmful to public morals, but I may state that in the course of my long experience in this country I cannot remember ever having seen such reports in the newspapers.

I have the honour to be, with the highest respect, Sir,

Your most obedient, humble servant,

(Signed) F. ELLIOT.

The Right Hon. Sir Edward Grey, Bart., M.P.,
&c. &c. &c.

ITALY

Consular, No. 7.

SIR, Rome, April 4th, 1910.

WITH reference to your circular despatch consular of January 18th, I have the honour to enclose herewith a translation of a note which I have received from the Italian Government containing the desired information with regard to the laws and regulations dealing with the publication in the Press of proceedings in matrimonial causes.

The information has reference only to causes for judicial separation, as there is no divorce in Italy.

I have the honour to be, with the highest respect, Sir,

Your most obedient, humble servant,

(Signed) RENNELL RODD.

The Right Hon. Sir E. Grey, Bart., M.P.,
&c. &c. &c.

(Translation.)

Rome, March 22nd, 1910.

MONSIEUR L'AMBASSADEUR,

WITH reference to the note of January 21st last, in which your Excellency desired from me information in regard to the rules which in Italy govern the publication of reports of proceedings in suits for legal separation between married persons, I have the honour to make the following communication :—

It is necessary first of all to point out that a distinction is drawn in regard to proceedings with a view to personal separation between married persons, according as to whether it is a question of voluntary separation (Civil Code, Article 158; Code of Civil Procedure, Article 811), or of contentious proceedings (Civil Code, Article 149 and following; Code of Civil Procedure, Articles 806–810). In the case of both these classes of proceedings, the president of the tribunal has to hear the parties and endeavour to reconcile them; this takes place without any publicity, the parties being forbidden even to invoke the assistance of solicitors or of counsel. If a reconciliation is effected a procès verbal of the same is drawn up and signed by the parties concerned, the president, and the clerk. Otherwise, if it is a question of voluntary separation, the failure of the attempt at reconciliation is recorded in the procès verbal, and the tribunal, sitting in camera, is called upon to ratify the separation mutually agreed to. Only in the case of contentious proceedings, after the effort to reconcile has failed, does the president remand the parties to a public hearing of the court.

Consequently there is no special regulation in Italy governing the publication in newspapers of reports of separation proceedings. A provision of a general nature (Article 10 of the Edict regarding the Press, 26th March 1848, No. 695) only forbids the publication of trials before magistrates or courts, which have taken place with closed doors in virtue of Article 52 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that "when publicity may be dangerous to "public order or morals by reason of the nature of "the case . . . . the judicial Authority, on the request "of the public prosecutor or of its own motion, order "the discussion to take place with closed doors. The "measure is announced in public audience, and "inserted, together with the reasons for its adoption, "in the procès verbal of the hearing." This provision, however, concerns the discussion and not the sentence, which has to be read in public audience (Article 366 of the Code of Civil Procedure) and of which a copy can be obtained even by those who are not parties to the suit (Code of Civil Procedure, Article 913 and Article 916). Consistently with this provision, Article 72 of the general regulations for the Archives of State (Royal Decree of September 9, 1902, No. 445) states that "the sentences and rulings of "magistrates . . . . are public, whatever be their "nature."

As regards documents produced by the parties before a magistrate, Article 32 of the above-mentioned Press Edict provides that "no action shall lie in "respect of the publication of documents produced "before the Courts. The magistrate or Court, pro-"nouncing on the merits of the case, can order the "suppression of harmful documents and can declare "the guilty party responsible for damages." Analogously it is laid down by the Code of Civil Procedure, Article 63, that "the judicial Authority can, according "to the circumstances, order, on its own initiative, "the suppression or cancellation of documents offensive "or contrary to public order or morals."

I avail, &c.

(For the Minister),

(Signed) BOLLATI.

NETHERLANDS—LUXEMBURG.

Consular, No. 6.

SIR, The Hague, February 16th, 1910.

UPON receipt of your circular despatch (1436/10) of this series of the 18th ultimo, I did not fail to apply to the Netherland and Luxemburg Governments for information as to the provisions which might exist in the Kingdom and Grand Duchy respectively regarding regulations or rules dealing with the publication in the Press of reports of proceedings in divorce and matrimonial causes.

Monsieur de Swinderen informs me, in reply, that no provisions exist in the Netherlands of the nature indicated. Matters concerning divorce and separation are dealt within closed doors, so that it is impossible to publish reports of the proceedings in the Press.

In the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, too, Monsieur Eyschen states, no law, regulation, or statute exists regarding the publication of such matters in the Press.

I have the honour to be, with the highest respect,

Sir,

Your most obedient, humble servant,

(Signed) GEORGE W. BUCHANAN.

The Right Hon. Sir Edward Grey, Bart., M.P.,

&c. &c. &c.

NORWAY.

Consular, No. 3.

SIR, Christiania, March 3rd, 1910.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you herewith translation of a Memorandum which I have received from the Norwegian Government supplying the information called for in your circular despatch of this series (1436) of January 18th last, on the subject of the laws, regulations, or rules in force in Norway dealing with the publication in the public Press of reports of proceedings in divorce and matrimonial causes.

I have the honour to be, with the highest respect,

Sir,

Your most obedient, humble servant,

(Signed) ARTHUR HERBERT.

The Right Hon. Sir E. Grey, Bart., M.P.,

&c. &c. &c.

Enclosure in Sir A. Herbert's No. 3 Consular of March 3rd, 1910.

MEMORANDUM.

On Norwegian Regulations, &c., regarding the Publication in the Press of Reports on Matrimonial and Divorce Causes.

No special regulations exist regarding such publication; in this country divorces are, as a rule, granted by Royal licence. According to the rescript of August 19, 1735, cfr. the High Court Law of September 12, 1818, Para. 8, civil cases in general are, however, subject to the rule that the trials are to be held with closed doors if the matter can give rise to "scandal" or "offence." In Para. 11 of the new law of August 20, 1909, regarding facilities for the dissolution of marriages, it is also stated that trials of such cases shall always be held with closed doors. A further rule exists with regard to all civil cases, according to which none but persons concerned shall have access to the documents.

In the second section of Para. 128 in the Bill regarding Courts of Justice which has this year been laid before the Storthing, it is determined that trials of matrimonial causes (i.e., causes dealing with the invalidity, the continuance, or the dissolution of marriages) shall be held with closed doors.

Para. 131 also contains the following rule: "If a "trial is held with closed doors and the Court should "consider it advisable that the proceedings or any "portion of them should for special reasons be kept "secret until further notice or altogether, the Court "shall enjoin those present, to this effect."

PORTUGAL.

Consular, No. 4.

SIR, Lisbon, December 6, 1910.

WITH reference to your Consular despatch (41050/1910) of the 16th ultimo, I have the honour to state that I have not succeeded in obtaining complete information as to the rules and regulations which deal with the publication in the Portuguese press of reports of proceedings in divorce and matrimonial causes.

Senhor Villaça, who was Minister for Foreign Affairs in February last, returned a reply to my enquiries which seemed to contain a contradiction, and I have not yet been able to clear up some doubtful points. I have now addressed a note to Senhor Bernardino Machado, who will, I hope, furnish without delay the explanations for which I have asked.

I have the honour to be, with the highest respect,
Sir,
Your most obedient, humble servant,
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

The Right Hon.
Sir E. Grey, Bart., M.P.,
&c., &c., &c.

Consular, No. 2.

SIR, Lisbon, February 25, 1911.

I REGRET to state, with reference to my despatch, No. 4 Consular of December 6, that I have not been more successful with Senhor Bernardino Machado than with his predecessors in my endeavour to obtain clear information in regard to the rules and regulations respecting publication in the Portuguese press of proceedings in divorce and matrimonial causes. I understand that the Royal Commission have practically concluded their labours and do not intend to receive further evidence, so I imagine that it is not worth while to pursue the matter further with the Portuguese Government.

The copies of correspondence which I enclose show what has passed. Notes are annexed upon the various Articles of the Codes, &c., to which allusion is made.

I have the honour to be, with the highest respect,
Sir,
Your most obedient, humble servant,
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

The Right Hon.
Sir Edward Grey, Bart., M.P.,
&c., &c., &c.

Enclosure No. 1 in Sir F. Villiers' No. 2 Consular, of February 25, 1911.

His Britannic Majesty's Legation,

YOUR EXCELLENCY, Lisbon, February 7, 1910.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of Sir Edward Grey, to inform you that the Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes have expressed a desire that enquiries should be made in certain foreign countries as to whether there are any, and if so what, regulations or rules dealing with the publication in the press of reports of proceedings in divorce and matrimonial causes.

I am aware that no law of divorce is contained in the Portuguese Code, but it occurs to me that provision may be made with regard to the publication in the Portuguese press of divorce proceedings instituted in countries other than Portugal, and I shall be much obliged, should this be the case, if Your Excellency will furnish me with copies of the regulations in force.

I avail, &c.,
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

His Excellency
Senhor Eduardo Villaça,
&c., &c., &c.

Enclosure No. 2 in Sir F. Villiers' No. 2 Consular of February 25, 1911.

(Translation.) Ministry for Foreign Affairs,

YOUR EXCELLENCY, Lisbon, February 22, 1910.

IN reply to the note which you were good enough to address to me on the 7th instant, I have the honour to inform Your Excellency that the Portuguese Code of Civil Procedure provides for secrecy with regard to the ground of action in causes for matrimonial separation; but no provision is made as regards the publication in the press of any facts or circumstances connected with such actions instituted either here or abroad except in cases of defamation, calumny or abuse, which are punishable under the Penal Code and the law of the 11th of April 1907.

I avail, &c.,
(Signed) EDUARDO VILLAÇA.

The Hon.
Sir Francis H. Villiers,
&c., &c., &c.

Enclosure No. 3 in Sir F. Villiers' No. 2 Consular of February 25, 1911.

(Translation.)

In continuation of the note of the 22nd of February last, the Minster for Foreign Affairs has the honour to inform Sir Francis Villiers that the legal provisions which in this kingdom enforces secrecy with regard to the grounds of action in causes for matrimonial separation, are contained in Articles 64, 67, 461, 464, 468 and 470 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and cases in which publicity may involve criminal accusation, defamation, calumny or abuse are dealt with in Articles 407 to 412 and 414 to 420 of the Penal Code, to which reference is made in Article V. of the law of the 11th of April 1907.

Lisbon, April 1, 1910.

Enclosure No. 4 in Sir F. Villiers' No. 2 Circular of February 25, 1911.

His Britannic Majesty's Legation,

YOUR EXCELLENCY, Lisbon, December 6, 1910.

ON the 7th of February last I informed Senhor Villaça, in accordance with instructions received from Sir Edward Grey, that the British Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes had expressed a desire that inquiries should be made in certain foreign countries as to whether there are any, and if so what, regulations or rules dealing with the publication in the press of reports of proceedings in such causes.

I was aware, of course, that at that time no law of divorce was contained in the Portuguese Code, but it occurred to me that regulations dealing with the publication in the Portuguese press of divorce proceedings instituted in countries other than Portugal might be in force, and I requested, if this were the case, to be furnished with copies of the regulations.

Senhor Villaça replied on the 22 of February that the Portuguese Code of Civil Procedure provided for secrecy with regard to the ground of action in causes for matrimonial separation, but that no provision was made as regards the publication in the press of any facts or circumstances connected with such actions instituted either here or abroad except in cases of defamation, calumny, or abuse, which were punishable under the Penal Code and the law of April 11th, 1907.

I pointed out to Senhor Villaça that this answer apparently contained a contradiction—the Code provided for secrecy, though no provision was made, except the risk of penalty, as regards the publication of facts or circumstances in the press—but I was unable, in spite of repeated requests, to obtain any more precise information than that contained in a note of the 1st of April, which called my attention to various Articles in the Civil and Penal Codes.

I have now received a despatch from Sir Edward Grey referring to my instructions, and I must therefore address Your Excellency on this matter. The particulars with which I would beg to be furnished are:—

1. Whether causes for matrimonial separation are always heard in camera, or whether the public and representatives of the press are admitted.

2. Whether the Codes provide any means of enforcing secrecy (a) as to proceedings in court or as to facts and circumstances if the public and the press are admitted, or (b) as to facts and circumstances which may by any means come to the knowledge of the press, or, whether the newspapers are at liberty in any case to publish facts and circumstances of which they may become cognizant, subject only to the risk of penalty for defamation, calumny, or abuse, under the Penal Code and the Press Law.

I avail, &c.

(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

His Excellency
Senhor Bernardino Machado.
&c., &c., &c.

Enclosure No. 5 in Sir F. Villiers' No. 2 Consular of February 25, 1911.

His Britannic Majesty's Legation,
Lisbon, January 14, 1911.

YOUR EXCELLENCY,

I OBSERVE that the decree respecting the law of marriage published in the Diario do Governo of the 27th ultimo prohibits in Article XXIX. the publication of the evidence in proceedings for nullity or annulment of marriage, with the exception of the sentence, and prescribes certain penalties for offences against this prohibition.

I shall be glad if Your Excellency will let me know whether this furnishes a complete reply to my note of the 6th ultimo, and to my previous communications respecting the information required by the British Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes. I venture to ask for an early reply, as my original enquiry on this matter was made nearly a year ago.

I avail, &c.

(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

His Excellency
Senhor Bernardino Machado,
&c., &c., &c.

Enclosure No. 6 in Sir F. Villiers' No. 2 Consular of February 25, 1911.

(Translation.) Ministry for Foreign Affairs,
Lisbon, January 28, 1911,
(Received February 14, 1911.)

YOUR EXCELLENCY,

I HAVE before me your notes of the 6th of December last and 14th instant, in which Your Excellency, in referring to previous correspondence between your Legation and this Department of State, expresses the desire to have fuller information respecting the legal provisions by which in this country secrecy is observed with regard to proceedings in cases for matrimonial separation, divorce and annulment of marriage.

As regards proceedings for separation—both of persons and property—the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, Articles 64, 67, 461, 464, 468 and 470, are applicable, and these, in the case of divorce, correspond to Articles 8 and 19 of the decree of November 3rd, 1910.

In view of the provisions of Article 5 of the Penal Code, the penalty prescribed in Article 29 of the decree No. 1 of December 25th, 1910, is applicable only in cases of proceedings for nullity or annulment of marriage.

The application of the penal law and of the decree of the 28th of October 1910, regarding liberty of the press, to cases of publication of evidence in divorce proceedings or in cases of separation of persons and property, depends on the circumstances of the case which the tribunals alone are competent to determine.

I avail, &c.

(Signed) BERNARDINO MACHADO.

The Hon. Sir Francis H. Villiers,
&c., &c., &c.

Code of Civil Procedure.

Article 64.—The registrar or the secretary may issue certified copies of all judicial acts and statements without the previous sanction of the judge.

§ 1. Exception is made with regard to:—

1. . . . . .
2. Procès verbaux in actions for matrimonial separations of persons and division of property, of which only certified copies may be taken, pursuant to the judge's order, of such parts as relate to alimony, as well as of the report of the decision of the family council and of the sentence approving such decision, or of the judgment of the action or any of its points.

Article 67.—Registrars or secretaries shall not refuse the examination by any person at the registrar's office of procès verbaux either pending or on which judgment has been pronounced.

§. An exception is made in the case of procès verbaux for separation; these may only be shown to the parties thereto and their attorneys; . . . . . .

Article* 461.—Cases shall be tried in camera, and the following precedure shall be observed:—†

. . . . . .

Article 464, sub-clause 3.—The depositions of the parties, the examination of witnesses, and the discussions shall be held in camera.

Article 468.—Final decisions shall be published and announced in the manner provided for in Article 448, the names and residences of the parties, whether the separation was authorised or not, and what effect it has produced on the property, only being declared.

(Sub-article of Article 448 states that the notices to be published shall only declare the names and residences of the parties and the nature of the action, the grounds therefor being omitted.)

Article 470.—The action having been definitely decided, all depositions which do not deal with alimony shall be destroyed in the presence of the judge and Crown prosecutor, an act thereof being drawn up to be kept with the procès verbal.

Penal Code.

Articles 407 to 412 and 414 to 420 provide generally for penalties in cases of criminal accusation, &c., and do not refer specially to matrimonial causes.

Law of April 11th, 1907.

This is the press law passed in the time of Senhor João Franco. Article V. lays down certain offences, among which are defamation, calumny, &c.

Decree of November 3rd, 1910.

A summary of this law instituting divorce was forwarded in my despatch, No. 69, of November 19th, 1910.

Article VIII. provides that the sentence shall not describe the nature of the case or the evidence, but shall mention without comment the names of the parties, the causes of action, the law applicable to the case, and the grounds of decision.

Article XIX. provides that the sentence shall be published in the Official Gazette and in local papers.

Decree of December 25th, 1910.

A translation of this Decree was forwarded in my despatch, No. 3, of January 11th. Article 29 prohibits the publication of the evidence in the proceedings for nullity or annulment of marriage with the exception of the sentence.

Penal Code.

The following is a translation of Article V.:—

"Any fact, consisting of an act or of an omission, shall not be considered as a criminal offence until it has been qualified as such by a previous law.

Decree of October 28th, 1910.

This is the new press law, which re-enacts more or less the penalties for defamation, &c., prescribed in the former law.

---

* This article and the three following Articles relate to separation cases.

† The remainder of the Article refers to procedure only.

PORTUGUESE DECREE OF DECEMBER 25, 1910.

(Translation.)

Article 29.—The publication in any way of the evidence in the proceedings for nullity or annulment of a marriage, with the exception of the decision, is hereby prohibited, and the offenders will be subject to the penalties mentioned in Articles 407* and 410† of the Penal Code and in the decree of October 28, 1910, as the case may be.

RUSSIA.

Consular, No. 4.

SIR, St. Petersburg, January 27th, 1910.

ON the receipt of your circular despatch (1436/10) of this series of January 18th last I caused inquiry to be made of the Legal Adviser of this Embassy with regard to the laws, regulations or rules existing in Russia on the subject of the publication in the Press of reports of proceedings in divorce and matrimonial causes.

I am informed that the Russian Penal Code (Article 1038 (1), Vol. XV. of the "Corps des Lois") and the Press and Censure Statute (Article 78, Vol. XIV. of the "Corps des Lois") forbid the publication of all reports of proceedings which are conducted "in camera." As the proceedings of the Ecclesiastical Consistories, to whom jurisdiction in divorce cases is assigned, are conducted "in camera," it follows that the publication of any details in divorce proceedings constitutes a penal offence.

With regard to other matrimonial cases, it is enacted by Article 325 (1) of the Code of Civil Procedure that suits for the maintenance of illegitimate children should be held "in camera."

Lastly, in virtue of Article 325 of the Code the tribunal may decide that proceedings be held in "in camera" if it considers that publicity would be prejudicial to religion, order, and public morals, and according to Article 326 the same procedure may be followed if the two parties to the suit express a desire to that effect, and if the tribunal consider it admissible.

In all these cases the fact of proceedings being held "in camera" makes it illegal for the public Press to publish any details of them.

I have the honour to be, with the highest respect,
Sir,
Your most obedient, humble servant,
(Signed) A. NICOLSON.

The Right Hon. Sir Edward Grey, Bart., M.P.,
&c. &c. &c.

SPAIN.

Consular, No. 2.

SIR, Madrid, January 28th, 1910.

I DULY received your circular consular of the 18th instant inquiring whether there are any, and if so, what laws, regulations, or rules dealing with the publication in the public Press of reports of proceedings in divorce and matrimonial causes.

In reply, I have the honour to inform you that civil divorces are very rare in Spain, and that there are no special rules regarding the publication of proceedings connected with them. Generally speaking, the newspapers may publish anything they hear in the public sessions at the Law Courts, but if the president of the court thinks that anything not fit for publication is about to take place, he may close the court and further proceedings remain secret.

In Ecclesiastical Courts divorce cases are generally heard with closed doors.

I have the honour to be, with the highest respect,
Sir,
Your most obedient, humble servant,
(Signed) MAURICE DE BUNSEN.

The Right Hon. Sir Edward Grey, Bart., M.P.,
&c. &c. &c.

---

* Four months' imprisonment and fine.
† Two months' imprisonment and fine.

SWEDEN.

Consular, No. 6.

SIR, Stockholm, February 24th, 1910.

WITH reference to your circular despatch of this series of the 18th ultimo, I have the honour to transmit to you herewith a translation of a Memorandum on the rules and regulations in force in Sweden respecting the publication of proceedings in divorce and matrimonial causes, which has been furnished me by the Swedish Government.

I have the honour to be, with the highest respect,
Sir,
Your most obedient, humble servant,
(Signed) CECIL SPRING RICE.

The Right Hon. Sir E. Grey, Bart., M.P.

Duplicate Enclosure in Sir C. Spring Rice's
Consular, No. 6.

MEMORANDUM.

(Translation.) Stockholm.

According to section 2, paragraph 4, of the statute in force respecting the liberty of the Press, it is expressly allowed, subject to the exceptions and conditions hereinafter mentioned, that all proceedings, protocols and decisions, of whatever designation or character they may be, in any trial coming before the Swedish courts, may be published in the general Press. In the same provision it is further laid down that the courts shall give information without delay concerning the proceedings in question to anyone who asks for it; and that everybody, whether he is concerned in the trial or not, shall have free access to the archives of the court so as to be able to take a copy of the proceedings. Copies of the latter may also be obtained on payment of a fee.

With regard to the restrictions which exist to the right to publish the proceedings in question, the following should be noted.

A party to a trial has a full right, before sentence or judgment is pronounced, to publish according to his own choice the petition, complaint, and the accusation. But it is incumbent on such party to make public at the same time, by means of the Press, the declarations of the opposing party together with the pronouncement of the court thereon and the opinions of the individual judges, so that all that is necessary for a full comprehension of the case itself, of its course and result, may come to the knowledge of the public.

Anyone who has a case pending in court has a right to have a report printed—called the "species facti," i.e., a short and accurate written account of the nature and course of the trial. But he must confine himself to what is true and proper.

It is further laid down that the protocols and proceedings in cases under the Criminal Act which have been settled by compromise, among which in some respects are included divorce cases, may not be published as long as any of the parties are alive, without their consent, or, if the parties are dead, for 50 years after their death.

Anything in such proceedings which "is of a disgusting character" or is highly offensive to modesty, or which concerns persons who are not parties to the case and is unreasonably offensive or defamatory, may not be published, unless it is so ordered by the judge on the ground that it is necessary to throw light on the affair in question.

Breach of these regulations is punished by a fine.

The above regulations apply to the publication of the judge's sentence in the trial, either in the Press or otherwise.

The law contains no provisions concerning the publication of reports on the course of the trial. But in common with other publications and in accordance with the regulations respecting the freedom of the Press, such reports must not overstep the bounds of decency and morality.

SWITZERLAND.

No. 9.

SIR, Berne, February 5th, 1910.

IN reply to your circular (1436/10) of the 18th ultimo, I have the honour to transmit herewith a copy of a note from the Federal Government stating that no special regulations exist in Switzerland dealing with the publication in the public Press of proceedings in divorce and matrimonial causes, but explaining how in many of the cantons causes of this nature are not heard in public.

I have the honour to be, with the highest respect,
Sir,
Your most obedient, humble servant,
(Signed) H. O. BAX-IRONSIDE.

The Right Hon. Sir E. Grey, Bart., M.P.,
&c. &c. &c.

Enclosure in Mr. Bax-Ironside's No. 9 of February 5th, 1910.

Berne, le 3 février 1910.

MONSIEUR LE MINISTRE,

EN réponse à la note du 24 janvier dernier, nous avons l'honneur de faire savoir à Votre Excellence qu-il n'existe en Suisse, à notre connaissance, aucunes dispositions spéciales concernant les comptes-rendus dans la presse des débats judiciares sur les affaires de divorce. Mais ces comptes-rendus sont tout naturellement restreints par le fait qu'en bien des endroits les débats judiciares sur les affaires de cette nature ne sont pas publics. Tel est le cas dans les cantons suivants :

Zürich (loi concernant l'administration de la justice zuricoise du 19 décembre 1874, para. 144, 2e alinéa), pour les actions en divorce et en paternité ;
Glaris (code de procédure civile du 5 mai 1895, para. 144), pour les actions en paternité, pour celles en indemnité pour rupture de promesse de mariage et pour celles en divorce ;
Bâle-ville (loi sur l'organisation judiciare du 1er février 1875, para. 34, 2e alinéa), pour les actions en divorce et en paternité ;
Schaffhouse (code de procédure civile du 25 juin 1869, para. 61), pour les actions en divorce et en paternité ;
Appenzell Rh. Ext. (constitution cantonale art. 68), pour les procès en divorce ;
St. Gall (loi concernant l'administration de la justice civile du 31 mai 1900, art. 105), pour les actions en divorce et en paternité ;
Thurgovie (code de procédure civile du 1er mai 1867, para. 130), pour les procès en paternité et en divorce.

Dans le canton d'Argovie, suivant le code de procédure civile du 12 mars 1900, le huis-clos doit être prononcé sur la demande d'une des parties, lorsqu'il s'agit de contestations entre époux ou entre parents et enfants ; dans le canton du Valais, le huis-clos doit, en pareil cas, être prononcé sur la demande des deux parties (code de procédure civile du 30 mai 1856, art. 659).

En outre, dans tout les cantons on a pour principe d'exclure la publicité des débats dans les procès qui pourraient offenser la morale publique.

Veuillex, &c.,
Au nom du Conseil Fédéral Suisse :
Le président de la Confédération,
(Signed) COMTESSE.
Le chancelier de la Confédération,
(Signed) SCHATZMANN.

Son Excellence Monsieur H. O. Bax-Ironside,
&c. &c. &c.

Consular, No. 4.

SIR, Berne, February 11th, 1910.

WITH reference to my despatch Number 3, Consular, of the 5th instant, enclosing copy of a note from the Swiss Government giving a list of the cantons in which provisions exist for preventing matrimonial causes being heard in public, I have the honour to report that I have received a further note informing me that by the marriage law of the Grisons of March 1, 1876, III. 2, divorce cases are heard in camera ("à huit-clos") in that canton.

I have the honour to be, with the highest respect,
Sir,
Your most obedient, humble servant,
(Signed) H. O. BAX-IRONSIDE.

The Right Hon. Sir E. Grey, Bart., M.P.,
&c. &c. &c.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Consular, No. 18. British Embassy,

SIR, Dublin, N.H., June 20th, 1910.

WITH reference to your despatch of this series of January 18th last, I have the honour to transmit herewith a short summary of such laws as restrict in any way the rights of the Press to publish the proceedings in divorce and matrimonial cases.

It will be seen that these are very few, and indeed the general feeling throughout the country is antagonistic to any interference with the so-called liberties of the Press such as would ensue from a restriction of the right to publish divorce proceedings, except in the interests of public decorum and good morals. At least this is what the Press endeavour to convey.

An illustration of this feeling was furnished recently when a case, tried quite legally and properly in New York, in which two very wealthy and prominent persons sought and obtained a divorce from one another, was conducted with such secrecy without either party being even present that an outcry was raised by the newspapers concerning the privileges of the wealthy classes even in matters of this kind, where the power of their wealth was suspected as the principal agency in securing a private "washing of dirty linen."

I have the honour to be, with the highest respect,
Sir,
Your most obedient, humble servant,
(Signed) JAMES BRYCE.

The Right Hon. Sir Edward Grey, Bart., M.P.
&c. &c. &c.

Publication in the Public Press of Proceedings in Divorce and Matrimonial Cases.

There are practically no laws denying to the Press in any of the States of this country the right to publish such accounts of divorce proceedings as they may wish to print, with the exception of such statutes as have been enacted to prevent offences against the laws of decency and of libel.

Such restrictions as exist are set forth below :—

In the State of New York there is a regulation to the following effect :—

"Section 4, Judiciary Law : Sitting of courts—to be public. The sittings of every court within this State shall be public and every citizen may freely attend the same, except that in all proceedings and trials in cases for divorce, on account of adultery, seduction, abortion, rape, assault, with intent to commit rape, criminal conversation and bastardy, the court may, in its discretion, exclude therefrom all persons who are not directly interested therein, except jurors, witnesses, and officers of the court.

"In an action for a divorce or for an annulment of a marriage where the defendant fails to answer, no reference shall be granted to take proof of the facts stated in the complaint, but before a judgment shall be granted the proof of such facts must be made to the court in open court, and a copy of the evidence written out and filed with the judgment roll.

"The court may, however, in case the evidence is such that public interest require that the examination of the witnesses should not be public exclude all persons from the court-room except the parties to the action, their counsel and the witnesses, and shall order such evidence when filed with the clerk sealed up and exhibited only to the parties to the action, or some one specially interested upon order of the court.—Rule 72, General Rules of Practice."

A further regulation is as follows:—

Rules of Supreme Court, No. 76.—" . . . . but " where no person appears on the part of the " defendant, the details of the evidence in adultery " causes shall not be read in public, but shall be " submitted in open court. No officer of any " court, with whom the proceedings in an adultery " cause are filed, or before whom the testimony " is taken, nor any clerk of such officer, either " before or after the termination of such suit, " shall permit a copy of any of the pleadings or " testimony, or the substance of the details " thereof, to be taken by any other person than " a party or the attorney or counsel of a party, " who has appeared in the cause, without a special " order of the court. . . ."

In the State of Colorado.—The clerk of the court may upon request keep the proceedings in such cases from off the docket for the purpose of preventing newspapers getting hold of the matter, but this law is reported to have little or no effect. The court can also order a hearing to be held with closed doors. This latter applies also to—

The State of Minnesota.

In the Territory of New Mexico there is a regulation to the effect that "the details of the evidence in " adultery causes shall not be read in public, but shall " be submitted to the court. No officer of the court " with whom the proceedings in adultery causes are " filed or before whom the testimony is taken, nor any " clerk of such officer either before or after the termina- " tion of the suit, shall permit a copy of any of the " pleadings or testimony or of the substance of the " details thereof to be taken by any other person than " a party, or the attorney or counsel of a party, who " has appeared in the cause, without a special order of " the court."

In the State of California likewise there are statutes as follows:—

Code of Civil Procedure, section 125: Sittings when private.—" In an action for divorce, criminal " conversation, seduction, or breach of promise " of marriage, the court may direct the trial of " any issue of fact joined therein to be private, " and may exclude all persons except the officers " of the court, the parties, their witnesses, and " counsel; provided that in any cause the court " may in the exercise of a sound discretion, during " the examination of a witness, exclude any or " all other witnesses in the cause."

Political Code, section 1032: Records open to public inspection, exceptions.—" The public " records and other matters in the office of any " officer are at all times, during office hours, open " to the inspection of any citizen of this State. " In all actions for divorce the pleadings and the " testimony taken and filed in said actions, shall " not be by the clerk with whom the same is " filed, or the referee before whom the testimony " is taken, made public, nor shall the same be " allowed to be inspected by any person except " the parties that may be interested or the " attorneys to the action, or by an order of the " court in which the action is pending; a copy " of the said order must be filed with the clerk." In cases of attachment, the clerk of the court with whom the complaint is filed shall not make public the fact of the filing of such complaint, or of the issuing of such attachment, until after the filing of return of service of attachment.

Idaho.—Revised Codes, section 3861: Exclusion of persons in certain cases.—" In an action for divorce, " criminal conversation, seduction or breach of promise " of marriage, the court may direct the trial of any " issue of fact joined therein to be private, and may " exclude all persons except the officers of the court, " the parties, their witnesses, and counsel: provided " that in any cause the Court may, in the exercise of " a sound discretion, during the examination of a " witness, exclude any and all witnesses in the cause."

Montana.—Revised Codes, section 6291: Sittings, when private.—" In an action for divorce, criminal " conversation, seduction, or breach of promise of " marriage, the court may direct the trial of any issue " of fact joined therein to be private, and exclude all " persons except the officers of the court, the parties, " their witnesses, and counsel: provided that in any " cause the court may, in the exercise of a sound " discretion during the examination of a witness, ' exclude any or all witnesses in the cause."

Vermont.—Public Statutes of 1906, section 3082: Testimony in divorce cases, how given; exclusion of public.—" The testimony of witnesses shall be given " orally in court and by deposition as in other cases: " and the court may in its discretion, exclude from " the trial all persons except the officers of the court " and the parties in interest."

Wisconsin.—Circuit Court Rule 28, section 4: Actions for divorce.—" No other officer of the court " with whom the proceedings in an action for divorce, " in which adultery has been charged against either " party, are filed, or before whom the testimony is " taken, and no clerk of such officer, either before or " after the termination of such action, shall permit a " copy of any of the testimony or pleadings, or the " substance of the details thereof, to be taken by any " person other than a party to the action, or the " attorney or counsel of such party who has appeared " therein, without the special order of the court."

British Embassy,
Dublin, N.H.,
June 20th, 1910.

APPENDIX XVII.

Digest by Mr. J. S. R. Phillips of Memorandum.

The following is a digest of a memorandum by Mr. J. S. R. Phillips, Editor of "The Yorkshire Post," on reporting of divorce cases, issued to members of the Commission:—

He said at the outset that he did not represent any definite newspaper organisation. The opinions of newspaper proprietors and of journalists vary so very greatly upon this subject that it has been found impracticable to appoint any one person as the representative of a large majority. Some are in favour of the total abolition of reports, save only the names of the parties and the decisions, presumably as advertisements for the insertion of which the newspaper would be paid. There is a general feeling that if only names and decisions were published they would not be, what we newspaper men call, readable matter, and from this point of view would not be worth our space; so that we should, I think, almost universally, publish nothing rather than give a mere list. Another section believe in limited and official publication. They do not think it would be consistent with public interest that there should be no reporting; but they are very strongly of opinion that some of the reports printed at the present time—mainly, they say, by a few weekly papers which do not rank in high-class journalism, although they may have large circulations—are much to be deprecated. I have not examined these weekly papers, but Sir George Riddell, of the "News of the World," tells me he has made a large collection of reports, and that those appearing in the London weekly papers are not more extensive or in any way worse than those in "The Times," "Daily Telegraph," and other daily papers which have not been called in question. Some of my friends feel that unchecked publication is very apt to run into indecency, and that reports of the kind which they deprecate tend to degrade the readers, and, possibly, to encourage immorality. Those who hold this have no experience of official reporting, and they are not eager to define precisely what kind of a report for publication an official reporter ought to issue.

There are other journalists of standing who, while holding strongly that matter of the kind is injurious to the national life, are yet afraid that restraint would tend to defeat the interests of justice; they have known very many cases where publication has led to the discovery of fresh evidence, one way or the other. I have been told recently of a case in which the publication of an action for the restitution of conjugal rights was followed by certain information being tendered to solicitors, which proved that one of the parties had long and constantly been guilty of adultery. The fear lest restraint of publication should thus prevent the discovery of evidence had perplexed these journalists, who otherwise were in favour of suppression. So far as I can learn, none of them is able to lay down any clear principle which might serve as the basis of a legal enactment. Nor do I think that it is possible to lay down any clear principle if we get away from that which I regard as fundamental — that no indecent matter should be allowed to be published. This principle ought to be applied with even-handed justice to plays and novels, just as to newspaper reports. To set up a distinction between the two classes is, to my mind, invidious, and somewhat of an insult to British journalism, which, I maintain, is by no means the worst offender in this direction. I am aware that some newspapers act as if they thought it natural they should feed upon garbage, but these are very few in proportion to the journals which are pure and well conducted, and to enact a law specifically directed against any form of publication of this class of report in newspapers, whether or no such reports are carefully sub-edited to remove indecency from them, would be a distinct slur upon a profession which, as I have said, is not at all a bad offender. Besides, I am doubtful if the worst reports that are published in newpapers are those of divorce trials; the grossest case reported by newspapers in the current year has not had to do with divorce. It was a charge of criminal libel. There have been other cases in England which involved issues equally gross; and one may add that the famous Thaw case, reported very fully in (some of) our English newspapers, was not a divorce case, though the reports sent from America contained statements much more striking in their sexual relation than any that I have seen in recent reports of divorce actions.

If your object is to prevent the publication and wide dissemination by newspapers of objectionable matter involving sexualism and, one may add, abnormality, you must throw your net much more widely than has been suggested by any of the witnesses whose evidence I have seen. You must aim, not against the publication of reports of divorce cases, but against that of this much more extended class of reports, many of them far worse than the mere giving of such details as are ordinarily reported in connection with applications for divorce. It would be impracticable to set up any law against the reporting of libel actions or of such criminal cases as the charge against Mr. Oscar Wilde, and all you can do in regard to these matters is to enact, if the existing law is not plain enough—and see that the enactment is carried out—that there should be no publication of indecent matter. When we have arrived at this point, I would further urge that legislation of the kind must include novels and plays; for it would be absurd to say that a newspaper may not publish the report of a divorce case, while it may publish, in the form of a novel, written more attractively from the point of view of immorality, a story precisely on all fours with the divorce case which it is sought to bar. There is one striking distinction between newspaper reports of divorce cases and plays and novels, in this: that the reports of the divorce case may, and often do, serve a very useful purpose in either rehabilitating the character of some person who has been attacked, or in showing a prominent person in his true character, and, further, that the fear of publicity may exercise some deterrent effect; whereas in the novel, where all the personages are fictitious, publication does not provide any equivalent benefits. Fiction is not, and cannot be, in the same category as the advocacy of political or social charge. No serious student could regard it in that light, nor is it written for serious students. I would not interfere with liberty of discussion—nothing is further from my thought. The thing advocated may be good or bad—within recognised legal limits, I would not ask for interference. But a novel proves nothing; it is not scientific from the social or political standpoint, and this for the reason that the writer postulates what he pleases; he manufactures his own facts, and can arrange his argument, and, therefore, must be a numskull if he cannot draw the conclusions he had in mind at the beginning. May I give a few extracts from novels published recently, to show the class of matter I have in mind? Most of the writers of this class of fiction are, one may note, ladies; and it is curious that if one looks back to earlier periods in the history of English literature, such as the Restoration period and the Augustan period of Queen Anne, one finds in the earlier that Mrs. Aphra Behn's plays were the worst of a very immoral set, and among the Queen Anne writers Mrs. Manley shines conspicuous. Even a little later, the famous Mrs. Letitia Pilkington, with her memoirs, out-did all male rivals. (Mr. Phillips here included extracts from novels by a certain class of writers of the present day, scattered broadcast at low prices.) In all of these the moral is preached (by no means for the first time in the history of the world) that—if I may quote the famed Mrs. Letitia Pilkington—

> The name of Marriage is the Bane of Pleasure,
> And Love should have no Tie, but Love to bind it.

And the purpose of the books, so far as one can see, is distinctly to eulogise the fact of men and women living together in what the north-country artisan folk call "living tally"—that is, without the sanction of the Church or of the law of the land. One might almost suppose there was a definite and organised crusade in this direction, its leaders being both men and women. Like most of the indecent fiction in times past—such as "The Sisters," by the Parson Dodd, who was hanged for forgery—they profess to have a moral or social purpose. As a rule, the profession is a mere pretext for publishing what the writers (or publishers) think will sell; and we all know that there is a large market for indecent photographs and postcards, when the police do not spoil it by interference. In my researches in literature of this class—a literature of whose fulness I had no knowledge—I have been struck by the fact that these novels, having done duty in the higher-priced form in circulating libraries and among the wealthier classes, are now spread broadcast at the price of one shilling, or even sixpence. I am informed that it is the habit of librarians of circulating libraries to watch carefully what novels are in the greatest demand, and temporarily to suspend these from circulation until the librarian has read them. The other day, in skimming over a book review page in an illustrated weekly paper, I found the statement that there were in such and such a novel—which the reviewer was praising in protest against the, in my opinion, thoroughly justified action of the circulating libraries—certain chapters which, he said, would be read with great zest again and again by young people, and the more so because their elders had condemned the novel; and it is notorious that in books of this class certain chapters are regarded by publishers and public as those which will actually sell a novel, no matter how feeble and futile it may be as a work of art. I venture to press most strongly that if you enact a law against the publication of divorce cases, while you allow literature of this kind to be spread broadcast, you are straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel. It may, of course, be said that these novels are sold at a shilling or sixpence, whereas the report of the divorce cases may be bought for one penny, or even a halfpenny, and that the newspapers have a much larger circulation. But while this is true, there is nothing in the proposed change of the law to prevent a newspaper from publishing novels of the kind if they are found to sell that newspaper, and there can be nothing unless you adopt the principle I have suggested, namely, that of basing any legislation or administration upon the prohibition of indecent matter, without regard to the form which such publication may take. I have here an extract from an address given on St. George's Day by Canon Rawnsley:—

> "As long as the world stood there would always be need of St. Georges. £250,000 less money was wasted last year in whisky, but no sooner did one evil seem to be trampled under > foot by the gallant St. George of the temperance crusade than another dragon-form of evil took its place. The illustrated papers, the filthy sex novels, the grossly vulgar and often obscene postcards, indecent prints, the entirely indecent photographs, were corroding the people's life—were dragons abroad poisoning ideas of modesty and manly self-control and noble thoughts on courtship and marriage. He had a "black list" of 120 novels, every one of them corrosive and abominable in their pandering to animal passions and immorality, and all of them were largely in circulation during the past two years."

May I point out, for the sake of a parallel with the reporting of divorce cases, that novels dealing with illicit connections are not necessarily objectionable. One need only name Scott, George Eliot, Dickens, and Thackeray as writers capable of treating what it is the fashion to call problems of humanity in a manner to which no person can possibly object. It is true these great writers did not set themselves up as preachers of a creed; they were content to draw pictures of life, and to be regarded as novelists. In so far as they teach, they teach morality and chastity. In like manner as we do not regard their treatment of sexual passion as immoral, and leading to the degradation of those who read their stories, but entirely pure and beneficial, so the question whether a newspaper report of a divorce case—or any other involving sexual or abnormal causes—is or is not objectionable, depends, entirely upon the way in which it is handled, and, as a rule, not upon the mere fact of the reporting. I wish to lay stress upon this, for I base upon it my principle that, while it is right for the law to prohibit or punish the publishing of indecent matter and matter encouraging immorality, it is not the business of the law to prohibit the reporting of any special series of cases which come before the courts.

I have made a little study of the evidence already given before this Commission, and I find among the witnesses, just as there is among journalists and newspaper proprietors, very great diversity of opinion as to whether divorce cases should or should not be reported. I note that in France, as, I may say, in Norway, the publication of divorce cases is prohibited. According to a Norwegian writer, whose articles appeared in April in the London "Daily News," the reason for forbidding reports in Norway seems to be the belief that it is a needless cruelty to the parties.

Divorces in Norway are obtained on very slight grounds; whereas in this country divorce is only to be had for causes which one may call serious. I do not think it can be alleged that the people of Norway, or of France, are more moral than ours; indeed men who have investigated student life in Norway — where "mixed" education is common—assure me that there is very great laxity in this respect among male and female students. So far as I can gather, there is no definite principle running through the opinions which have been given before your Commission upon this question of reporting. Many witnesses have represented that there ought to be no publication, and have made the somewhat vague statement, entirely unsupported by evidence, that immorality is caused by reading reports of the kind. A search through the evidence shows that in certain instances witnesses have alleged certain definite causes as operating to produce immorality and so bring persons into the divorce courts. We have heard of overcrowding and the like as operating here, and Mr. Douglas Eyre spoke of impossible relationships as established by early marriages; but no one witness has adduced a single instance in which it can be said that adultery had been committed as a consequence of reading reports of divorce cases. From time to time we have had complaints of boys being led away into crime, theft, and burglary by reading stories of criminals who are made into heroes; but, as I have said, there is no instance given anywhere of a person being demoralised and indulging in immorality as a consequence of reading divorce court reports. I would urge strongly that, if seduction and adultery can be traced to the reading of literature at all, one must look for the operative cause in these novels to which I have referred, rather than in the stories told in the divorce courts.

Lord Alverstone, in his evidence against publication said that "the best of the Press entirely agreed with "the view, and did not publish these things." His Lordship is, I venture respectfully to suggest, better acquainted with law than with journalism. In "The Times," the "Daily Telegraph," "Standard," the "Morning Post," there are frequently long reports giving details of divorce cases. They are given not for any purely legal questions involved, but because the public will read them. It will be within the memory of most members of the Commission that there were long reports in certain well-known cases involving persons of eminence in the political world, and the fact is equally true of all cases which affect persons well known in society, on the stage, or in the commercial world—in short, cases are reported in the "best newspapers" if those cases are likely to interest the class of readers for whom the newspapers cater. More than this, his Lordship did not give any facts in support of his supposition that the reporting of these cases has increased, or that more details are published now than formerly. I believe there is no foundation for that supposition; my own observation and professional experience, extending to nearly 32 years, are against it. The letter from her late Majesty Queen Victoria to Lord Campbell, in 1858, in the early days of the operations of the Divorce Court, indicates the character of the reports then published. Lord Alverstone ignored the effect of novels such as I have referred to, and especially stories and obscene jokes published in certain weekly papers which do not publish divorce reports. The Joint Select Committee, of 1908, over which Earl Beauchamp presided, had before it evidence by Mr. Byrne, C.B., of the Home Office, Mr. Corfe, Mr. Coote, of the National Vigilance Society, and others, who complained of these stories, jokes, and illustrations in eight weekly papers, which, they said, demoralised the public, if what they published were not legally obscene or indecent; and if it were the fact—of which we have no evidence—that immorality has increased among the class of people who read weekly papers, that might be due to the new developments in fiction, and not to divorce reports, which, as my investigation shows, have not become worse.

An earlier witness had laid stress upon the fact that Queen Victoria was very emphatic in her condemnation of such reports; but as against that I may set the fact that in Lord Morley's "Life of Gladstone," there is a footnote which says, "Mr. Gladstone used to "desire the prohibition of publicity in these proceedings "until he learned the strong view of the President of "the Court, that the hideous flare of this publicity acts "probably as no inconsiderable deterrent." This, however, introduces a factor with which I propose to deal later. It is the demoralising tendency with which I am yet concerned; and I may remind you that Lord St. Helier on several occasions paid a high tribute to the discretion with which reporters discharge their duties. I believe he did this distinctly in his farewell to the court when he retired, and I take it that this praise of the reporters meant that, in his opinion, while dealing with dubious relationships, they exercised their skill wisely, and avoiding the publication of indecencies or anything which might tend to encourage immorality.

I turn now to the question of publication as a deterrent. Several witnesses have spoken strongly of the desirability of publishing somewhat of these divorce cases, because that is regarded here—as in Norway—as a punishment inflicted upon the parties. Several of your witnesses have protested that no publication of evidence or general facts should be allowed, but that we should have the names and permanent addresses of all the parties, with the result of the proceedings. They recognise here that publication is obnoxious to those whose names are concerned. I myself have known many instances. Within the present year I had a letter from a firm of solicitors begging me not to publish a report of a certain divorce case, because, they said, the co-respondent was an inspector of secondary education under a county authority, and if this matter got to the ears of the authority he would lose his situation. Of course, the stopping of publication in a case of that kind seemed to me to be distinctly against the public interest; I think not merely the county authorities, but the public concerned had a right to know something of what this education inspector had been doing.

I note that Mr. Pickstone, the Registrar of the Bury County Court, while advocating prohibition of publication, frankly said that he thought there would be more divorce cases as a result of prohibition; and he had been professionally concerned in cases where the parties had begged him to secure the suppression of details. Mr. Thomas Griffithes was of opinion that some petitioners — presumably innocent persons — would not go into court because of the fear of publication, and that witnesses objected to having their names brought before the public; and it seems to me, that if these persons are ashamed to appear in the Divorce Court when they are entirely innocent of offence and nothing is to be charged against them, a similar fear must operate very strongly when persons are subject to temptation, and that we have here fair argument that publication does act as a deterrent.

I would lay stress upon the opinion of Mr. Justice Bigham (Lord Mersey) and Mr. Barnard, K.C., as men of experience professionally in divorce cases, that publication has a wholesome check upon people who know that if they misconduct themselves it will be published to the world.

Mr. J. C. Priestley, K.C., was of the same opinion; and he further urged that if a case were tried in open court, and there was no report of it, all sorts of stories would get about as to the nature of the evidence, and perhaps an innocent person, wrongly charged, would suffer harm. It was only fair, he held, that in country districts, or in town, where people had discussed these cases before they went into court, it should be known what was actually proved or disproved.

May I say that in a recent case, which came within my own knowledge, in which the wife of a gentleman well known in his own locality, was divorced for persistent misconduct and elopement with a gentleman from another part; there had been many false rumours respecting the attitude of the husband towards the wife. In the neighbourhood where he lived, it was said that he treated her unkindly, and without any sort of consideration; whereas the evidence given in the Divorce Court, which was published pretty fully in the newspapers, showed that he had been not only considerate, but even most anxious, after she had eloped with the other man, that she should return to her children and to him. It was, indeed, proved that his affection for her was maintained down to the time when—after one elopement abroad, and he and some friends of hers had followed and induced the couple to return to England—she finally determined that she would live with the other man.

I may point, perhaps, to another case, well within my recollection, in which an action for divorce was brought and failed. Certain charges, not amounting to infidelity, were brought against the husband. The case was talked over in a large district, and but for the publication of a fairly full report of the case, it may easily have been held, by a verdict for the lady, that the husband had not acted properly. The evidence, however, produced, I think, a general opinion that the verdict was not quite accurate, and, as a matter of fact, a fresh action was brought some months later, when it was abundantly proved that the husband had full grounds for demanding the divorce which he obtained.

The question is, however, larger than its bearing on the parties directly concerned, and I should like to name a case in which I think full publication, avoiding indecency, was a matter of first importance in the public interest. I refer to the case of Lord Melbourne, in June 1836, when an action for Crim. Con. was brought against him by the husband of the Hon. Caroline Norton. There had been many rumours connecting the name of the Whig Prime Minister with Mrs. Norton, who was notoriously unhappy in her marriage, and entirely at outs with her husband. Lord Melbourne had unquestionably been a constant visitor at her house; he had sympathised with her; his attentions to her were such that rumour suggested a further and improper interest. The statement made by the Attorney-General in behalf of Lord Melbourne and the characters of certain of the witnesses for Mr. Norton seem to have disposed of the accusations, and the verdict was in his favour, Am I going too far when I say that if that trial had been with closed doors, or if it had been impossible to publish a full report of the case, a large section of the public would have said, "Of "course, they would not give a verdict against the "Prime Minister"? My opinion is that, in a case of this kind, it is essential for the rehabilitation of the prominent politician that there should be free publication of the evidence given.

I may add that the report of this trial was very full —probably in nearly all the papers in the country— certainly in the one whose files I have consulted, the "Leeds Intelligencer," which is the ancestor of "The Yorkshire Post." I find that the case is reported practically verbatim, so far as concerns the opening speech of council—Sir W. Pollitt—and the evidence against Lord Melbourne and Mrs. Norton. The case, I may say, was tried in the Court of Common Pleas. Some of the evidence is such as would certainly not be reported in any newspaper, daily or weekly, at the present time. The report itself would occupy at least six columns of "The Yorkshire Post," Sir William Pollitt's speech filling two columns.

I do not ask for the Press liberty to publish such evidence as was published in the Melbourne case, but I do maintain that in a divorce court, where two persons of eminence are concerned, one of them occupying the highest position in the political world, it would be intolerable to place obstacles in the way of the publication of a very full report.

My next case is that of Sir Charles Dilke. I am not going to say that the country did not suffer a loss by the eclipse of a brilliant politician, but without expressing any opinion beyond this, and without going into the merits, it must certainly be held that here was a case in which the public were entitled to full information so that they might form their own opinion. Perhaps I may add that had there been merely a statement published of the result of the first trial, there could not have been a demand for those second proceedings, which most people afterwards thought were entirely justified.

My third case is that of Mr. Parnell. Here, too, we had a brilliant politician, the leader of a national party, whose career was undoubtedly stopped by a divorce action, and especially by the publication of details. You may recollect that certain important members of the Liberal party were—rightly or wrongly —endeavouring to work with Mr. Parnell as if nothing had occurred. They would certainly have done so had there been no publication of details.

I maintain, further, that to report divorce actions may be necessary in the public interest where high naval or military officers are concerned. One has read allegations against great commanders of past ages, that they promoted officers on account of the attractive qualities and easy virtue of the wives of these officers; and in this matter, until human nature is changed, it is to be feared that what has been may be. A divorce case affecting a soldier or sailor of high rank and unquestioned ability in the field might bring in question his appointments, and unless the facts were brought clearly before the public, the Government could not deal with him; a Nelson could not be set aside simply because of adultery. Public opinion would not allow anything of the kind.

There are even cases, other than actions for divorce, where newspapers of the highest standing have thought it needful, in the public interest, to publish details which, to say the least, verged closely upon indecency. I recollect one series of reports, published by the "Manchester Guardian," which described certain orgies said to have taken place in a theatre after the close of the performances, when the lights were turned down, and men and women of loose character were supplied with liquor in private boxes, and of immoral conduct alleged to have taken place in the manager's office between him and certain women employed on his stage. The reports were published in justification of the demand for the withdrawal of the licence of the theatre —a matter which had aroused much feeling in Manchester. The evidence was not published by the "Manchester Guardian" as a means of selling the paper, but solely in the performance of what its proprietors and editor believed to be a public duty; and

I suggest that, although I hold that the publishers of indecent matter should be punished, there may be circumstances in which a newspaper ought to be able to plead justification—that publication was necessary in the interest of public morality.

And this brings me to the suggestions made before you, that there should be official reports, or that newspapers should report only such bald details as presumably would be consistent with the dignified authorisation by one of His Majesty's judges. Reports of this kind would be looked upon by the public as garbled. If the judge, exercising his right, ruled out from publication evidence given by persons of high social or courtly standing, I am afraid the public would attribute improper motives, and it is conceivable that serious conditions might grow out of rumour. I maintain, respectfully, that if some member of our Royal family, or some bishop or cabinet minister, were co-respondent in a divorce action, and no report—or only a guarded official report—were allowed to be published, a very serious state of things would arise. We should have questions, if not a debate, in the House of Commons, and discussion throughout the country, with statements made—not on oath. Were a judge to exercise the right of trying "in camera" a case other than a nullity suit, or certain classes of evidence, and there was reason to believe he did so to cover the misdeeds of individuals, his conduct would probably be the subject of a motion in Parliament.

On the other hand, it would be impossible to allow a judge the right to say that the report of a divorce case affecting a well-known politician must be published, while he disallowed the publication of one affecting, shall I say, an army or naval officer, or some wholly private person. There is, in short, a lack of definite principle about all these proposals for limiting reporting. That which would allow a judge to summon a newspaper editor or proprietor, and penalise him for contempt of court, would be unsatisfactory in this—that no distinct principle is suggested by which the editor or proprietor could tell, when the report was before him, that he was or was not going outside that which the court would allow. You could have no standard by which to foretell the working of the judicial mind, for in this respect judges differ much as other and less distinguished persons. Newspaper men, I think, are entitled to some definite and adequate means of knowing whether they are inside the law or without it. I do not see that in this respect you can treat them in a manner different from that in which the general public are treated, and, therefore, I must come back to where I started, and say that if you want to restrict within the bounds of propriety the reports of divorce cases, you can do so only by laying down the general principle that they shall not publish anything which is indecent, or which directly incites to immorality. In this matter the editor of a newspaper is not protected by privilege, nor should he be. If he reports accurately what passes in open court, he is protected against actions for libel. That is well understood. But he is not protected against prosecution on account of the indecency or immoral tendency of what he publishes; he cannot shelter behind the plea that he is only reproducing what was said by a witness, by counsel, or by the judge. May I add, that for publication, the editor and proprietor (or publishers), if directly concerned, must be held responsible—not the reporter? It is the obvious duty of the editor to strike out of the report what passages he pleases, and to instruct the reporter what, if any, additional facts to give. If the editor hears of evidence not reported and asks the reporter why he did not report it, it would be no excuse for the reporter to say he did not think its publication would be legal—he would get his month's notice all the same.

It may be true that reports like those of the Melbourne case demoralise the public—and, in any event, I think they should be prevented, just as similar indecency in novels should be—but I fancy that an objector to this opinion might ask how it is that there has been a gradual but steady improvement in the character of the reports given by newspapers. Did those earlier reports really demoralise the nation, or did the improving morality of the nation impress itself upon newspaper reporting?—it being found that the public who purchase newspapers of the better class objected to having evidence such as I have indicated being thrust in their eyes, and especially under the eyes of their unmarried daughters. The great interest in these cases is shown in the fact, as reported by the "Leeds Intelligencer," that when the case of Lord Melbourne was before the Court of Common Pleas, as much as five guineas was paid for a seat.

If once you go outside that general principle—prohibit indecency and the teaching of immorality, but do not try to go further than this—you run up against a great variety of opinions and cases which seem to be irreconcilable one with the other. I agree that extensive publication of matters of the kind, even when actual indecency is avoided, is not of the most elevating character. If it were possible to run newspapers devoted solely to politics, art, sermons, science, literature—Shakespeare and the musical classes—and to principles of law, that no doubt would be excellent from many points of view, but with the exception of the "Spectator," the "Nation," the "Saturday Review," the "Athenæum," and "Punch," the ideal appears to be impossible of realisation. The public read the reports of murders, of libels, of horse racing, and football matches, and I do not know that devotion to these is any less detrimental than the occasional reading of divorce court reports, always provided that there is an absence of indecency and incitement to immorality. You can single out these two offences for punishment, and I think it should be done, but if you go beyond that, as I have said, you are very soon in difficulties. Finally, in behalf of my profession, I would again lay stress upon the fact that, though there may be certain weekly newspapers which I and most journalists would like to see restrained, I must protest against legislation which would seem to be based on the erroneous supposition that in these matters newspapers are the worst offenders. We are not. The worst offenders are the class of novelists with which I dealt in the earlier part of this memorandum.

APPENDIX XVIII.

Statistics as to Divorce in Scotland.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Dunlop, Superintendent of Statistics in the Office of the Registrar-General of Scotland.

Source of Information.

In every case in which the status of any person is altered by the decree of a competent court, the Act 18 Vict. cap. 29, sec. 5, provides that the decree shall be reported to the Registrar-General, who then places a note on the margin of the entry in the marriage register relating to the case. Accordingly, all decrees of divorce are reported to the Registrar-General by the clerks of court, on a form supplied by him, in which the place and date of marriage, the particulars of the action, and sometimes the occupation of the husband are stated. By reference to the marriage registers the following additional information is obtainable, viz., the civil condition of the spouses at the time of marriage, their ages, their occupations whether the marriage was regular, i.e., preceded by banns or publication of notice and celebrated by a clergyman, or irregular, i.e., not so preceded by banns or publication and not celebrated by a clergyman, but registered on a warrant of the Sheriff, granted under the provisions of Lord Brougham's Act.

The figures in the tables appended are based on an examination of the decrees pronounced during ten years, 1900 to 1909. Decrees during that period numbered 1,801; of these the marriages in 147 cases had been contracted outside Scotland, and in 1,654 cases the marriages had been contracted in Scotland and were thus traceable in the Scottish marriage registers. The 1,654 divorces included two cross actions, in which decree was given both to the husband and to the wife, and thus the total number of persons affected was 3,304.

For the purpose of comparison of the statistics based on the examination of these ten years' divorces with marriage statistics, the marriage statistics of the year 1892 have been taken. The average duration of the marriages dissolved by divorce during the ten years is found to be 11½ years, and the middle of the year 1892 being 11½ years before the end of 1904, is taken as the mean date of marriage of those persons who were divorced in the years 1900 to 1909.

Many of the figures stated are given with reservation, as in many instances the numbers dealt with are too small to exclude the possibility of error from paucity of data. Another source of error arises from the fact that no allowance has been made for Scottish marriages dissolved by divorce in courts outside Scotland.

Frequency of Divorce.

One marriage out of 174 is dissolved by divorce, 1 out of 400 at the instance of the husband, and 1 out of 307 at the instance of the wife. This frequency is greater in the case of marriages of those previously unmarried at the time of marriage than in the case of marriages in which one or both of the spouses were widowed at the time of the marriage. Thus of all those who were bachelors at the time of marriage 1 in 166 is divorced, and of those who were widowers 1 in 277 is divorced; of those who were spinsters at the time of marriage 1 in 170 is divorced, and of those who were widows 1 in 278 is divorced. Of marriages between bachelors and spinsters, 1 in 164 is dissolved by divorce, and of those between bachelors and widows, 1 in 265. Of marriages between widowers and spinsters, 1 in 272 is dissolved by divorce, and of those between widowers and widows, 1 in 292. (Table I.)

Duration of Marriage before Divorce.

Taking the statistics of the same ten years, the period elapsing between marriage and divorce was found to vary from four months to 40 years, and to average 11·6 years. In actions raised by husbands the average duration was 11·1 years, and in those raised by wives 12·0. The average duration was longer in those cases in which both spouses were unmarried at the time of the marriage than in those in which one or other or both of the spouses were widowed at the time of marriage. Thus the average duration of those cases in which the husband was a bachelor at the time of marriage was 11·6, and in which he was a widower 10·5, and in those cases in which the wife was a spinster at time of marriage, 11·7 years, and in which she was a widow, 8·8. (Table II.)

Divorce Rate in each Year of Married Life.

There are no records, censal or other, showing the number of marriages of each year's duration existing in Scotland. For the purpose of estimating the chance of divorce in each year of married life, I have, by applying suitable death-rates to the recorded marriages of one year, estimated the probable number of marriages dissolved by death annually, and thus estimated the probable number of existing marriages of each year's duration. The marriages of the year 1892 were selected for the basis of the calculation, and those marriages were all assumed to be between men aged 27 and women aged 26, those ages being the average ages of all marrying during that year. The chances of divorce have been calculated by comparing the mean annual number of divorces of each year's duration of married life with the corresponding estimated number of existing marriages, The results of the calculation are shown in Table III., and in the chart. The divorce rate expressed as per 10,000 existing marriages is found to reach a maximum of 4·9 in the sixth year of marriage, and another maximum of 4·9 in the ninth year of marriage. The divorce rate of actions raised by husbands reaches a maximum of 2·4 in the ninth year of marriage, and that of actions raised by wives a maximum of 2·9 in the sixth year of marriage. The chance of divorce is found to increase rapidly during the first six years of marriage, and to fall gradually after the ninth year of marriage. (Table III., and chart.)

Age of Husband at Time of Divorce.

Their ages ranged from 20 to 73 years, and averaged 37·5. In actions raised by wives the average age of the husbands was 37·5, and in actions raised by husbands, 37·5. The average age of the husbands in those cases in which they were bachelors at the time of marriage was 36·8, and in those cases in which they were widowers at the time of marriage, 47·4. (Table IV.)

Age of Wife at Time of Divorce.

The ages of the wives ranged from 16 to 69, and averaged 34·6. In actions raised by the husbands, the average age of the wives was 34·1, and in those raised by the wives, 35·1. The average age of wives in cases where the wives were spinsters at the time of marriage was 34·4, and in those cases in which they were widows at the time of marriage, 41·9. (Table V.)

Age of Husbands at Time of Marriage.

The ages of the husbands at the time of marriage ranged from 16 to 56, and averaged 25·8. The rate of divorce is higher among those married young than among those married older. Of marriages ending in divorce 13·7 per cent. were of men of less than 21 years old, while the corresponding proportion of all marriages is only 6·2 per cent.; and the proportion of marriages ending in divorce in which the men were less than 25 years old was 55·8 per cent., the corresponding proportion of all marriages being 37·5. (Tables VI. and VII.)

Age of Wives at Time of Marriage.

Their ages ranged from 14 to 52, and averaged 22·9. The rate of divorce is higher among those married young than among those married older. Of marriages ending in divorce 38·6 per cent. were of women of less than 21 years old, the corresponding proportion of all marriages being 19·7, and the proportion of marriages ending in divorce in which the women were less than 25 years old was 77·3 per cent., the corresponding proportion of all such marriages being 55·9. (Tables VIII. and IX.)

Age at Marriage and Duration previous to Divorce.

In actions raised by husbands, the average duration of the marriage is found to be longer where the ages of the wives are younger, and the average duration shorter when the ages of the wives are older. The maximum duration is found when the ages of the wives are 19, and the duration markedly decreases when the ages of the wives exceed 30. Similarly with divorces raised at the instance of the wives, the maximum average duration of marriage is found to be when the husbands' ages are 19, and the average duration is found to markedly decrease when the husbands' ages are over 35. Young marriages more frequently end in the divorce court than older marriages, but older marriages which end in the divorce court come into that court after a shorter period than younger marriages which end there. (Table X.)

Comparative Frequency of Divorce in Regular and Irregular Marriages.

Of the 1,654 divorces traceable in the Scottish marriage registers, 1,424 were of persons regularly married, and 230 of persons irregularly married. The divorce rate of persons regularly married is found to be 1 in 193, and of those irregularly married is found to be 1 in 52. Regular marriages where divorce follows at the instance of the husband are 1 in 444, and at the instance of the wife, 1 in 341. The corresponding rates in the case of irregular marriages are 1 in 123, and 1 in 91. Thus divorce is nearly four times as frequent in irregular marriages as in regular marriages. (Table XI.)

Frequency of Divorce in Marriages in Stated Denominations.

Divorce is relatively most frequent among those married according to the rites of the Episcopalian Church, 1 in 101, and least so among those married according to the rites of the Roman Catholic Church, 1 in 548. In Established Church marriages the rate is 1 in 180, in Free Church, United Presbyterian Church, and United Free Church combined, 1 in 199, and in churches of other denominations combined, 1 in 155. (Table VIII.)

Frequency of Divorce in Stated Occupations.

The occupations most frequently mentioned in the 10 years' records of divorce are:—(1) Iron manufacture, engineering, &c., (2) food trades, (3) building trades, (4) mining, (5) farming, and (6) horse transport. To construct rates for comparison, the number of divorces in specified occupations, or in groups of occupations, have been compared with the number of men found in those occupations, or groups of occupations, at the time of the 1901 census. Rates thus obtained show that divorce was relatively most frequent among (1) soldiers, (2) indoor domestic servants, (3) seamen, (4) commercial men, (5) hotel service, and (6) police; and that divorce was relatively least frequent among (1) farmers, agricultural labourers, &c., (2) general labourers, (3) outdoor domestic servants, (4) clergy, (5) miners, and (6) building trades. (Table XII.)

Actions instituted by husbands were relatively to those instituted by wives most numerous in (1) hemp, jute, coir, &c. manufacture, 14 to 5; (2) soldiers, 26 to 14; (3) textile manufacture, 53 to 38; (4) general labourers, 16 to 12; and (5) building trades, 66 to 51. Occupations in which the proportion of the total divorces to be instituted by wives was greatest were, (1) indoor domestic servants, the proportion being 5·50 actions by wives to 1 by a husband; (2) outdoor domestic servants, the proportion being 4·00 to 1; (3) clerks, 3·43 to 1; (4) clergy, 3·00 to 1; (5) medical practitioners, 2·50 to 1; and (6) butchers, 2·11 to 1. (Table IX.)

TABLE I.

GENERAL STATISTICS.

All Marriages.

——	Number of Divorces.	Number of Marriages in which 1 Divorce occurred.
Instance of husband -	717	400
„ wife - -	935	307
Total - -	1,652	174

Marriages of Bachelors.

——	Number of Divorces.	Number of Marriages in which 1 Divorce occurred.
Instance of husband -	654	392
„ wife - -	891	288
Total - -	1,545	166

Marriages of Widowers.

Instance of husband -	63	480
„ wife - -	46	657
Total - -	109	277

Marriages of Spinsters.

Instance of husband -	685	396
„ wife - -	913	297
Total - -	1,598	170

Marriages of Widows.

Instance of husband -	32	487
„ wife - -	24	650
Total - -	56	278

Marriages between Bachelors and Spinsters.

Instance of husband -	640	389
„ wife - -	876	284
Total - -	1,516	164

Marriages between Bachelors and Widows.

Instance of husband -	14	549
„ wife - -	15	513
Total - -	29	265

Marriages between Widowers and Spinsters.

Instance of husband -	45	496
„ wife - -	37	604
Total - -	82	272

Marriages between Widowers and Widows.

Instance of husband -	18	439
„ wife - -	9	878
Total - -	27	292

TABLE II.

DURATION OF MARRIAGE BEFORE DIVORCE.

All Marriages.

—	Number of Divorces.	Maximum Duration.	Minimum Duration.	Average Duration.
Instance of husband	717	40 years	4 months	11·1
„ wife -	937	39 „	7 „	12·0
Total - -	1,654	—	—	11·6

Marriages of Bachelors.

Instance of husband	654	40 years	7 months	11·2
„ wife -	891	39 „	7 „	12.0
Total - -	1,545	—	—	11·6

Marriages of Widowers.

Instance of husband	63	28 years	4 months	9·8
„ wife -	46	29 „	1 year -	11·3
Total - -	109	—	—	10·5

Marriages of Spinsters.

Instance of husband	685	40 years	4 months	11·3
„ wife -	913	39 „	7 „	11·2
Total - -	1,598	—	—	11·7

Marriages of Widows.

Instance of husband	32	24 years	7 months	9·1
„ wife -	24	25 „	1 year -	7·6
Total - -	56	—	—	8·5

Marriages of Bachelors and Spinsters.

Instance of husband	640	40 years	7 months	11·2
„ wife -	876	39 „	7 „	12·1
Total - -	1,516	—	—	11·7

Marriages of Bachelors and Widows.

Instance of husband	14	22 years	7 months	8·6
„ wife -	15	12 „	3 years -	6·5
Total - -	29	—	—	7·6

Marriages of Widowers and Spinsters.

Instance of husband	45	28 years	4 months	10·0
„ wife -	37	29 „	1 year -	11·8
Total - -	82	—	—	10·8

Marriages of Widowers and Widows.

Instance of husband	18	24 years	3 years-	9·5
„ wife -	9	25 „	2 „ -	9·3
Total - -	27	—	—	9·4

TABLE III.

DIVORCE RATE IN EACH YEAR OF MARRIED LIFE.

Duration of Marriage.	Estimated No. of Marriages.	Average Yearly Divorces.		Ratio of Divorces to 10,000 estimated existing Marriages.
		Instance of Husband.	Instance of Wife.	Instance of Husband.	Instance of Wife.	Total.
—1	28,670	0·9	0·3	0·3	0·1	0·4
1	28,348	1·1	0·8	0·4	0·3	0·7
2	28,019	1·9	0·9	0·7	0·3	1·0
3	27,682	2·6	1·8	0·9	0·7	1·6
4	27,334	3·9	3·0	1·4	1·1	2·5
5	26,973	4·9	6·2	1·8	2·3	4·1
6	26,598	5·2	7·8	1·9	2·9	4·9
7	26,206	4·2	7·0	1·6	2·7	4·3
8	25,797	4·1	6·5	1·6	2·5	4·1
9	25,375	6·0	6·4	2·4	2·6	4·9
10	24,937	4·2	4·9	1·7	2·0	3·7
11	24,481	4·3	5·3	1·7	2·2	3·9
12	24,008	3·2	5·5	1·3	2·3	3·6
13	23,518	3·8	4·3	1·6	1·8	3·4
14	23,016	2·1	4·3	0·9	1·9	2·8
15	22,503	2·9	4·3	1·3	1·9	3·2
16	21,984	2·0	3·2	0·9	1·4	2·3
17	21,458	2·1	2·4	0·9	1·1	2·0
18	20,925	2·1	3·2	0·8	1·4	2·2
19	20,383	1·6	2·0	0·8	0·9	1·8
20	19,830	0·9	2·5	0·5	1·3	1·7
21	19,265	0·9	2·4	0·4	1·2	1·7
22	18,672	1·4	0·9	0·6	0·5	1·1
23	18,083	0·7	1·9	0·4	1·1	1·4
24	17,481	1·0	0·9	0·5	0·5	1·0
25	16,868	0·7	1·4	0·4	0·7	1·1

TABLE IV.

AGE OF HUSBAND AT TIME OF DIVORCE.

All Marriages.

—	Number of Divorces.	Minimum Age.	Maximum Age.	Average Age.
Instance of husband	717	20	73	37·5
„ wife -	937	22	65	37·5
Total - -	1,654	—	—	37·5

Marriages of Bachelors.

Instance of husband	654	20	66	36·4
„ wife -	891	22	65	37·1
Total - -	1,545	—	—	36·8

Marriages of Widowers.

Instance of husband	63	30	73	48·6
„ wife -	46	31	64	45·7
Total - -	109	—	—	47·4

Marriages of Spinsters.

Instance of husband	685	20	73	37·1
„ wife -	913	22	63	37·4
Total - -	1,598	—	—	37·3

Marriages of Widows.

—	Number of Divorces.	Minimum Age.	Maximum Age.	Average Age.
Instance of husband	32	23	64	44·1
„ wife -	24	28	65	42·3
Total - -	56	—	—	43·3

Marriages of Bachelors and Spinsters.

Instance of husband	640	20	66	36·4
„ wife -	876	22	63	37·1
Total - -	1,516	—	—	36·8

Marriages of Bachelors and Widows.

Instance of husband	14	23	50	35·0
„ wife -	15	28	65	37·2
Total - -	29	—	—	36·1

Marriages of Widowers and Spinsters.

Instance of husband	45	30	73	47·6
„ wife -	37	31	60	44·4
Total - -	82	—	—	46·2

Marriages of Widowers and Widows.

Instance of husband	18	39	64	51·1
„ wife -	9	42	64	50·8
Total - -	27	—	—	51·0

Table V.

Age of Wife at Time of Divorce.

All Marriages.

—	Number of Divorces.	Minimum Age.	Maximum Age.	Average Age.
Instance of husband	717	16	63	34·1
„ wife -	937	18	69	35·1
Total - -	1,654	—	—	34·6

Marriages of Bachelors.

Instance of husband	654	16	60	33·4
„ wife -	891	18	61	34·8
Total - -	1,545	—	—	34·3

Marriages of Widowers.

Instance of husband	63	19	63	40·5
„ wife -	46	23	69	39·5
Total - -	109	—	—	40·1

Marriages of Spinsters.

—	Number of Divorces.	Minimum Age.	Maximum Age.	Average Age.
Instance of husband	685	16	60	33·7
„ wife -	913	18	61	34·9
Total - -	1,598	—	—	34·4

Marriages of Widows.

Instance of husband	32	23	63	41·6
„ wife -	24	29	69	42·3
Total - -	56	—	—	41·9

Marriages of Bachelors and Spinsters.

Instance of husband	640	16	60	33·4
„ wife -	876	18	61	34·8
Total - -	1,516	—	—	34·2

Marriages of Bachelors and Widows.

Instance of husband	14	23	46	35·4
„ wife -	15	29	57	38·8
Total - -	29	—	—	37·2

Marriages of Widowers and Spinsters.

Instance of husband	45	19	57	38·1
„ wife -	37	23	49	37·4
Total - -	82	—	—	37·8

Marriages of Widowers and Widows.

Instance of husband	18	30	63	46·4
„ wife -	9	37	69	48·1
Total - -	27	—	—	46·9

Table VI.

Age of Divorced Men at Time of Marriage.

All Marriages.

—	Number of Divorces.	Minimum Age.	Maximum Age.	Average Age.
Instance of husband	717	16	55	26·4
„ wife -	937	17	56	25·4
Total - -	1,654	—	—	25·8

Marriages of Bachelors.

—	Number of Divorces.	Minimum Age.	Maximum Age.	Average Age.
Instance of husband	654	16	48	25·2
„ wife -	891	17	56	24·9
Total - -	1,545	—	—	25·0

Marriages of Widowers.

Instance of husband	63	22	55	38·9
„ wife -	46	24	52	34·3
Total - -	109	—	—	37·0

Marriages of Spinsters.

Instance of husband	685	16	55	26·0
„ wife -	913	17	46	25·1
Total - -	1,598	—	—	25·5

Marriages of Widows.

Instance of husband	32	21	52	35·0
„ wife -	24	21	56	35·2
Total - -	56	—	—	35·1

Marriages of Bachelors and Spinsters.

Instance of husband	640	16	48	25·2
„ wife -	876	17	46	24·8
Total - -	1,516	—	—	25·0

Marriages of Bachelors and Widows.

Instance of husband	14	21	33	26·0
„ wife -	15	21	56	30·8
Total - -	29	—	—	28·5

Marriages of Widowers and Spinsters.

Instance of husband	45	22	55	37·7
„ wife -	37	24	46	32·4
Total - -	82	—	—	35·3

Marriages of Widowers and Widows.

Instance of husband	18	28	52	41·9
„ wife -	9	32	52	42·5
Total - -	27	—	—	42·1

TABLE VII.

AGES OF MEN AT MARRIAGE.

Age of Husband.	Divorce at instance of		Total.	Percentage at each Age Group to Total.
	Husband.	Wife.		Men divorced.	All Men married in 1892.
Under 16	—	—	—	—	—
„ 17	1	—	1	0·06	0·01
„ 18	2	2	4	0·24	0·05
„ 19	15	13	28	1·69	0·53
„ 20	33	40	73	4·41	1·83
„ 21	59	61	120	7·26	3·80
„ 25	280	417	697	42·14	31·32
„ 30	183	271	454	27·45	33·21
„ 35	74	80	154	9·31	14·12
„ 40	36	39	75	4·54	6·83
„ 45	16	8	24	1·45	3·42
„ 50	12	4	16	0·97	2·05
„ 55	5	1	6	0·36	1·29
„ 60	1	1	2	0·12	0·77
Over 60	—	—	—	—	0·77
Total -	717	937	1,654	100·00	100·00

TABLE VIII.

AGE OF DIVORCED WOMEN AT TIME OF MARRIAGE.

All Marriages.

—	Number of Divorces.	Minimum Age.	Maximum Age.	Average Age.
Instance of husband	717	15	52	22·8
„ wife -	937	14	49	23·0
Total - -	1,654	—	—	22·9

Marriages of Bachelors.

Instance of husband	654	15	37	22·1
„ wife -	891	14	48	22·8
Total - -	1,545	—	—	22·5

Marriages of Widowers.

Instance of husband	63	18	52	30·6
„ wife -	46	17	49	27·9
Total - -	109	—	—	29·5

Marriages of Spinsters.

Instance of husband	685	15	52	22·4
„ wife -	913	14	43	22·7
Total - -	1,598	—	—	22·6

Marriages of Widows.

Instance of husband	32	22	46	32·6
„ wife -	24	25	49	34·8
Total - -	56	—	—	33·5

Marriages of Bachelors and Spinsters.

—	Number of Divorces.	Minimum Age.	Maximum Age.	Average Age.
Instance of husband	640	15	37	22·0
„ wife -	876	14	43	22·6
Total - -	1,516	—	—	22·3

Marriages of Bachelors and Widows.

Instance of husband	14	22	34	26·6
„ wife -	15	25	48	32·5
Total - -	29	—	—	29·7

Marriages of Widowers and Spinsters.

Instance of husband	45	18	52	27·9
„ wife -	37	17	38	25·3
Total - -	82	—	—	26·8

Marriages of Widowers and Widows.

Instance of husband	18	24	46	37·2
„ wife -	9	30	49	38·6
Total - -	27	—	—	37·7

TABLE IX.

AGES OF WOMEN AT MARRIAGE.

Age of Wife.	Divorce at instance of		Total.	Percentage at each Age Group to Total.
	Husband.	Wife.		Women divorced.	All Women married in 1892.
Under 15	—	1	1	0·06	0·00
„ 16	1	1	2	0·12	0·02
„ 17	10	7	17	1·03	0·21
„ 18	25	37	62	3·75	1·34
„ 19	72	77	149	9·01	3·55
„ 20	101	103	204	12·33	6·45
„ 21	83	121	204	12·33	8·12
„ 25	275	364	639	38·63	36·25
„ 30	104	165	269	16·26	26·03
„ 35	20	40	60	3·63	9·38
„ 40	17	16	33	2·00	4·28
„ 45	4	3	7	0·43	2·26
„ 50	4	2	6	0·36	1·15
„ 55	1	—	1	0·06	0·54
Over 55	—	—	—	—	0·42
Total -	717	937	1,654	100·00	100·00

TABLE X.

AGE at MARRIAGE and DURATION of MARRIAGE previous to DIVORCE.

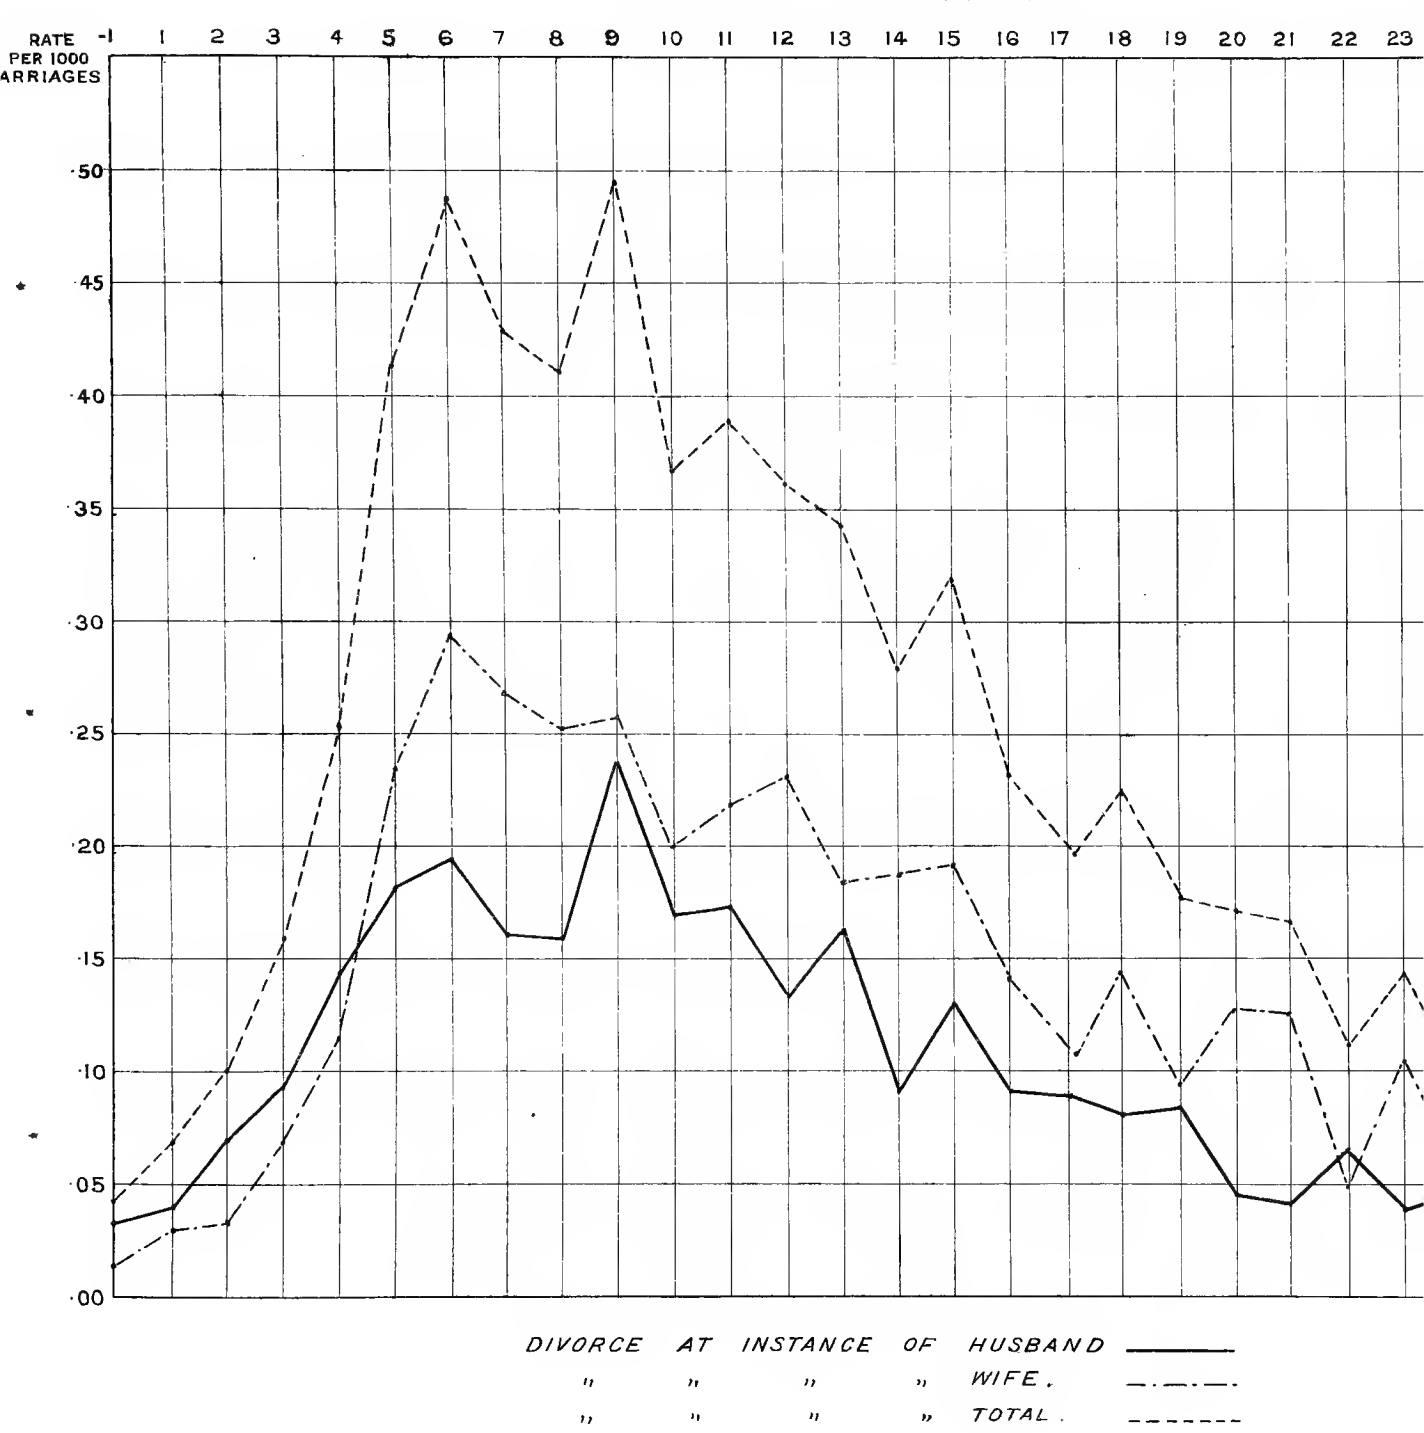
Action at Instance of Husband.		Action at Instance of Wife.
Age of Wife at Marriage.	Average Duration.	Age of Husband at Marriage.	Average Duration.
17	11·3	17	11·0
18	12·8	18	10·2
19	13·0	19	15·2
20	11·1	20	12·5
21–24	11·5	21–24	13·0
25–29	11·0	25–29	12·1
30–34	6·7	30–34	10·9
35–39	7·9	35–39	9·9
40–44	8·6	40–44	8·3
45–49	7·0	45–49	7·9

TABLE XI.

TABLE showing FREQUENCY of DIVORCE in REGULAR and IRREGULAR MARRIAGES, and in MARRIAGES according to the RITES of different DENOMINATIONS.

—	Number of Divorces.			Number of Marriages in which there is one Divorce.
	Instance of Husband.	Instance of Wife.	Total.	Instance of Husband.	Instance of Wife.	Total.
Regular - - - - -	619	805	1,424	444	341	193
Irregular - - - -	98	132	230	123	91	52
Established Church - - -	313	401	714	411	321	180
Free Church - - - -
United Presbyterian Church - -	202	248	450	443	361	199
United Free Church - - -
Roman Catholic Church - -	22	30	52	1,295	950	548
Episcopalian Church - - -	36	44	80	176	184	101
Other denominations - - -	46	82	128	431	242	155

DIVORCE RATES PER 1000 MARRIAGES.



4668. W.' T L.422-6-12/10.

Weller & Graham Ltd Lith

Table XII.

Table showing Frequency of Divorce in Selected Occupations.

Occupation.	Divorces.			Ratio of Population to each Divorce.
	Instance of Husband.	Instance of Wife.	Total.	Instance of Husband.	Instance of Wife.	Total.
Soldiers	26	14	40	246	457	160
Indoor servants	2	11	13	1,045	190	161
Seamen	30	46	76	681	444	269
Merchants, &c.	22	21	43	660	691	338
Hotel service	14	27	41	1,050	583	375
Police	6	7	13	873	749	403
Butchers	9	19	28	1,285	609	413
Medical practitioners	2	5	7	1,453	581	415
Bakers	17	31	48	1,248	685	442
Hemp, &c. manufacture	14	5	19	754	2,110	555
Dress manufacture	20	60	80	2,285	761	571
Grocers	15	28	43	1,677	862	585
Food trades	75	90	165	1,335	1,112	607
Clerks	14	48	62	2,751	802	621
Legal profession	6	9	15	1,600	1,066	640
Textile manufacture	53	38	91	1,225	1,708	713
Engine-drivers	10	12	22	1,724	1,437	749
Wood, furniture	23	17	40	1,464	1,980	842
Horse transport	33	26	59	1,628	2,066	911
Schoolmasters	3	5	8	2,511	1,507	942
Railway service	20	23	43	2,121	1,844	986
Iron, &c. manufacture, &c.	92	109	201	2,198	1,855	1,006
Building trades	66	51	117	2,063	2,669	1,166
Miners	45	54	99	2,897	2,460	1,322
Clergy	1	3	4	5,333	1,777	1,333
Outdoor servants	2	8	10	9,444	2,361	1,888
General labourers	16	12	28	3,439	4,585	1,965
Farming, &c.	41	42	83	4,185	4,027	2,038

APPENDIX XIX.—Statistics put in by Dr. Bisschop.

Arrondissement.	Population.		Divorce.
	1899.	1909.	1904.		1905.		1906.		1907.		1908.		1909.
	31st Dec.	31st Dec.	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.
A. 1. 's Hertogenbosch.	276,052	304,132	4	2	—	—	—	5	1	3	1	—	3	2
2. Breda -	242,769	279,367	3	6	1	9	1	6	3	4	1	11	1	5
3. Maastricht -	149,819	179,849	—	—	1	2	—	3	1	2	2	9	—	3
4. Roermond -	165,826	190,340	1	—	—	1	1	—	3	—	—	1	—	1
Total -	834,466	953,688	8	8	2	12	2	14	8	9	4	21	4	11
B. 5. Arnhem -	281,309	322,751	9	9	14	10	19	13	7	10	14	21	10	20
6. Zutphen -	185,266	210,117	1	13	5	15	2	11	7	14	7	14	5	13
7. Tiel - -	117,897	123,923	—	2	—	1	1	4	1	4	1	4	—	5
8. Zwolle -	164,351	179,447	1	10	4	9	2	14	4	17	5	15	—	12
9. Almelo -	146,957	182,237	1	12	4	4	—	5	2	8	1	9	1	9
Total -	895,780	1,018,475	12	46	27	39	24	47	21	53	28	63	16	59
C. 10. 's Gravenhage	403,547	504,042	27	70	31	65	50	78	56	83	53	83	41	90
11. Rotterdam -	527,053	650,540	168		170		207		211		199		220
12. Dordrecht -	175,728	187,326	6	19	4	22	6	19	2	16	2	23	5	21
13. Middelburg -	176,671	191,134	4	7	1	11	7	8	5	13	5	11	6	9
14. Zierikzee -	39,824	41,379	—	1	—	2	1	3	—	3	1	1	1	2
Total, with the exclusion of Rotterdam	1,322,623	1,574,421	37	97	36	100	64	108	63	115	61	118	53	122
D. 15. Amsterdam -	592,613	678,471	27	185	33	203	46	194	55	191	41	183	56	230
16. Alkmaar -	169,124	183,704	6	10	9	10	11	15	4	17	1	20	6	18
17. Haarlem -	217,019	261,035	3	13	10	29	12	34	10	38	11	37	14	41
18. Utrecht -	260,586	300,188	7	15	9	16	4	34	5	24	8	24	9	41
Total -	1,239,342	1,423,398	43	223	61	258	73	277	74	270	61	264	85	330
E. 19. Leeuwarden -	245,466	256,988	4	12	2	9	2	9	2	6	6	11	—	12
20. Heesenveen -	117,556	122,478	1	1	1	5	1	4	4	5	1	7	1	10
21. Groningen -	183,274	199,547	6	18	8	15	5	23	1	29	3	14	5	21
22. Winschoten -	116,328	128,422	3	2	—	7	3	3	—	1	3	4	4	3
23. Assan -	148,544	173,314	5	18	5	22	4	11	2	10	4	17	3	16
Total -	811,168	880,749	19	51	16	58	15	50	9	51	17	53	13	62
Total in the Kingdom, with the exclusion of Rotterdam -	5,103,379	5,850,731	119	425	142	467	178	496	175	498	170	519	169	584

APPENDIX XIX.—Statistics put in by Dr. Bisschop.

Dissolution of Marriage after Separation a Mensa et Thoro.												Separatio
1904.		1905.		1906.		1907.		1908.		1909.		1904.		1905.		Arrondissement.
Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.
—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	4	5	7	s Hertogenbosch.	1. A.
—	—	—	—	—	1	—	1	—	—	1	—	1	2	—	3	Breda.	2.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	1	Maastricht.	3.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	Roermond.	4.
—	—	1	—	—	1	—	1	—	—	1	—	1	7	6	12	Total.
1	—	—	1	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	1	3	8	3	8	Arnhem.	5. B.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	3	—	—	2	Zutphen.	6.
—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	1	1	1	Tiel.	7.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	1	Zwolle.	8.
—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	3	—	Almelo.	9.
1	—	1	1	—	1	1	—	—	1	—	1	6	11	7	12	Total.
—	2	—	1	—	1	—	2	—	1	—	2	6	8	3	14	s Gravenhage.	10. C.
—	—	1		—	—	3		2		—	—	34		24		Rotterdam.	11.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	1	1	2	Dordrecht.	12.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	4	2	2	Middelburg.	13.
—	—	1	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	3	—	1	Zierikzee.	14.
—	2	1	1	—	1	—	3	—	1	—	3	7	16	6	19	Total, with the exclusion of Rotterdam.
—	—	—	1	1	—	—	1	—	1	3	5	8	23	3	44	Amsterdam.	15. D.
—	1	—	—	—	1	—	—	1	—	—	—	1	2	—	2	Alkmaar.	16.
1	—	—	—	3	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	3	4	6	8	Haarlem.	17.
1	—	—	3	—	1	2	—	—	—	1	—	8	5	4	4	Utrecht.	18.
2	1	—	4	4	2	2	1	1	1	4	6	20	34	13	58	Total.
1	1	—	1	—	1	—	—	1	—	1	—	2	4	—	1	Leeuwarden.	19. E.
—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	—	—	Leeuwenveen.	20.
—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	1	—	1	—	—	6	—	8	Groningen.	21.
—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	—	2	—	Winschoten.	22.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	1	3	—	1	—	Assen.	23.
1	1	—	1	—	3	1	—	2	1	2	1	7	12	3	9	Total.
4	4	3	7	4	8	4	5	3	4	7	10	41	80	35	110	Total in the Kingdom, with the exclusion of Rotterdam.

APPENDIX XIX.—Statistics put in by Dr. Bisschop.

Arrondissement.	a Mensa et Thoro.								Separation by
	1906.		1907.		1908.		1909.		1904.		1905.		1906.		1907.
	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.
A. 1. 's Hertogenbosch.	2	8	—	2	4	—	—	2	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
2. Breda	1	2	2	3	4	7	3	3	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
3. Maastricht	—	3	—	1	—	1	—	2	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
4. Roermond	—	2	1	1	—	1	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	3	15	3	7	8	9	3	8	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
B. 5. Arnhem	3	2	5	5	2	4	6	5	2	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
6. Zutphen	—	—	—	1	—	4	2	3	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—
7. Tiel	1	—	—	1	1	1	1	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—
8. Zwolle	—	4	1	2	3	1	1	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
9. Almelo	2	—	1	2	1	—	3	3	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total	6	6	7	11	7	10	13	12	2	—	—	1	1	—	—	—
C. 10. 's Gravenhage	4	17	6	7	5	19	7	13	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—
11. Rotterdam	29		25		24		36		—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
12. Dordrecht	1	2	1	1	2	1	1	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
13. Middelburg	—	1	2	7	4	1	—	2	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—
14. Zierikzee	—	3	—	4	1	2	—	2	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total, with the exclusion of Rotterdam	5	23	9	19	12	23	8	18	—	—	2	—	—	—	—	—
D. 15. Amsterdam	11	32	10	38	14	31	4	37	—	—	1	—	—	—	2	—
16. Alkmaar	—	1	2	1	—	2	—	1	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—
17. Haarlem	2	7	6	18	9	11	3	17	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—
18. Utrecht	1	11	—	13	—	9	2	13	1	—	—	—	1	—	—	—
Total	14	51	18	70	23	53	9	68	1	—	2	—	2	—	2	—
E. 19. Leeuwarden	2	5	2	5	1	5	4	4	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
20. Heesenveen	—	—	1	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
21. Groningen	—	6	5	7	2	5	4	5	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—
22. Winschoten	1	2	—	1	—	2	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
23. Assan	4	—	1	—	1	—	—	2	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—
Total	7	13	9	14	4	12	8	12	1	—	2	—	—	—	—	—
Total in the Kingdom, with the exclusion of Rotterdam	35	108	46	121	54	107	41	118	4	—	6	1	3	—	2	—

APPENDIX XIX.—Statistics put in by Dr. Bisschop.

Mutual Consent.				Separatio bonorum.
1908.		1909.		1904.		1905.		1906.		1907.		1908.		1909.		Arrondissement.
Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.	Ord.	I.F.P.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	's Hertogenbosch.	1. A.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	—	—	—	1	—	Breda.	2.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Maastricht.	3.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Roermond.	4.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	—	—	—	1	—	Total.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Arnhem.	5. B.
—	—	1	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Zutphen.	6.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	Tiel.	7.
1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	—	1	—	—	—	Zwolle.	8.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	Almelo.	9.
1	—	1	—	1	—	—	—	—	2	—	—	2	—	—	—	Total.
—	—	—	—	1	—	2	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	's Gravenhage.	10. C.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	12		1		1		—	—	Rotterdam.	11.
1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Dordrecht.	12.
—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	2	—	—	—	Middelburg.	13.
—	—	—	—	1	—	1	—	3	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Zierikzee.	14.
1	—	—	—	3	—	3	—	4	—	1	—	2	—	—	—	Total, with the exclusion of Rotterdam.
2	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	Amsterdam.	15. D.
1	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Alkmaar.	16.
—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Haarlem.	17.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Utrecht.	18.
3	—	2	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	Total.
—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Leeuwarden.	19. E.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Heeseuveen.	20.
—	—	—	—	1	—	1	—	3	—	3	—	3	—	—	—	Groningen.	21.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	Winschoten.	22.
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Assen.	23.
—	—	—	1	1	—	1	—	3	—	4	—	3	—	—	—	Total.
5	—	3	1	6	—	4	—	7	3	6	1	7	—	1	—	Total in the Kingdom, with the exclusion of Rotterdam.

APPENDIX XX.

Returns as to Criminal and other Statistics from Ireland.

Dublin Metropolitan Police Court,
Inns Quay,
10th February 1911.

Sir,

In reply to your letter of yesterday's date, I beg to say that our statistics in cases of assault do not distinguish between assaults by males on their wives and on females not so related to them, and I am therefore unable to give you any reply to question 1 (a). As regards 1 (b) I give you the number of males convicted of such offences, and as regards 1 (c) I give the number of females convicted. For all practical purposes it may be assumed that the males referred to are husbands and the females wives; the error, if any, is very slight. I also give the number of maintenance orders made. The figures are for the years 1907, 1908, and 1909, and are for the whole of this police district.

I trust that this information will be sufficient for the purpose for which you require it.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Ernest G. Swifte,
Chief Magistrate.

The Secretary,
Royal Commission on Divorce
and Matrimonial Causes,
21, St. James's Square,
London.

Police District of Dublin Metropolis.

——	1907.	1908.	1909.
Males convicted of cruelty to children or neglect to maintain wives.	21	15	29
Females convicted of cruelty to children.	10	17	45
Maintenance orders made against husbands on the ground of desertion, or otherwise.	82	89	80

(No. 3882.) Dublin Castle,
3rd March 1911.

Sir,

With reference to your letter of the 22nd ultimo, addressed to the Superintendent, Judicial and Criminal Statistics Department, Dublin, I am directed by the Lord Lieutenant to state, for the information of the Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, that the Irish police returns give the number of maintenance orders made by courts of summary jurisdiction against husbands on the ground of desertion or other causes.

The criminal statistics, however, do not contain particulars as to the number of husbands convicted of assaults on wives, or as to the number of husbands or wives convicted of cruelty to children; and to obtain this information it would be necessary to refer to the local police throughout Ireland, and much labour would be involved in the compilation of the statistics.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. B. Dougherty.

The Secretary,
Royal Commission on Divorce
and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square,
London, S.W.

(No. 3/M/559.) General Register Office,
Charlemont House, Dublin,
10th February 1911.

Sir,

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 9th instant, and to state that a communication will be sent to you in due course on the subject referred to.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Daniel S. Doyle,
Asst. Registrar-General.

The Secretary,
Royal Commission on Divorce
and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square,
London, S.W.

(No. 3/M/559.) General Register Office,
Charlemont House, Dublin,
21st March 1911.

Sir,

With reference to my letter of the 10th ultimo, I now have pleasure in replying to the inquiries contained in your letter referred to therein.

(1) Lunacy in Ireland.—I would suggest that inquiry might be made from the Office of the Inspectors of Lunatics, Dublin Castle, where the latest figures are available, those obtainable from this department being for the census of 1901.

(2) Marriages in Ireland.—I beg to refer you to my annual report (copy enclosed) for 1909, page ix, and tables on pages 16 and 17, and to say that the ages at marriage are not furnished with the same exactness in Ireland as in England, "Full age" or "Minor" being sufficient for statutory requirements.

(3) Criminal Statistics (Ireland).—I beg to state that:—

(a) This information is not shown separately in the reports.

(b) There were 274 applications made by married women for maintenance in 1909, 176 orders were granted.

(c) Not shown in reports.

(d) Orders for maintenance under Children's Act—289 applications and 272 orders. (Table XVIII, Criminal Statistics, 1909.)

The annual report on Judicial Statistics (Civil and Criminal), containing the figures given above, can be obtained through His Majesty's Stationery Office. I regret that I have not a copy available to forward.

The total number of persons tried at assizes and quarter sessions for neglect and cruelty to children was 25, two of males and 23 of females.

The total number of such cases tried by summary jurisdiction was 1,299 cases, and there were 76 cases of neglecting to maintain family, &c. (Table XV.)

I beg to add that Sir R. E. Matheson's paper to which you allude was published in 1905, by Messrs. Sealy, Bryers, and Walker, 94–96, Middle Abbey Street, Dublin.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
William J. Thompson,
Registrar-General.

The Secretary,
Royal Commission on Divorce, &c.,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square,
London, S.W.

APPENDIX XXI.

Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, S.W.,
8th February 1910.

DEAR MR. WATERTON,

I UNDERSTAND from the Chairman of this Commission that you have had considerable experience as one of the head clerks of the Divorce Department of the Principal Probate Registry in difficulties as to procedure in poor cases and particularly in formâ pauperis, and that you may be able to assist this Commission with some views or information with regard thereto, more particularly as to simplifying and cheapening procedure in such matters.

If so, I am directed to inquire whether you will be good enough to send to me a short memorandum dealing with the difficulties, if any, and any views you may entertain and method you may have to suggest as to simplifying and cheapening divorce procedure, more particularly possibly with reference to in formâ pauperis proceedings.

Yours very truly,
H. GORELL BARNES,
Secretary.

W. Waterton, Esq.,
Principal Probate Registry,
Somerset House,
Strand, W.C.

Principal Probate Registry,
Somerset House, London, W.C.,
10th February 1911.

DEAR MR. GORELL BARNES,

IN answer to your letter I beg to enclose a memorandum on alterations in divorce practice on the lines suggested by you. I have been sixteen years in this department and during that period have had frequent interviews with paupers, and am fully acquainted with the difficulties they have in conducting their suits. I wish to point out that the alterations I have suggested are given in outline only. If the Commission should seriously consider them I am quite prepared to give fuller details.

I am,
Yours faithfully,
WATERTON.

The Hon. H. Gorell Barnes.

Memorandum on Divorce Practice.

Contentious Department,
Principal Probate Registry,
Somerset House, London, W.C.,
10th February 1911.

I BEG to recommend to the Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes for their consideration the following alterations in the present practice in divorce suits with a view to simplifying and cheapening the procedure in such matters :—

(1) The establishment of a personal application and correspondence department in divorce suits on similar lines to the present personal application department in probate matters.

Under the present system, when a petitioner obtains an order to sue in formâ pauperis, he is obliged to get assistance to draw up his petition, affidavit and citations, as he is totally ignorant of the practice, and he must attend personally at the registry to file his papers. After the petition is filed he is again obliged to call for the sealed copies of the petition and citation. Again he must attend to make the necessary search for appearance of respondent, and apply for the registrar's certificate, and after that he must attend again to set the cause down for trial. This is the present procedure in an ordinary undefended suit where no appearance is entered. Thus the petitioner is obliged to attend no less than five times at the registry in order to set his cause down. If the petitioner resides at a considerable distance from London, the cost of the journey to London and the consequent loss of work is prohibitive, and in many cases petitions are abandoned on this account.

If the department, as I have suggested, were established, it would not be difficult for the clerks in the department to draw up the necessary papers on printed forms. The petition could be then filed, and the sealed copies for service forwarded by post. After the time for appearance had expired, a search could be made by a clerk in the department, and the cause set down for trial. Notice could then be sent to the petitioner that this had been done. I do not anticipate there would be any difficulty in drawing up the necessary forms and instructions for applicants. If this method were adopted the petitioner would only have to attend once at the registry to obtain his order to sue in formâ pauperis, and give his instructions for the drawing up of his petition. In many cases the applicants are unable to pay the necessary fees for counsel's certificate in pauper causes, and I think that the statement of facts could be drawn up in the registry, and the certificate given by one of the registrars. It often occurs, especially if women are the petitioners, that the respondent has gone abroad, or that his present address is unknown. This necessitates a motion to court for substituted service by advertisement. The cost of these advertisements are often totally beyond the means of the petitioner. I suggest, therefore, that the necessary papers for the motion should be drawn up in the registry, counsel assigned to the petitioner for the motion, and that the advertisements should be limited to insertion of once only in one newspaper. In support of this suggestion I may say that I have never known an appearance to be entered in answer to an advertisement.

I am assuming that these pauper causes would be undefended, and from my experience, I am quite sure that the percentage of defended causes would be extremely small, and in defended causes I do not see any difficulty in dealing with them by correspondence, provided that a department was adequately equipped for that purpose. I fully anticipate that, if this department were established, it would lead to a considerable increase in pauper cases, and that the present department would have to be enlarged. I also wish to suggest that citations in all cases should be abolished, and that the petition should be treated in the same manner as a writ in the King's Bench Division. This would simplify the practice not only in pauper cases, but in all others.

(2) Trial of Pauper Causes.—I wish to suggest that in each term a special day should be appointed for the trial of these causes. I do not think that they would amount to 20 in each term, and could be easily heard on one day. It frequently happens that these causes are struck out owing to the non-appearance of the petitioner, and letters are often received at the registry asking for information when causes are likely to be heard. It is impossible to give the information required, and it is useless to tell them to watch the cause list, as when parties reside at a long distance from London they have no opportunity of doing so.

W. WATERTON.

APPENDIX XXII.

(No. 69.)

SIR, Lisbon, November 19th, 1910.

I HAVE the honour, with reference to my despatch No. 64 of yesterday's date, to forward a very valuable and interesting memorandum prepared by Mr. Gaisford showing the principal provisions of the new Divorce Law.

Decisions pronounced under the law become operative at once—that is to say, after the lapse of ten days, subject to the restrictions as to re-marriage laid down in Article 55. No provision is made to prevent the institution of proceedings, or reversal of a decision, in cases where the petitioner has, himself or herself, been guilty of any of the offences for which divorce or separation is permitted.

The publication of an enactment which creates such a fundamental change in the condition of social life has naturally produced a profound impression.

I have the honour to be, with the highest respect,
Sir,
Your most obedient humble servant,

The Right Hon. (Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.
Sir Edward Grey, Bart., M.P., &c.

PORTUGUESE LAW OF DIVORCE, NOVEMBER 4TH, 1910.

Article* 4. The legitimate causes for divorce are: 1, adultery; 2, conviction of one of the major crimes† specified in Articles 55 and 57 of the Penal Code; 3, ill-treatment; 4, abandonment of home for not less than three years; 5, absence for not less than four years during which the absentee gives no tidings of him or herself; 6, incurable lunacy, three years after the date on which insanity has been declared by the competent authorities; 7, separation de facto by mutual consent for ten years; 8, inveterate gambling habits; 9, incurable contagious disease or any disease which induces sexual aberration.

§ . Divorce for cause No. 2 cannot be admitted if the petitioner has been convicted of complicity in the crime committed by the defendant.

§ . Referring to cause No. 9, the nature and character of the disease must have been verified beforehand.

Article 6. The plaintiff shall bring forward in the petition some one of the causes specified in Article 4 as a legitimate cause for divorce, and shall produce the marriage certificate and also a copy of the judicial sentence if the petition is based on causes No. 2 or No. 6.

Article 8, § 2. There cannot be more than five witnesses to each fact alleged, and the total number of witnesses on each side cannot exceed 30.

§ . The decree of divorce shall contain a summons from the judge to both parties to confer with him respecting the destiny of the children under age, their maintenance, and any other point it may be necessary to settle with regard to them.

Article 19, § 2. A divorced woman cannot use the name or names she has derived from her husband.

The Children.

Article 21. The children shall for preference be confided to the parent in whose favour divorce has been pronounced. When this is obviously undesirable they shall be put under the charge of some third person, preferably a near relative.

Article 22. Nevertheless the father and mother retain their parental rights until deprived of them,‡ and the right to see to the education of the children.

Article 24. Both father and mother are obliged to contribute towards the maintenance of the children in proportion to their means. Such contribution is a first charge on the parents' estate.

The Estate.

Article 26. Divorce always entails separation of property, each party obtaining full rights over that which remains in his or her possession.

The separation and division of the estate can be settled à l'aimable.

Article 27. The guilty party loses all benefits derived from the innocent party, whether received under the ante-nuptial contract or subsequent to it. Similarly the innocent party retains all such benefits. The innocent party can, however, renounce such right, but should there be children only, in the latter's favour.

Alimony.

Article 29. Either party can claim alimony from the other if in need thereof. The amount of such alimony must be settled in accordance with the needs of the person receiving it, but can never exceed one-third of the net income of the other.

Article 31. The amount of alimony can be reduced at the request of the person contributing it if unable to continue to pay the original amount or if the other party no longer needs it. Similarly the amount can be increased if the receiving party is in need, or if the circumstances of the other have improved, unless such improvement is derived from a subsequent marriage.

Article 32. The right to receive or the obligation to provide alimony ceases when the receiving party contracts another marriage or becomes through immoral behaviour unworthy to receive it, and when the contributing party is no longer able to provide it.

Article 33. The contracting of a fresh marriage by the contributing party does not exempt him or her from the obligation to contribute alimony, nor can it be used as a pretext to have the amount reduced.

Article 34. If the decree of divorce is not pronounced the petitioner cannot renew his suit for two years on the same count, but is not prevented from doing so on a different one.

The non-success of a divorce suit brought on account of causes 1, 2, 3, 4, 8, 9 constitutes presumption of grave injury to the defendant, and is a sufficient basis for the latter to bring an action petitioning for divorce or separation of persons and property.

Divorce by Mutual Consent.

Article 35. Divorce by mutual consent can only be obtained by persons of over 25 years of age who have been married for at least two years.

Article 36. The following documents must be exhibited:—(1) Certificate of marriage; (2) birth certificate; (3) specific and detailed declaration of all property; (4) agreement come to with regard to the possession of the children under age; (5) declaration as to the sum which each parent will contribute towards the maintenance and education of the children; (6) certified copy of ante-nuptial contract.

Article 37. The petition is disallowed if the terms of Article 36 are not complied with. If the petition is allowed the judge shall summon the parties to appear before him, and if they are not reconciled and persist in their determination, he shall cause a deed of agreement to be drawn up in the presence of two men of good faith designated by himself, who shall sign as witnesses.

Article 39. The judge shall ratify the deed and authorise provisional divorce for one year.

§ . This provisional divorce does not allow the parties to exercise any right resulting from the dissolution of the marriage either with regard to persons or estate.

Article 40. After the year has elapsed the parties shall, spontaneously or at the instance of one of them, appear once more in person before the judge and declare that they adhere to their determination. If at this juncture a reconciliation is effected the provisional divorce shall be annulled; if not, their agreement shall be ratified once more, and definite divorce will then be decreed.

* Articles not mentioned in this summary are not of effective importance.

† Such as murder, assaults, robbery, offences against morality.

‡ Presumably under the provisions of Article 21.

Article 41. Parties who, having petitioned for divorce by mutual consent, are reconciled, cannot obtain it on a subsequent occasion, but they are at liberty to sue for a divorce in the ordinary way.

Separation of Persons and Estate.

Article 43. Separation is open to the contending parties on the same grounds as in actions for divorce,*

Article 44. The innocent party can opt for divorce or separation.

Article 46. Either of the parties can, five years after the sentence authorising separation has been passed, claim the conversion of the separation order into a decree of divorce.

Article 47. The separation of parties who have become reconciled does not prevent one of them from bringing a divorce action against the other, nor does it prevent both parties from petitioning for a divorce by mutual consent.

General Provisions.

Article 54. No provision can be inserted in an antenuptial contract or a will which prevents the beneficiary from suing for a divorce or imposes any penalty for so doing.

Article 55. A divorced woman cannot contract a fresh marriage until a year has elapsed since the dissolution of her previous marriage; the husband can remarry after six months.

§ 1. This article is inoperative in cases where divorce has been granted for causes 6, 7, or 9.

§ 2. The party proved to be suffering from one of the diseases mentioned in Article 4, is forbidden to contract a fresh marriage, but the other party can do so after the period stipulated in this Article.

Article 56. The provisions of the Civil Code (Article 101, &c.)† are applicable to the child born of a divorced woman within 300 days of the dissolution of her marriage.

Article 57. Matrimony legitimizes all children born previous to the marriage of their parents.

Article 58. A child born in wedlock and repudiated by the husband can also be legitimized by the subsequent marriage of its parents.

Article 59. The legitimate children of divorced persons can succeed their parents or grandparents without distinction of sex or age even if they are the issue of different unions.

Article 60. The children of divorced persons of between 18 and 21 years shall be considered of full age for all legal purposes.

(No. 84.)

SIR, Lisbon, December 30th, 1910.

WITH reference to my despatch No. 69 of the 19th ultimo, enclosing a memorandum respecting the new Portugese Divorce Law, I have the honour to forward translation of a decree, published in the "Diario do Governo," of the 22nd instant, which provides that any period passed since a declaration of incurable lunacy shall be taken into account for the fulfilment of the condition laid down in section IV. of the law—namely, that three years must elapse before proceedings for divorce can be taken.

I have the honour to be, with the highest respect, Sir,

Your most obedient humble servant,

(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

The Right Hon.
Sir Edward Grey, Bart., M.P.,
&c., &c., &c.

Enclosure in Sir F. VILLIERS' No. 84 of December 30th, 1910.

(Diario do Governo of December 22nd, 1910.)

(Translation.)

Decree.

Whereas it is necessary to explain No. 7‡ of Article IV. of the decree, with force of law, of November 3, 1910, in order that, in the absence of a sentence for privation of civil rights owing to insanity at the time when incurable lunacy was declared, the party affected shall not be obliged to wait for three years more before instituting proceedings, which would be to the grave detriment of him or herself and the children, and without the least advantage to the other party, and would not further the objects the legislator had in view in fixing that period, the Provisional Government of the Portuguese Republic make known in the name of the Republic, that the following has been decreed to have the force of law:—

Article I.—For the purposes of No. 7 of Article IV. of the decree, with force of law, of the 3rd of November 1910, the judge shall, when possible, designate, in the sentence therein mentioned, the minimum space of time of incurable lunacy already elapsed, the assent of the competent experts being essential therefor; and as soon as three years of incurable lunacy have passed, the other party may bring an action for divorce.

§ . In cases where it is mentioned in the action for privation of civil rights that three years of incurable lunacy have elapsed, the action for divorce may be instituted at any time from the day immediately following that on which the sentence for privation of civil rights has been filed.

Article II.—This decree will come into force immediately, and will be submitted for consideration to the Constituent Assembly.

Article III.—Legislation to the contrary is hereby revoked.

It is therefore ordained that all the authorities to whom the knowledge and execution of this decree may appertain shall fulfil it and cause it to be fulfilled in its integrity.

The ministers of all the departments shall cause it to be printed, published, and circulated.

Given at the seat of the Government of the Republic this 21st day of December 1910.

JOAQUIM THEOPHILI BRAGA.
AFFONSO COSTA.
JOSE RELVAS.
ANTONIO XAVIER CORREIA BARRETO.
AMARO DE AZEVEDO GOMES.
BERNANDINO MACHADO.
MANOEL DE BRITO CAMACHO.

APPENDIX XXIII.

Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House, 21, St. James's Square, S.W.,
22nd June 1910.

SIR, LORD GORELL, the Chairman of this Commission, has recently received a letter in which it is stated that in India adultery has been made a criminal offence.

It would be of considerable assistance to the Commissioners, to whom some such suggestion has been made by various witnesses, if you would be good enough to inform me whether this is so, and to give

* On the same grounds and with the same effect as regards children and property as in actions for divorce.

† Provisions for establishing legitimacy.

‡ No. 6 in the summary forwarded in despatch No. 69 of November 19th, 1910.

me any details of such law; and either be good enough to inform me whether I can obtain, or yourself supply me with, reports, if any, from the Government of India upon it, and any further documents, as, for instance, expressions of opinion from commissioners or magistrates and others with regard thereto, which would be of interest and assistance to the Commission.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
H. GORELL BARNES,
Secretary.

The Under Secretary of State for India in Council,
St. James's Park, S.W.

India Office, Whitehall, S.W.,
27th July 1910.

SIR,

IN reply to your letter of the 22nd ultimo, on the subject of the treatment of adultery in Indian law, I am directed by Viscount Morley to transmit, for the information of the Chairman of the Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, a copy of a Note by the Legal Adviser to the Secretary of State.

It is presumed that the texts of the Indian Law Commission Report, Indian Penal Code, and the Indian Divorce Act are accessible to the Royal Commission. Search has been made in the records of this Office for reports or expressions of opinion by magistrates or judges on the results of the change introduced into the Indian Penal Code in 1860, but without result. Lord Morley hopes, however, that the Note furnished may be of assistance to the Commissioners.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
COLIN G. CAMPBELL.

The Secretary,
Royal Commission on Divorce,
Winchester House, St. James's Square, S.W.

Note on Adultery as an Offence under the Indian Penal Code.

Under the Indian Penal Code the offence of adultery is made punishable, not as regards the husband or the wife, but in the person of the stranger or third party, the man who knowing or having reason to believe a woman to be the wife of another, has sexual intercourse with her. (See sec. 497 I.P.C.)

The guilty wife is not punishable as an abettor, nor is the guilty husband if he commits adultery with an unmarried woman.

Adultery is a criminal offence only in the case of a man, who has illicit intercourse with a woman who is, and whom the man knows or has reason to believe to be, the wife of another man, without the consent or connivance of the husband.

The question whether adultery should be made a criminal offence was carefully and exhaustively considered by the Indian Law Commission, of which Lord (then Mr.) Macaulay was chairman. A large body of evidence on the subject was collected, as we are told in Note Q. to the Report, and on consideration the Commissioners decided that adultery should, so far as the Anglo-Indian law was concerned, be classed as a civil injury only, and not as a criminal offence.

The reason on which this opinion was mainly based was that, having regard to the social conditions prevailing amongst Indians (both Mahomedans and Hindoos) and also among Europeans and Eurasians, the law making adultery punishable as a criminal offence was likely to prove quite ineffective as a remedial measure. It was thought that the upper classes of society would not have recourse to the law as a protection from injury or as a vindication of family honour, while the lower classes would use the criminal court as a means of enforcing compensation to the injured husband for the loss of his wife's services. Twenty-three years afterwards, when the report of the Law Commission came to be considered by the Select Committee appointed by the Legislative Council of India, the Committee (Sir Barnes Peacock being the chairman) took a different view. The Committee thought that adultery as now restrictively defined in the Indian Penal Code should be made a criminal offence. Sir Barnes Peacock as vice-chairman of the Council, in moving that the Bill as founded on the Report of the Select Committee should be passed, said, "The law provided protection to a man "in respect to his property, but that was a small "matter as compared with the protection which a man "required in respect of what was far nearer and "dearer to him, namely, his family honour. A man "who entered another's house and robbed him of his "property would be punished, and he saw no reason "why a man who seduced another's wife and thereby "rendered him miserable for life ought not to be "punished also."

There can be no question, I think, that the experience of 50 years, the period during which adultery has been punishable as a criminal offence, has justified the wisdom and soundness of the opinion of Lord Macaulay's Commission, rather than that of the Select Committee who framed the law as it now stands. This law, which makes adultery punishable with imprisonment of either description (i.e., rigorous or simple) for a term which may extend to five years, or with fine, or with both, has in effect remained a dead letter. Very rarely, indeed, has recourse been made to this law as a protection from injury to, or in vindication of family honour. It is safe to say that the higher classes, whether Indian or European, have, as a rule, avoided the criminal court as a form for seeking reparation for family dishonour. So far as these classes are concerned, honour has been vindicated, or reparation obtained in other ways.

During 30 years of legal experience in India, I remember only one case where a charge of adultery came before the criminal sessions of the High Court. An Indian attorney was tried and convicted before the High Court on a charge of adultery with a niece, a young married woman, who was living in his house. It was a gross case, no doubt, but it was the very grossness and notoriety of the offence which compelled the family, very reluctantly, to take criminal proceedings.

Occasionally, persons of the lower classes, both Indians and Eurasians, have brought charges of adultery in the magistrates' courts, but even in these cases, very rarely have the charges proceeded to trial and conviction. Almost invariably an arrangement has been arrived at, and the case compounded for a money payment.

The fact is, the section has been used, as the Indian Law Commissioners anticipated, as a means of obtaining compensation for what was in reality regarded as a civil injury only.

There are certain special circumstances which have, perhaps, contributed to this result.

Nine years after the Penal Code became law, the Divorce Act was passed. This was Act 4 of 1869, which affects Christian marriages only. By this Act the English law as regards adultery as a ground for dissolution of marriages or for judicial separation was introduced to India, and the Christian husband whose wife was guilty of adultery preferred to seek relief under this Act, rather than have recourse to the criminal court for the purpose of punishing the adulterers.

As regards Hindu and Mahomedan society, amongst the upper classes, adultery on the part of a wife is of very rare occurrence. The seclusion of the Purdah system tends, no doubt, to preserve the purity of the family life, so far as the females are concerned. The Mahomedan law allows the husband to divorce an erring or faithless wife in a simple and easy manner, without recourse to the law courts. The Hindu law, on the other hand, does not provide for divorce, but regards marriage as indissoluble, but rigid caste rules and social customs provide drastic methods for punishing a faithless wife. On the whole, therefore, Indian experience would seem hardly to justify the proposal to make adultery a criminal offence under the English law.

(Signed) S. G. SALE.

28th June 1910.

APPENDIX XXIV.

Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, S.W.,
14th November 1910.

SIR,

As you are perhaps aware, a Royal Commission was appointed by his late Majesty—

" to inquire into the present state of the law " and the administration thereof in divorce and " matrimonial causes and applications for separa- " tion orders, especially with regard to the " position of the poorer classes in relation " thereto, and the subject of the publication " of reports of such causes and applications; " and to report whether any, and what, amend- " ments should be made in such law, or the " administration thereof, or with regard to the " publication of such reports."

Questions have been raised with reference to payments for maintenance under orders made under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895.

A suggestion has been made to the Commissioners that, in view of the great difficulty frequently found by married women in enforcing payment of the amount which they are by the orders of magistrates or justices to receive, it might be advisable that the magistrates or justices should have power to make an order to attach the wages of a respondent husband against whom such an order as aforesaid has been made, and to direct that notice may be given to the employer of such husband that a certain proportion of his wages should be paid direct to the applicant wife, or to some officer of the court appointed for that purpose.

On the other hand, it has been stated that, if such a course were adopted, the employee's employment might be jeopardised, since the employers, in such cases, might take the view that it was undesirable to retain in their service an employee, in respect of whose wages it would be necessary that they should deal in the manner above indicated.

The matter is one to which the Commissioners attach considerable importance, and one upon which they feel that it would be of advantage and should prove of assistance to them to have the views of the London County Council, since it has so many employees under its direction, with regard to the suggestion above stated.

I have, therefore, been directed by the Chairman, on behalf of the Commissioners, to communicate with you to inquire whether you would be good enough to inform me what are the views entertained by the London County Council upon the matter, in order that I may be in a position to bring them before the Commissioners.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
H. GORELL BARNES,
Secretary.

The Clerk of the Council,
London County Council,
Spring Gardens, S.W.

London County Council,
(47146.) County Hall, Spring Gardens, S.W.,
16th November 1910.

SIR,

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th instant as to payments for maintenance under orders made under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895. The request of the Royal Commission shall be laid before the appropriate Committee of the Council early next week, and I will communicate with you again as soon as a decision shall have been arrived at.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
G. L. GOMME,
Clerk of the Council.

The Secretary of the Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, S.W.

London County Council,
(50088.) County Hall, Spring Gardens, S.W.,
30th November 1910.

SIR,

THE Council has had under consideration your letter of the 14th instant, asking for the opinion of the Council on the proposal to empower magistrates and justices to make an order to attach the wages of a respondent husband, against whom an order for maintenance under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, has been made, and to direct that notice may be given to the employer of such husband that a certain proportion of his wages should be paid direct to the applicant wife, or to some officer of the court appointed for that purpose.

The Council at its meeting on the 29th instant passed a resolution on the subject as follows:—

That the Council does not desire to express an opinion upon the proposal that magistrates and justices should be empowered to make an order to attach the wages of a respondent husband, against whom an order for maintenance under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, has been made, and to direct that notice may be given to the employer of such husband that a certain proportion of his wages should be paid direct to the applicant wife, or to some officer of the court appointed for that purpose; and that the Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes be so informed.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
G. L. GOMME,
Clerk of the Council.

The Secretary, Royal Commission on
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, S.W.

Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James' Square, S.W.,
10th November 1910.

SIR,

As you are perhaps aware, a Royal Commission was appointed by His late Majesty—

" to inquire into the present state of the law " and the administration thereof in divorce and " matrimonial causes and applications for separa- " tion orders, especially with regard to the position " of the poorer classes in relation thereto, and the " subject of the publication of reports of such " causes and applications; and to report whether " any, and what, amendments should be made in " such law, or the administration thereof, or with " regard to the publication of such reports."

Questions have been raised with reference to payments for maintenance under orders made under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895.

A suggestion has been made to the Commissioners that, in view of the great difficulty frequently found by married women in enforcing payment of the amount which they are by the orders of magistrates or justices to receive, it might be advisable that the magistrates or justices should have power to make an order to attach the wages of a respondent husband against whom such an order as aforesaid has been made, and to direct that notice may be given to the employer of such husband that a certain proportion of his wages should be paid direct to the applicant wife, or to some officer of the court appointed for that purpose.

On the other hand, it has been stated that, if such a course were adopted, the employee's employment might be jeopardised, since the employers, in such cases, might take the view that it was undesirable to retain in their service an employee, in respect of whose wages it would be necessary that they should deal in the manner above indicated.

The matter is one to which the Commissioners attach considerable importance, and one upon which they feel that it would be of advantage and should prove of assistance to them to have the views of various corporations with numerous employees with regard to the suggestion above stated.

I have, therefore, been directed by the Chairman, on behalf of the Commissioners, to communicate with you to inquire whether you would be good enough to inform me what are the views entertained by the Corporation on the matter, in order that I may be in a position to bring them before the Commissioners.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
H. GORELL BARNES,
Secretary.

To the town clerks of—

Liverpool.	Birmingham.
Bristol.	Manchester.
Hull.	Salford.
Leeds.	Sheffield.
Leicestsr.	West Ham.
Newcastle.	Bradford.
Nottingham.

Town Clerk's Office (Leasing Department),
Municipal Buildings, Liverpool,
22nd November 1910.

SIR,

I DULY submitted to the Committee dealing with the matter your circular letter of the 10th instant asking the Corporation for an expression of their views on certain questions under the consideration of the Commission with reference to the payment for maintenance under orders made under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895.

I was instructed by the Committee to inform you that they do not approve of the suggestions contained in your letter.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
EDWARD R. PICKMERE,
Town Clerk.

H. Gorell Barnes, Esq.,
Secretary,
Royal Commission on Divorce
and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James' Square, S.W.

Town Hall, Hull,
22nd November 1910.

SIR,

ADVERTING to your letter of the 10th instant with reference to the proposal that has been made before the Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes to empower justices to make an order to attach the wages of a respondent husband in the hands of the employers, I beg to inform you that my Council does not meet until the 1st December. The subject of the letter is one which it appears to me the Council would be most likely to refer to one of their Committees, no doubt chosing one which has the control of a large amount of labour. My object in writing to you is to ask you whether the delay in answering your question entailed by this method would lead to the Corporation's reply, if any, being useless to the Commission.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
H. A. LEAROYD,
Town Clerk.

The Hon. H. Gorell Barnes,
Secretary,
Royal Commission on
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James' Square, S.W.

Town Hall, Hull,
2nd December 1910.

SIR,

I SUBMITTED your letter of the 10th November to the Council at their meeting yesterday, when they referred the same to the Parliamentary Committee for consideration and report. I will bring the matter before the Parliamentary Committee at their next meeting, and after the Committee's report has been presented to the Council I will inform you of the views entertained by the Corporation upon the matter to which you refer.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
H. A. LEAROYD,
Town Clerk.

The Hon. H. Gorell Barnes,
Secretary,
Royal Commission on
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James' Square, S.W.

Town Hall, Hull,
9th January 1911.

Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes.

SIR,

ADVERTING to your letter of the 10th November last, I beg to set out below the terms of a resolution which was passed by the Parliamentary Committee of this Corporation and duly confirmed by the City Council at their meeting held last Thursday :—

"That this Corporation are of opinion that in "case any person against whom an order has "been made for the maintenance of his wife, or "his wife and children, shall make default for a "period of one month to comply with the terms "of such order, the court should have power, on "the application of the wife, to direct the "employer of such person to pay to the wife "from time to time such part of his wages as "may be specified in such order."

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
H. A. LEAROYD,
Town Clerk.

The Hon. H. Gorell Barnes,
Secretary,
Royal Commission on
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James' Square, London, S.W.

Town Clerk's Office, Town Hall, Leeds,
6th January 1911.

SIR,

IN reply to your circular letter of the 20th November last, I beg to enclose copy of a resolution passed by the Finance Committee of the City Council, and approved by the latter on Wednesday last.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
ROBERT E. FOX,
Town Clerk.

The Secretary,
Royal Commission on Divorce,
Winchester House,
21, James' Square, S.W.

Enclosure.

Finance Committee,
9th Deeember 1910.

Submitted letter from the Secretary to the Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes asking for the views of the Corporation on a suggestion made to the Commissioners that the justices should have power to make an order to attach the wages of a respondent husband against whom an order to maintain his wife has been obtained, and to direct that notice may be given to the employer of such husband that a certain proportion of his wages should be paid direct to his wife or to some officer of the court appointed for that purpose.

Resolved :—

That, in the opinion of the Committee, the Council, as employers of labour, ought not to be called upon to undertake the duty and responsibility referred to in the letter from the Commissioners.

Town Hall, Leicester,
Town Clerk's Office.
SIR, 29th November 1910.

IN reference to your letter of the 10th instant, upon the subject of attachment of wages, I placed the matter before my Finance Committee. I am requested to inform you that, in the opinion of the Committee, the suggested power to attach wages would not be desirable, and they are unable to see how it would prove effective.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
H. Gorell Barnes, Esq., H. A. PRITCHARD,
Secretary, Town Clerk.
Royal Commission on Divorce and
Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James' Square, London, S.W.

Town Clerk's Office, Town Hall,
Newcastle-upon-Tyne,
SIR, 25th November 1910.

YOUR letter of the 10th instant has been considered by the Town Improvement and Streets Committee of my Corporation, who supervise the largest number of the workmen of the Corporation, and they desire me to inform you that, in their opinion, it is very desirable that magistrates should have power to make orders attaching the wages of respondent husbands in order to enforce payments under orders made under the Married Women Act of 1895.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
H. Gorell Barnes, Esq., A. M. OLIVER,
Secretary, Town Clerk.
Royal Commission on Divorce,
21, St. James' Square, London, S.W.

The Council House, Birmingham,
Town Clerk's Office,
November 23rd, 1910.

Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes.

SIR,

I HAVE laid your letter of the 10th instant before the General Purposes Committee of the Birmingham City Council, and am instructed to inform you that the Committee see no reason for any alteration in the present law with respect to payment under maintenance orders.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
H. Gorell Barnes, Esq., E. V. HILEY,
Winchester House, Town Clerk.
21, St. James' Square, S.W.

Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James' Square, S.W.,
DEAR SIR, November 30th, 1910.

I HAVE had an opportunity to-day of placing your letter of the 23rd instant before the Commissioners, and am directed to state that your letter hardly seems to them to be directed expressly to the question whether, if they were to recommend that power should be given to attach a portion of a husband's wages, such recommendation would be agreed to by employers, and would be found to jeopardise the man's employment, the possibility of which is suggested in my previous letter of 10th inst. If you can communicate to me any views on this point, it would be useful.

H. GORELL BARNES,
The Town Clerk, Town Clerk's Office, Secretary.
The Council House, Birmingham.

The Council House, Birmingham,
Town Clerk's Office,
DEAR SIR, December 7th, 1910.

REFERRING to your letter of the 30th ultimo, I have communicated with the chief officials of the several municipal departments in which labour is largely employed upon the point mentioned by you, and the general opinion appears to be that while in the case of reasonable employers the attachment of a portion of a husband's wages under a maintenance order should not in itself be allowed to jeopardise the man's employment, it would in practice be found that a man who had no such order against him would be preferred.

In some instances where men have the handling of monies, or, as in the case of gas meter and water inspectors, where men have to visit a private house during the absence of the master, it would be undesirable to employ a person with a stigma on his moral character.

Yours faithfully,
The Hon. H. Gorell Barnes, E. V. HILEY,
Secretary, Town Clerk.
Royal Commission on Divorce, &c.

Town Hall, Manchester,
SIR, November 15th, 1910.

I HAVE to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 10th instant. which shall be laid before the Parliamentary Sub-Committee of the Corporation.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
H. Gorell Barnes, Esq., THOMAS HUDSON,
Secretary, Town Clerk.
Royal Commission on Divorce
and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James' Square, London, S.W.

Town Hall, Manchester,
DEAR SIR, 1st February 1911.

Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes.

I AM desired to inform you that the Parliamentary Sub-Committee of this Corporation have had under consideration your letter of November 10th last, and at their meeting on the 13th ultimo they adopted the following resolution:—

"Resolved,—
"That the Corporation are of opinion that
"magistrates should have power to make an "order against employers to retain and pay out
"of the wages of a respondent husband to the "parties entitled the amount receivable under
"an order under the Summary Jurisdiction
"(Married Women) Act, 1895, in the event of
"the respondent husband being in default."

The proceedings of the Committee were approved by the City Council at its meeting held to-day.

Yours faithfully,
H. Gorell Barnes, Esq., THOMAS HUDSON,
Secretary, Town Clerk.
Royal Commission on Divorce
and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, London, S.W.

Town Hall, Sheffield,
SIR, 15th November 1910.

Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes.

I DULY received your circular letter of the 10th instant, which I am laying before my Corporation. As soon as I have obtained their instructions upon it, I will write you further.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
H. Gorell Barnes, Esq., R. M. PRESCOTT,
Secretary, Town Clerk.
Royal Commission on Divorce
and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, London, S.W.

Town Hall, Sheffield,
13th January 1911.

SIR,

Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes.

I DULY received your circular letter of the 10th November last, stating that a suggestion had been made to the Commissioners that in view of the great difficulty frequently found by married women in enforcing payment of the amount which they are, by the orders of magistrates or justices, to receive, it might be advisable that the magistrates or justices should have power to make an order to attach the wages of a respondent husband against whom such an order had been made, and to direct that notice may be given to the employer of such husband that a certain proportion of his wages should be paid direct to the applicant wife, or to some officer of the Court appointed for that purpose.

As desired, the matter has been brought to the notice of the Establishment Committee of the Council of this city, who have passed a resolution as follows :—

"That in the opinion of this Committee it is " desirable that the City Council should not approve
" of the proposed change in the law,"

and such resolution was approved and adopted by the Council.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
R. M. PRESCOTT,
Town Clerk.

The Secretary,
Royal Commission on Divorce
and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, London, S.W.

Town Hall, West Ham, E.,
20th December 1910.

SIR,

I AM directed by the Council to inform you that they have under consideration your circular letter of the 10th ultimo, with reference to a suggestion that payments for maintenance under separation orders should be enforced by magistrate's order to attach the wages of a respondent husband, and to state in reply that the Council do not desire to offer any opinion thereon.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
FRED. E. HILLEARY.

H. Gorell Barnes, Esq.,
Secretary,
Royal Commission on Divorce
and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, S.W.

Town Hall, Bradford,
14th November 1910.

SIR,

Attachment of Wages.

I BEG to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 12th instant with reference to this matter, and to state that it shall receive attention.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
FREDERICK STEVENS,
Town Clerk.

The Secretary,
Royal Commission on Divorce,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, London, S.W.

Town Hall, Bradford,
16th January 1911.

SIR,

YOUR letter of the 10th November last, asking for the views of the Corporation with regard to the difficulty arising on the enforcement by married women of the payments awarded by justices in cases of separation, has been carefully considered by the Corporation, who do not feel that they can express any opinion on the general question, but the practice has recently been adopted here under which the payments are made to the court, and are taken out by the women, thereby to some extent relieving the difficulties which frequently arise as regards collection by the women themselves.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
FREDERICK STEVENS,
Town Clerk.

The Secretary,
Royal Commission on Divorce,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, London, S.W.

Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, S.W.,
10th November 1910.

SIR,

As you are perhaps aware, a Royal Commission was appointed by His late Majesty—

" to inquire into the present state of the law and
" the administration thereof in divorce and matri-
" monial causes and applications for separation
" orders, especially with regard to the position of
" the poorer classes in relation thereto, and the " subject of the publication of reports of such
" causes and applications; and to report whether " any, and what, amendments should be made in
" such law, or the administration thereof, or with " regard to the publication of such reports."

Questions have been raised with reference to payments for maintenance under orders made under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895.

A suggestion has been made to the Commissioners that, in view of the great difficulty frequently found by married women in enforcing payment of the amount which they are by the orders of magistrates or justices to receive, it might be advisable that the magistrates or justices should have power to make an order to attach the wages of a respondent husband against whom such an order as aforesaid has been made, and to direct that notice may be sent to the employer of such husband that a certain proportion of his wages should be paid direct to the applicant wife, or to some officer of the court appointed for that purpose.

On the other hand, it has been stated that, if such a course were adopted, the employee's employment might be jeopardised, since the employers, in such cases, might take the view that it was undesirable to retain in their service an employee in respect of whose wages it would be necessary that they should deal in the manner above indicated.

The matter is one to which the Commissioners attach considerable importance, and one upon which they feel that it would be of advantage and should prove of assistance to them to have the views of bodies such as your federation with regard to the suggestion above stated.

I have, therefore, been directed by the Chairman, on behalf of the Commissioners, to communicate with you to inquire whether you would be good enough to inform me what are the views entertained by members of your federation upon the matter, in order that I may be in a position to bring them before the Commissioners.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
H. GORELL BARNES,
Secretary.

To the Secretaries of—

The National Federation of Building Trades.
The Drapers' Chamber of Trade.
The Mining Association of Great Britain.
The Cleveland Mine Owners' Association.
The North of England Iron and Steel Manufacturers' Association.
The Engineering Employers' Federation.
The Shipbuilding Employers' Federation.
The Federation of Master Cotton Spinners' Association.
The North and North-East Lancashire Cotton Spinners and Manufacturers' Association.
The Huddersfield and District Woollen Manufacturers' Association.
The Incorporated Federated Associations of Boot and Shoe Manufacturers of Great Britain and Ireland.

The National Federation of Merchant Tailors.
The Shipping Federation, Limited.
The Master Printers and Allied Trades' Association.
The Staffordshire Potteries Manufacturers' Association.
The National Association of Master Bakers and Confectioners of Great Britain and Ireland.
The Co-operative Wholesale Society, Limited.

The National Federation of Building Trades' Employers of Great Britain and Ireland,
Koh-i-Noor House, Kingsway,
SIR, London, W.C., 14th November 1910.

Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes.

I BEG to acknowledge receipt of your inquiry of 10th November.

As my Committee does not meet until 13th December, and I presume an early reply is desired, I am laying your communication before my President, who may desire to consult some of his colleagues, and will write you further as soon as possible.

Yours faithfully,
A. G. WHITE,
Secretary.

H. Gorell Barnes, Esq.,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, S.W.

The National Federation of Building Trades' Employers of Great Britain and Ireland,
Koh-i-Noor House, Kingsway,
SIR, London, W.C., 16th November 1910.

Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes.

IN further reply to your letter of 10th November. The subject matter of your inquiry has not, so far, engaged the attention of this federation, and to fully ascertain it would take some time, since the question would have to be considered by our various branches, and finally dealt with at a general meeting.

We think, however, that the following observations will sufficiently indicate the views likely to be held by our members in regard to the suggestion "that "magistrates or justices should have power to make "an order to attach the wages of a respondent "husband against whom such an order as aforesaid "has been made, and to direct that notice may be "given to the employer of such husband that a "certain proportion of his wages should be paid direct "to the applicant wife or to some officer of the court "appointed for that purpose."

So far as the building trade is concerned, the employment is a very fluctuating one; men are taken on frequently in large numbers for short periods, and paid off as soon as done with. Any man can be discharged or leave at an hour's notice.

The workmen move about the country a good deal, following the chances of employment. No system of discharge or character notes obtains in this industry, so that men once discharged are quickly lost sight of.

Under these circumstances we think the difficulty of following up a man who desired to evade an order of the kind suggested would be such as to make the order futile, and, in our opinion, the suggestion would be impracticable in the building trade.

As regards the suggestion that the employee's employment might be jeopardised, we think it is quite likely that it would, because there is usually a surplusage of labour in the building trade, and employers would naturally, therefore, avoid those workmen in respect of whose wages it would be necessary that they should deal in the manner above indicated, and because workmen, who as a consequence of such an order felt they were not to receive the whole of their earnings, would be likely to let their "output" fall off to correspond, and so prejudice employers against them.

Yours faithfully,
SAMUEL SMETHURST,
President.

H. Gorell Barnes, Esq.,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, S.W.

A. G. WHITE,
Secretary.

The Mining Association of Great Britain,
18, King Street, Wigan,
DEAR SIR, 15th November 1910.

I AM unable to give you the collective opinion of the coal owners on the subject of your letter until I can submit it to a meeting of the executive council of the Mining Association of Great Britain. It is very likely that within the next few weeks I shall have business necessitating such a meeting, at which there will be present representatives from the different mining districts of the kingdom, and I should then be able to get the general opinion.

My own view is that, provided the employers are not put to any expense, and are kept clear of any complications with reference to the Truck Acts, the course suggested in your letter would not interfere with a man's employment. It must be remembered that a man who refused, except under compulsion, to pay towards the maintenance of his wife, might not be in other respects a very desirable employé.

If you will refer to section 10 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, you will see that there is a somewhat analogous provision with reference to the payment of school fees.

Believe me,
Very faithfully yours,
THOS. RATCLIFFE ELLIS.

H. Gorell Barnes, Esq.,
Royal Commission on Divorce
and Matrimonial Causes,
21, St. James's Square, London, S.W.

The Mining Association of Great Britain,
18, King Street, Wigan,
SIR, 1st December 1910.

AT the meeting of the Parliamentary Committee of the Mining Association on Tuesday last, I read your letter of the 10th ultimo, and also the letter which I wrote to you in reply, and was instructed to say that the Committee approved what I had written.

Faithfully yours,
THOS. RATCLIFFE ELLIS.

H. Gorell Barnes, Esq.,
Royal Commission on Divorce
and Matrimonial Causes,
21, St. James's Square, London, S.W.

Cleveland Mine Owners' Association,
Middlesbrough,
SIR, November 22nd, 1910.

I RECEIVED your letter of the 10th November on the subject of attaching wages. The matter will come before a meeting of the Cleveland Mine Owners at an early date, after which you may expect an expression of their views to be sent to you.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
JOHN DENNINGTON,
Secretary,

H. Gorell Barnes, Esq., Secretary,
Royal Commission on Divorce
and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, London, S.W.

Cleveland Mine Owners' Association,
Middlesbrough,
SIR, 17th January 1911.

I HAVE brought your circular letter of the 10th November 1910 before this association, and I am requested to state that the Cleveland Mine Owners are not in favour of making deductions from men's wages in connection with magisterial orders and similar matters.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
JOHN DENNINGTON,
Secretary.

H. Gorell Barnes, Esq.,
Royal Commission on Divorce
and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, London, S.W.

North of England Iron and Steel
Manufacturers' Association,
Royal Exchange, Middlesbrough,
DEAR SIR, November 21, 1910.

I HAVE submitted your communication of the 10th inst. to the members of the above-named association, and their unanimous opinion is that an arrangement such as is suggested would be distinctly objectionable, and it would certainly be opposed by them. Further, it is their view that it would undoubtedly be detrimental to the interests of an employee in respect of whose wages a magistrates' order of the nature described was made.

Yours faithfully,
J. R. WINPENNY,
Secretary.

H. Gorell Barnes, Esq., Secretary,
Royal Commission on Divorce
and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, S.W.

The Engineering Employers' Federation,
24, Abingdon Street, Westminster, S.W.,
DEAR SIR, 12th November 1910.

Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes.

I AM in receipt of your letter of 10th November in regard to this matter, which is having attention.

Yours faithfully,
ALLAN M. SMITH,
Secretary.

The Secretary,
Royal Commission on Divorce
and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, S.W.

The Engineering Employers' Federation,
24, Abingdon Street, Westminster, S.W.,
DEAR SIR, 15th November 1910.

Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes.

I HAVE had an opportunity of consulting the Chairman in regard to your letter of 10th November, who has instructed that same should be brought before the next meeting of the committee.

Yours faithfully,
ALLAN M. SMITH,
Secretary.

The Secretary,
Royal Commission on Divorce
and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, S.W.

The Engineering Employers' Federation,
24, Abingdon Street, Westminster, S.W.,
DEAR SIR, 26th November 1910.

Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes

YOUR letter of 10th November has been brought before a meeting of my committee, and I am desired to say that they are of opinion that employers in the engineering industry would look with disfavour upon the suggestion contained in your letter.

Yours faithfully,
ALLAN M. SMITH,
Secretary.

The Secretary,
Royal Commission on Divorce
and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, S.W.

The Shipbuilding Employers' Federation,
Fyfe Chambers,
105, West George Street, Glasgow,
DEAR SIR, 14th November 1910.

Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes.

WE duly received your Circular of the 10th inst., which will be laid before the first meeting of the Committee.

Yours faithfully,
THOMAS BRIGGART,
HARTLEY B. MOTHERSOLE,
Joint Secretaries.

H. Gorell Barnes, Esq.,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, London, S.W.

The Shipbuilding Employers' Federation,
Fyfe Chambers,
105, West George Street, Glasgow,
DEAR SIR, 24th November 1910.

Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes.

YOUR letter of the 10th inst. has now been considered by the Executive Board of this Federation.

The Board are favourable to the suggestion that magistrates should have the power to make an order to attach the wages of a respondent husband and to direct his employer to pay a certain proportion of his wages to the applicant wife or an officer of court. We were instructed to advise you of this, and to state that the employers will be pleased to assist in the manner indicated.

Yours faithfully,
THOMAS BRIGGART,
HARTLEY B. MOTHERSOLE,
Joint Secretaries.

H. Gorell Barnes, Esq.,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, London, S.W.

The Federation of Master Cotton Spinners'
Associations, Ltd.,
Commercial Buildings, 15, Cross Street,
DEAR SIR, Manchester, 18th November 1910.

I BEG to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 10th inst., which will be placed before my committee in due course.

Yours faithfully,
JOHN SMETHURST,
Secretary.

H. Gorell Barnes, Esq.,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, London, S.W.

The North and North-East Lancashire Cotton
Spinners and Manufacturers Association
12, Exchange Street, Manchester,
DEAR SIR, February 2nd, 1911.

I BROUGHT your letter of the 10th November last before the central committee of this association at a meeting held on Tuesday last, and I was instructed to inform you that this association is of opinion that the suggestion made to the Commissioners that magistrates or justices should have power to make an order to attach the wages of a respondent husband is most objectionable, and might easily become a precedent for the attachment of wages of an employee for payment of debts owing to tradesmen, but if the suggestion made to the Commissioners were adopted the committee of this association do not think the employee's employment would be likely to be jeopardised in such cases.

Yours faithfully,
F. A. HARGREAVES,
For self and Co-Secretary.

H. Gorell Barnes, Esq.,
Royal Commission on
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James' Square, London, S.W.

The Incorporated Federated Associations of Boot and Shoe Manufacturers of Great Britain and Ireland,
41, Friar Street, Leicester,
25th November 1910.

DEAR SIR,

I AM obliged by your letter of November 10th requesting information as to the views entertained by the members of the Boot and Shoe Manufacturers' Federation with regard to the suggestion made to the Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes that magistrates should be empowered to make orders to attach the wages of workmen being respondent against whom maintenance orders have been made, whereby a proportion of their wages would be ordered to be paid direct by their employers to or for the benefit of the wives of such workmen.

I have discussed the matter with the President and Vice-President of the federation, and have ascertained the views thereon of representative members in the principal centres of the industry, and I find that as employers of labour they are unanimously of opinion that the attachment of wages as suggested would aggravate the difficulty experienced in enforcing maintenance orders against respondent husbands, because they think it would be objected to by employers generally as likely to add to the labour difficulties they have to contend with as employers, and would in consequence cause the workmen concerned to be frequently out of employment, and further some employers, whilst sympathising with the wronged wives of such workmen, think it would be an injustice to men engaged on certain definite terms to deduct from their wages without their consent.

I am also desired to say that the opinion is generally expressed that, as a matter of public policy, it is very desirable there should be as few occasions as possble for employers to make deductions from the wages of their workpeople, and that the tendency of recent actual or proposed legislation upon this subject is in the direction of restricting or abolishing deductions.

I am, Sir, your obedient Servant,
A. E. W. CHAMBERLIN,
Secretary.

H. Gorell Barnes, Esq., Secretary,
Royal Commission on Divorce
and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, S.W.

The National Federation of Merchant Taylors,
8 and 10, York Street, Manchester.
16th November 1910.

SIR,

I AM in due receipt of your inquiry as to the advisability of conferring power upon magistrates or justices to make an order to attach the wages of a respondent husband and enforcing such order by directing the employers of such husband to pay a certain proportion of his wages direct to the applicant wife.

I am instructed to say that while the sympathies of our members are with the unhappy and ill-used partners of such marriage, they feel assured if the husband's employers were notified and his wages attached, his employment would certainly be jeopardised, and in many cases would lead to prompt dismissal.

Our members fully recognise the difficulty experienced in enforcing many orders, but are decidedly of opinion the respondent husband's employment should not be imperilled.

I am, Sir, yours truly,
JOHN GORDON,
Hon. Secretary.

H. Gorell Barnes, Esq.,
Secretary,
Royal Commission on Divorce
and Matrimonial Causes.

The Shipping Federation, Limited,
Exchange Chambers,
24, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.,
12th November 1910.

SIR,

I BEG to acknowledge receipt of your letter of yesterday in reference to the Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, which I will submit to the Executive Council of the Shipping Federation next week.

Yours faithfully,
MICHAEL BRETT,
Secretary.

H. Gorell Barnes, Esq.,
21, St. James's Square, S.W.

The Shipping Federation, Limited,
Exchange Chambers,
24, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.,
1st December 1910.

DEAR SIR,

REFERRING to my letter of the 12th ulto., I have duly submitted your letter of the 10th ulto. to the Executive Council of the Shipping Federation, who see no objection to the proposal that a certain proportion of the wages of a seaman should be attached for the benefit of his wife.

Yours faithfully,
MICHAEL BRETT,
Secretary.

H. Gorell Barnes, Esq.,
21, St. James's Square, S.W.

The Master Printers' and Allied Trades Association
24, Holborn, London, E.C.,
18th November 1910.

SIR,

IN reply to yours of the 10th inst. addressed to Major Vane Stow, I have consulted many of the leading master printers in the United Kingdom with reference to the suggestion that the wages of a respondent husband might be attached in cases where an order has been for payment of maintenance to the wife. Universal sympathy is expressed with wives who are unable to enforce payment for such allowances, but some objection is not unnaturally felt by employers to any interference with the payment of wages to their workpeople, and the opinion unanimously expressed is that the making of such attachment orders would inevitably result, in a great majority of cases, not only in the husband being discharged from his situation, but in his finding difficulty in obtaining work elsewhere.

I am, Sir, yours obediently,
REGINALD J. LAKE,
Secretary.

The Hon. H. Gorell Barnes,
Royal Commission on Divorce
and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, S.W.

Staffordshire Potteries Manufacturers' Association,
Secretary's Office, Piccadilly, Tunstall,
12th November 1910.

SIR,

I BEG to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th inst., which I will lay before my association at their next meeting and afterwards write you again.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
ARTHUR P. LLEWELLYN.

The Secretary, Royal Commission on
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
St. James's Square, S.W.

Staffordshire Potteries Manufacturers' Association,
Secretary's Office, Piccadilly, Tunstall,
28th November 1910.

SIR,

WITH further reference to your letter of the 10th instant, I have ascertained the views of some of the leading members of this association regarding the proposal to give power to magistrates or justices to make an order to attach the wages of a respondent husband against whom an order had been made under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, and in their opinion such a course would, as is suggested in your letter might be the case, seriously prejudice any operative against whom such an order might be made.

In the first place, an employee who knew that a proportion of his wages would be retained by the employer at the end of the week (for whatever purpose), would not perform his duties with the same zeal as one who would receive the full amount he earned, and such an employee would, of course, not be desirable.

Further, it is thought to be scarcely fair to the employers to expect them to act as collectors of the money.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
ARTHUR P. LLEWELLYN.

The Secretary, Royal Commission on
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House,
St. James's Square, S.W.

Co-operative Wholesale Society, Ltd.,
Central Offices, 1, Balloon Street, Manchester,
SIR, 22nd November 1910.

Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes.

IN answer to your circular letter, dated November 10th, we may explain that only our general committee here can act on behalf of the society, and, of course, there is a very great divergence of opinion amongst our members on this question, which has been very much before the public for some time past. Therefore, as a committee, they prefer not to express any opinion about it.

Yours truly,
Pro Committee,
THOMAS BRODRICK,
Secretary.

H. Gorell Barnes, Esq.,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, S.W.

APPENDIX XXV.

A (1).

Church House, Westminster,
DEAR MADAM, London, S.W.

THE Mothers' Union has been permitted to send three witnesses to the Royal Commission on Divorce, who are likely to be called after Whitsuntide. Two of them will testify to the opinions of a large number of the working women of England and Wales, as expressed at meetings held to consider the question of the extension of facilities or grounds for obtaining divorce.

We are further anxious to send in as many names as possible of wives and mothers of the educated classes, who are also entitled to be heard on this matter which so vitally affects the womanhood of our country. Such names need not be in any way restricted to members of the Mothers' Union.

A protest is enclosed, with space for ten signatures, and you are earnestly requested to obtain as many signatures as you can from personal friends or others. These will be laid before the Royal Commission by our third witness in support of our protest against any extension of the divorce laws.

The forms should be returned, not later than May 20th, to the Hon. Mrs. Evelyn Hubbard, Church House, Westminster, S.W., who will supply additional forms as required.

Yours truly,
ALICE CHICHESTER,
Central President of the Mothers' Union

Protest.

I desire to add my earnest protest against the extension of facilities for divorce. I believe that to cheapen or extend the grounds for divorce would be against the moral and social interests of rich and poor alike, and would encourage the seeking of divorce for trivial reasons.

Signatures:

Collected by

N.B.—No one should sign one of these papers more than once.

A (2).

MOTHERS' UNION.

Resolution.

The members and associates present earnestly protest against any extension of the facilities or grounds for obtaining divorce, believing that any such extension would lower the ideal of marriage in the minds of the people and injure the home life of the country.

Number present
Parish
Diocese
Name of Branch Secretary
or Enrolling Member.
Date

B.

FORM OF PROTEST FROM THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND WOMEN'S HELP SOCIETY, SIGNED BY OVER 2,000 MEMBERS THEREOF.

Church House, Dean's Yard,
Westminster, S.W.

WE, members of the Church of England Women's Help Society, desire to make an earnest protest against the extension of facilities for divorce, believing that to cheapen or extend the grounds for divorce would be detrimental to the moral and social interests of both rich and poor, and would tend to encourage the seeking of divorce for trivial reasons.

Signatures:—

C.

RESOLUTIONS FROM CLERICAL BODIES.

(1) Ashton-under-Lyne Rural Deanery.
(2) Burford Ruri-decanal Chapter.
(3) Burford Ruri-decanal Conference (Hereford Diocese).
(4) Burnley Rural Deanery.
(5) Charterhouse Mission Southwark (Working Men).
(6) Chester Rural Deanery.
(7) Corringham Rural Deanery.
(8) Finsbury Ruri-decanal Conference.
(9) Leicester Rural Deanery.
(10) Liverpool "Churchmen's Conference."
(11) Manchester Church Social Workers.
(12) Manchester Diocesan Lay Readers' Union.
(13) Paddington Rural Deanery.
(14) Powder Ruri-decanal Conference.
(15) St. George's Association of Manchester and Salford Church Rescue and Preventive Society.
(16) St. John's Truro Bible Classes.
(17) Stepney Ruri-decanal Conference.
(18) Upper House of the Convocation of Canterbury.
(19) West Drayton Church Council.
(20) West Ham Rural Deanery Conference.
(21*a*) Westminster Catholic Federation..
(21*b*) Westminster Catholic Federation
(22) Wirral Ruri-decanal Conference.
(23) Women Church Workers.
(24) Worcester Diocesan Conference.

(1.)

Bardsley Vicarage,
Ashton-under-Lyne,
DEAR SIR, 23rd June 1910

I AM requested by the Chapter of the Rural Deanery of Ashton-under-Lyne to forward to you the subjoined resolution.

Yours faithfully,
C. BERESFORD KNOX,
Chapter Clerk.

"That this Chapter believing in the sacredness of the marriage tie protests against any extension of the causes and facilities for divorce and advocates the repeal of the divorce laws."

(2.)

Coveley Rectory, Tenbury.
23rd September 1910.

DEAR SIR,

AT the request of the Burford Ruri-decanal Chapter I send you a copy of a resolution passed by them unanimously at their meeting of yesterday's date.

Yours faithfully,
JAMES B. JOYCE,
Rural Dean.

Secretary,
Divorce Commission.

"That the meeting of the Burford Ruri-decanal Chapter hereby desires to enter its strongest protest to any increased facilities for divorce: and, further, believes the only true solution of present difficulties to be the repeal of the Divorce Act of 1857; and copies of this resolution he sent to the Bishop, the Secretary of the Divorce Commission, and the members of the division."

(3.)

The Rectory, Rochford, Tenbury.
9th December 1910.

DEAR SIR,

I HAVE been requested to forward you the two resolutions passed at a meeting of the Burford Ruri-decanal Conference (Hereford Diocese) on Wednesday last. The vote was unanimous, the numbers present being clerics 9, laymen 15.

I am, dear Sir,
Faithfully yours,
J. TOMSON,
Hon. Sec. B.R.C.

The Secretary,
Royal Commission on Divorce, &c.

II.—The Christian Law of Marriage, and Divorce.

The Rev. T. Outram Marshall will move:—(1) "That, in the interests of the purity of the family and "for the unimpaired maintenance of the teaching of the "Church as to the indissolubility of holy matrimony "and the reality of the relationship of affinity, it is the "duty of the clergy and laity alike to insist on the "observance of that teaching in its entirety by members "of the Church, whatever may be allowed to the "contrary by civil law or public opinion."

(2) "That this Conference insists that the State "has no authority to dictate the terms of admission to "Holy Communion in the Church of England, and "that any such claim must be resisted."

(4.)

DIOCESE OF MANCHESTER, RURAL DEANERY OF BURNLEY, REV. A. W. M. WEATHERBY, RURAL DEAN.

Worsthorne Vicarage, near Burnley,
Lancashire, 18th November 1910.

MY DEAR SIR,

I AM directed most respectfully to convey to you, sir, the terms of a resolution which was passed unanimously by the clergy and official laity of the Rural Deanery of Burnley, in the Diocese of Manchester, at their annual conference held on the 17th instant.

The terms of the resolution are as follows:—

"That it is the duty of Churchpeople not merely to uphold the sanctity of the marriage law of the Church, but to use their utmost endeavours to restore the marriage law of the land to a Christian level."

I am, Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
(Rev.) J. A. LATHAM,
Chapter Clerk.

To the Secretary,
H.M. Commission on Divorce.

(5.)

The Charterhouse Mission,
40, Tabard Street, Southwark, S.E.,
29th June 1910.

SIR,

I HEREWITH enclose copy of a resolution passed unanimously at a meeting of about 40 working men, held on Sunday afternoon last in our mission hall. The Rev. F. G. Croom in the chair.

I was requested to forward the same to you to be put in as evidence before the Royal Commission now sitting.

Yours faithfully,
PERCY S. WILSON,
Hon. Sec.

To the Secretary
of the Royal Commission on Divorce.

Resolution unanimously passed at a meeting of about 40 working men, held in the Charterhouse Mission Hall, on Sunday, June 26th, 1910. The Rev. F. G. Croom, missioner, in the chair:—

"That this meeting of working men earnestly opposes the granting of any further facilities for divorce. Rather than that divorce should be made easier for the poor, it should be made harder for the rich."

PERCY S. WILSON,
Hon. Sec.

(6.)

St. John's Rectory, Chester,
11th July 1910.

DEAR SIR,

AT a chapter meeting of the Rural Deanery of Chester, the following resolution was passed unanimously:—"That this chapter expresses its earnest hope "that the Royal Commission now sitting will not "make any recommendations which involve an increase "of facilities for divorce," and I was asked to forward a copy of the resolution to the Commissioners.

I am, your obedient servant,
S. COOPER SCOTT,
Rural Dean.

To the Secretary
of the Royal Commission.

(7.)

East Stockwith Vicarage,
Gainsborough,
5th November 1910.

SIR,

I AM desired by the Ruri-decanal Chapter of Corringham in the Diocese of Lincoln, of which I am clerk, to send you the accompanying resolution which was carried unanimously by the chapter on Wednesday, November 2nd, inst.

I remain,
Yours faithfully,
J. GURNHILL,
Chap. Clerk.

To the Hon. Henry Gorell Barnes,
Secretary of the Royal Commission on Divorce.

Resolved:—

I. "That this meeting of the clergy of the Rural Deanery of Corringham in chapter assembled hears with growing concern of the proposals now being considered to extend the grounds of divorce, and earnestly trusts that such proposals will meet with strenuous resistance on the part of Church people throughout the country, as being highly dangerous to the cause of religion, public morality, and family life."

(8.)

Thorndon, Antrim Street,
Haverstock Hill, N.W.,
31st May 1910.

MY LORD,

I, as honorary lay secretary to the Finsbury Ruri-decanal Conference, have been instructed to inform you that, at a meeting of the conference held yesterday, the Rev. Prebendary Perry presiding, the following resolution was passed and ordered to be sent to your Lordship:—

"That this conference, while recognising that inequalities exist as to facilities for divorce between rich and poor, considers that the right way to remove such inequalities is to prohibit divorce altogether."

I am, my Lord,
Your obedient servant,
ST. JOHN BROWNE.

The Right Honourable Lord Gorell, P.C.,
Chairman of the Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes,
Winchester House, S.W.

(9.)

St. Mary's Vicarage, Leicester.

At a meeting of the Ruri-decanal Conference of the Rural Deanery of Christianity (or Leicester) the following resolutions were carried unanimously, on Monday, July 11th, 1910:—

"(1) That there should be no further facilities for divorce.

"(2) That if any change in the law is made, the present Divorce Act should be repealed.

"(3) That separation orders should be only granted for a limited period."

J. T. NANCE,
Rural Dean.

(10.)

32, Clevedon St., Liverpool, S.,
6th October 1910.

DEAR SIR,

I AM instructed to forward you the enclosed resolution, which I trust is in order.

I am, honourable Sir,
Yours faithfully,
E. DOWNEY, Hon. Sec.,
"Churchmen's Conference."

"The Churchmen's Conference,"
Knotty Ash, Liverpool,
17th September 1910.

"The 'Churchmen's Conference' feeling that divorce is so chief an evil and contrary to the teaching of our Lord Jesus Christ, strongly hopes for the repeal of the Act of 1857 which sanctions divorce."

Carried nem. con.

(11.)

UNIVERSITY OF MANCHESTER.

SIR, 27th April 1910.

AT a meeting of 600 Church social workers—men and women—held in Manchester on Thursday, March 31st, to consider the question of Christian marriage, the accompanying resolution was moved and carried unanimously. This we are requested by our committee to forward.

We have the honour to be,
Your obedient servants,
CUTHBERT E. A. CLAYTON,
WILBY M. L. ROW,
Honorary Secretaries.

To the Hon. H. Gorell Barnes,
Secretary to the Royal Commission on Divorce,
Winchester House,
21, St. James's Square, S.W.

Resolution passed March 31st at a Meeting of 600 Church Social Workers in Manchester.

"1. That this meeting of Church social workers, believing that the Divorce Act of 1857 has caused grave injury to family life and to the morality of the nation, strongly protests against any extension of divorce facilities.

"2. From wide experience of actual facts of life among the poor, it is also in favour of the amendment of the methods of judicial separation, especially as to the following points:—

(a) Equality of cause for both sexes.
(b) Payment of maintenance money through official or court, and not direct from one party to the other.

"3. That this meeting, while advocating as a deterrent the necessity of names being made known, strongly protests against the publication of details as being most corrupting to the youth of the nation."

(12.)

MANCHESTER DIOCESAN LAY READERS' UNION.

Patron: The LORD BISHOP.

Cliff Point, Lower Broughton Road,
Manchester,
SIR, 25th October 1910.

I AM instructed to inform you that at a meeting of our union held on 22nd October the following resolution was unanimously adopted.

I am,
Yours faithfully,
HENRY BROXALL,
The Secretary, Hon. Sec.
The Royal Commission on Divorce.

"That this quarterly conference of the Lay Readers' Union of the Manchester diocese, recognising that the law of Christ and the Church provides for the indissolubility of the marriage law—except by death—protests against divorce and especially against any increased facilities for the same, and earnestly desires that, when possible, the Divorce Act of 1857 may be repealed."

(13.)

RURAL DEANERY OF PADDINGTON.
CLERICAL AND LAY CONFERENCE.

Divorce Act of 1857.

At a meeting of the above conference held on Tuesday, 21st June 1910, the Rev. Prebendary F. Gurdon, Rural Dean, presiding, the following resolution was proposed, seconded, and carried with one dissentient:—

Resolution:

"That this conference of clergy and laity, convened for the purpose of considering the question of divorce, strongly protests against any extension of facilities for divorce and expresses an earnest desire for the repeal of the Divorce Act of 1857."

We are requested to send a copy of the above resolution to every member of the Royal Commission on Divorce and to the Lord Bishop of London.

We are,
Very faithfully yours,
CECIL E. WHITE,
Hon. Clerical Secretary,
170, Gloucester Terrace, W.
JAS. A. MCINTYRE,
Hon. Lay Secretary,
92, Inverness Terrace, W.

(14.)

The Vicarage, S. Clement,
DEAR SIR, Truro, 4th April 1910.

I ENCLOSE copies of resolutions passed at the Ruri-decanal Conference of the Deanery of Powder.

Yours faithfully,
W. E. GRAVES,
Rural Dean.

Copy of resolution passed unanimously at the Ruri-decanal Conference of the Deanery of Powder, Truro, 1st April 1910.

"That in the opinion of this Conference the publication of the evidence tendered at the sessions of the Commission in the daily press is likely to have an injurious effect on public morality, and that if any evidence is so published it should be under strict supervision."

Resolution :

"That the Ruri-decanal Conference of the Deanery of Powder in the Diocese of Truro in session assembled deplore the existing facilities for divorce and would prefer to see the Act repealed than its provisions extended to the county courts of the country, and desire to support His Grace the Archbishop of York in any efforts he may be able to make on the Commission in furthering the cause of morality."

From the Deanery of Powder,
Truro.

(15.)

Homeleigh, Range Road,
Whalley Range, Manchester,
2nd May 1910.

DEAR SIR,

I AM instructed to send you the enclosed resolution for the Royal Commission on Divorce, passed at the annual joint conference of the St. George's Association (White Cross League) and the Manchester and Salford Church Rescue and Preventive Society.

I remain,
Yours obediently,
W. H. NEWETT.

The Hon. H. Gorell Barnes,
Sec., Royal Commission on Divorce,
Winchester House, 21, St. James's Square,
London, S.W.

Resolution passed April 22nd, 1910, by members of joint conference of St. George's Association (Local Branch of White Cross League), and of Manchester and Salford Church Rescue and Preventive Society.

"That the members of this conference, believing that the existing divorce laws have not only proved injurious to the morality of our people, but have also weakened the national conception of the binding nature of the marriage tie, are of opinion that the remedy for the inequality of facilities for rich and poor is to be found in the repeal of the Divorce Act of 1857, and not in the extension of its operations.

"The members of the conference, believing that judicial separation should be maintained in the interests of the general morality of the nation, further beg the Royal Commission to do its utmost to secure wise and much needed amendment in the methods of granting the same, and especially on the following points :—

(a) An equal standard of purity for both sexes.
(b) Payment through court or official, instead of direct, as at present.
(c) The compulsory suppression in the public press of details of cases liable to corrupt the youth of the nation—the publication of names only being necessary as a deterrent."

(16.)

Penarth, Truro, Cornwall,
22nd September 1910.

SIR,

MAY I please ask you to do the proper thing with the enclosed petition, and may I also say the signatures are those of working men, with three exceptions.

Thanking you,
I remain, Sir,
Yours faithfully,
A. DAINE.

To the Hon. H. Gorell Barnes.

WE the undersigned members of the Community of the Epiphany and St. John's, Truro, Bible classes, wish to express our earnest desire that as a result of the Royal Commission on Divorce there will be no extension of facilities and grounds for divorce as such would be most harmful to the home-life and morality of the nation. We further express our conviction that the Divorce Act should be repealed and the sanctity of marriage fully recognised.

A. Daine, Penarth, Truro.
Jules Vincent, Petherton, Truro.
Thomas F. Webber, 18, New Bridge Street, Truro.
W. J. Webb, 4, St. Dominic Street.
F. Tabb, 4, Cook's Row, Truro.
A. Grose, Lotar Row, Truro.
W. A. Parker, 5, Cook's Row, Truro.
George Paxol, St. Dominic Street, Truro.
A. H. Skinner, 13, St. Dominic Street, Truro.
Hy. Dryden, 89, Kemoyn Street, Truro.
James Kier, 18, New Bridge Street, Truro.
James Bailey, 3, The Avenue, Truro.
William Collett, 21, St. Clements Terrace, Truro.
Edwin Wearne, 36, St. Clements Street, Truro.
Wm. Alford, 3, Penrose Cottages, Moresh Rd., Truro.
Percy Baron, 4, Daniel Road, Truro.
James Henry Kastell, Trethellan, Truro.
William G. N. Earthy, Malpas Road, Truro.
Sydney Luly Rushworth, 36, Charles Street.
Richard Joseph Warren, 4, Walsingham Place, Truro.
Ernest Henry Rouse, 26, Lemon Street.
James Annear, 5, Lemon Row, Truro.
William Stephens, 3, Carclew, Truro.
Robert Williams, 1, Carclew Place, Truro.
Lewis Charles Gatley, 20, Carclew Street, Truro.
Archibald Trudgen, 31, Carclew Street.
Ernest Alfred Truscott, 23, Carclew Street, Truro.
Henry Barnicoat, 47, Charles Street, Truro.

(17.)

The Rectory, Stepney, E.,
22nd June 1911.

DEAR SIR,

THE following resolution was passed at a meeting of the Stepney Ruri-decanal Conference of clergy and laity held on Monday, June 20, and I was asked to send a copy to the Divorce Commission :—

"That this conference protests against any extension of facilities for divorce, feeling confident that there is no real demand for it from the poorer classes, and calls for the repeal of the Divorce Act of 1857."

I am, very faithfully yours,
G. C. WILTON,
Rector of Stepney and Rural Dean.

The Secretary,
Divorce Commission.

(18.)

UPPER HOUSE OF THE CONVOCATION OF CANTERBURY.

Lambeth Palace, S.E.,
17th February 1911.

DEAR Mr. BARNES,

I THINK the Royal Commissioners ought to have before them a copy of the resolutions which have this week been passed with virtually complete unanimity by the Upper House of the Convocation of Canterbury—that is to say by the whole diocesan episcopate of the province. The Bishop of Hereford took exception to details in resolutions 1 and 4, but this was the only breach in full unanimity. It will be observed that the wording is careful. The first resolution does not say that the re-marriage of the innocent party in church is impossible, but that it ought not to be claimable as a right. Similarly in resolution 4 the Bishops do not say that there ought to be no change in the direction of making it possible for a poor man to obtain such a divorce as a rich man could obtain. But they deprecate the multiplication of courts possessing divorce jurisdiction as the means of making divorce easier. There are other points in the resolutions which I could explain if necessary, but I think they are probably sufficiently clear.

I am,
Yours very truly,
RANDALL CANTUAR.

Resolutions.

"1. That the right of parishioners to claim the use of the church or the services of the incumbent for the solemnisation of marriages ought not to extend to divorced persons whether innocent or guilty.

"2. That persons domiciled elsewhere than in England who have obtained a divorce in their own country on grounds not acknowledged by English law ought not to be married in any English churches, and cannot be so married without causing just offence to the consciences of English Churchmen.

"3. That this House opposes, as detrimental to the social, moral, and religious interests of the nation, any extension of the grounds on which divorce can now be legally granted.

"4. That while holding to the plain principle of justice that poverty ought not to be in itself a bar to obtaining all the protection which just laws afford, this House strongly deprecates any attempt to increase the general facilities for divorce by the multiplication of courts possessing divorce jurisdiction.

"5. That this House desires to press for such amendments of the law as may be necessary in order to give practical effect to any of the foregoing resolutions."

February 16th, 1911.

(19.)

The Vicarage, West Drayton,
Middlesex, 25th June 1910.

SIR,

I AM directed by the Church Council of West Drayton to forward to you the resolution given on the other side. The council consists of twelve members—the vicar and two churchwardens being members ex officio, and the other nine being elected annually at Easter by all parishioners who have been confirmed.

Eight members were present at the meeting on June 20th; of the eight, six were elected members, and the resolution was passed with one dissentient.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. W. S. A. Row,
Chairman of the meeting.

The Secretary of the
Divorce Commission, London.

Resolution passed by the West Drayton Church Council on June 20th, 1910.

"The Church Council of West Drayton protests against any extension of either the grounds or of the facilities for divorce, believing that indissolubility of marriage is the best guarantee for the maintenance of religion, family life and public morality. It further is of opinion in regard to the alleged inequalities as between rich and poor, which are advanced as a reason for a wider extension of divorce, that it would be better for religion, the State, and the family that the existing divorce laws should be repealed."

(20.)

Pelly Memorial School, West Ham,
21st June 1910.

MY LORD,

AT a conference of duly elected Churchmen of every parish church and mission within the county borough of West Ham, held on Friday, June 10th, 1910, at which about 120 representatives were present, consideration was given to the subject of the present divorce laws. I have been instructed to forward your Lordship a copy of a resolution passed unanimously at this meeting, namely: "This conference is opposed to "the granting of any facilities for divorce, and "would rather approve the repeal of the Divorce Act "of 1857."

Believe me to be,
Faithfully yours,
D. FASSAM.

The President of the
Royal Commission on Divorce.

(21*a*.)

37, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C.,
10th November 1910.

DEAR SIR,

I BEG to enclose you a copy of a resolution which was passed unanimously by the central council of this Federation at the last council meeting.

I am, yours faithfully,
W. P. MARA.

"That the council of the Westminster Catholic Federation, representing mainly Catholic working men and women, is of opinion that the suggested extension of facilities for divorce would tend to shatter the domestic life of the nation and would be morally most injurious."

(21*b*.)

37, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C.,
16th November 1910.

DEAR SIR,

I AM very sorry to trouble you with reference to another resolution passed by my council. I should have forwarded this with the one I sent you on the 10th inst.

I am, yours faithfully,
W. P. MARA.

"That the Westminster Catholic Federation protest against the publication in the press of the detailed evidence in applications for divorce as constituting a grave danger to morals and submit that only the names of the parties concerned and the result of the application be published."

(22.)

The Vicarage, Willaston,
Near Chester, 12th May 1910.

DEAR SIR,

I BEG leave to enclose you a copy of a resolution passed at the last meeting of the Wirral Ruri-decanal Conference composed of clergy and laity.

Kindly acknowledge safe receipt of same and oblige

Yours very truly,
WALSHAM POSTANCE,
Hon. Secretary.

To the Secretary,
Royal Commission on Law of Divorce.

Copy of resolution passed at the Spring Conference of the Wirral Rural Deanery (with one dissentient), held at Rock Ferry, Cheshire, on Wednesday, 11th May 1910, under the presidency of the Rev. T. H. May, Rural Dean.

"That this conference expresses its most earnest hope that the Royal Commission on the Law of Divorce, now sitting, will not make any recommendations which involve any increase of facilities for dissolving the marriage tie: and further believes that it would be for the best interests of the nation that the Divorce Act of 1857 should be repealed."

(23.)

Lambeth Palace, S.E.,
23rd June 1910.

DEAR SIR,

I AM asked, as the president of this Committee, to forward to you the enclosed resolution, and to ask you to be so kind as to take the necessary steps for presenting it to the Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes.

Believe me to be,
Yours sincerely,
EDITH M. DAVIDSON.

H. Gorell Barnes, Esq.

"The Central Committee of Women Church Workers, consisting of representatives of Churchwomen from Dioceses in every part of the world, desire to express to the members of the Royal Commission the earnest hope that there may be no increase either of the courts which have jurisdiction in divorce proceedings, or of the grounds upon which divorce may be legally obtained, as they believe that any such increase would weaken the sense of the sanctity of marriage in the minds of the people, and the strength and stability of family life."

Signed on behalf of the Committee,
EDITH M. DAVIDSON, President.
LOUISE CREIGHTON, Chairman.
MAUD MONTGOMERY, Hon. Secretary.

June 23, 1910.

(24.)

WORCESTER DIOCESAN CONFERENCE.

Avonbank, Stratford-on-Avon.
DEAR SIR, 17th June 1910.

I AM directed by the Lord Bishop and the diocesan conference to forward to you the enclosed resolutions which were adopted nem. con. by the conference at their session on Wednesday, June 15th last.

I am, yours faithfully,
(Signed) WILLIAM G. MELVILLE,
Hon. Clerical Secretary.

WORCESTER DIOCESAN CONFERENCE.

"(1) This conference maintains that the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (commonly called the Divorce Act) has had a harmful effect on the morals of the nation, particularly in unsettling family life and in doing harm to children. Its opinion that further facilities for divorce would increase existing evils is strengthened by its observation of the case of other countries, and it prays His Majesty's Government to propose no further enactment which will cause divorce to be more frequent.

"(2) It further prays His Majesty's Government to restrict by law the publication of details of cases in the divorce court by the public press."

D.

FORM of LETTER and RESOLUTION of the NATIONAL BRITISH WOMEN'S TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.

MY LORD, 11th June 1910.

WE beg leave to approach your Lordship as Chairman of the Royal Commission on Divorce on a matter vitally concerning the moral and legal status of women in respect of divorce. They do not desire that divorce should be made easier or that facilities for divorce should be extended, or that a merely superficial sex-equality should be brought about by lowering the moral standard on one side or the other; but they desire to register a respectful protest against the grounds upon which the present inequality in respect of misconduct has been defended in the evidence given before the Commission by certain witnesses.

It is alleged broadly that moral temptations press more heavily upon men in general than upon women; that failure on the part of the man is more or less accidental; that whereas misconduct on the part of a wife would be inconsistent with continued love for her husband, it is not so on the part of a husband; that the injury inflicted by the wife's offence is greater than that inflicted by the husband's; and that the keeping of a separate establishment by a man would not be inconsistent with the proper respect and affection due to his wife.

With regard to these opinions we venture to submit:

(i) That throughout the whole of the literature touching upon the significance of marriage, and upon the social and moral and religious import of the relations between men and women, no sanction will be found for the views herein expressed. On the contrary the picture constantly drawn is not merely that of fidelity after marriage, but of fidelity to the future wife before marriage. We venture to think that the appeal to the literature of the question should carry considerable weight as to the best opinion on the subject, and cannot in wisdom be set aside.

(ii) That an attempt to estimate the injury inflicted by the misconduct of either of the parties upon the other misses the vital point of the moral and social problem involved; namely, the well-being of family and child life, as conditioned by the moral and physical health of parents. Monogamic marriage as a legal institution appears to rest upon consideration for the nurture and protection of the offspring. Only within its pale is parentage legitimate; and all the institutions of society rest on the integrity of the family unit and the purity of the family life. Immoral conduct on the part of either parent is not merely an injury to the other party in the solemn contract thus violated, it is in spirit, and often in point of fact, a grievous injury to the offspring, and to the whole fabric of social life.

If it were within the scope of your Lordship's Commission to take cognizance of the serious national import of that form of unwillingness to beget children which has been termed "race suicide," of the large percentage of divorce suits associated with childless marriages, and of the effects of venereal disease in producing sterility, immaturity, congenital malformations, infantile disease, and its bearings on the serious problem of infantile mortality, the question of the injury inflicted by misconduct would transcend all distinctions of man or woman, and might perhaps even throw the greater burden of blame on the man, since his misconduct may result in the communication of venereal disease not only to his wife—a very serious injury—but also to the innocent and helpless offspring in whom the health of the next generation of the community dwells.

(iii) Whether, and how far, misconduct on the part of a man may be regarded as accidental, may perhaps be considered in the light of the question as to with whom such "accidental" misconduct is likely to take place. Misconduct with a pure woman would imply a very deliberate and sedulously pursued intention; with an immoral one, a choice of company, which in itself, even before the commission of the act, could not be held consistent with due regard for the rights of wife, or family, or of society. Along the path of dalliance "accidents" belong to the category of high probabilities.

(iv) As to whether the maintenance of a separate establishment by a man would be consistent with the affection due to his wife. An offer of marriage carrying with it provision for such a condition would, by the overwhelming majority of women, be rejected with scorn, and we suspect that there would be few men who would be cynical or depraved enough to make the suggestion.

For these and other similar reasons we desire heartily to endorse the weighty opinion expressed by many eminent witnesses before your Lordship's Commission in favour of making the legal no less than the moral significance of misconduct similar for both the sexes. Nothing could more happily strike the general sentiment among the average population than the testimony of Sir John Bigham that "Juries were "influenced by all sorts of conditions which, in the "opinion of a lawyer, should not influence them at all. "They were always in favour of the lady." ("Daily News," 1st March 1910.) General sentiment appears to assess the injury with a fair amount of rough and native justice.

We are,
Your Lordship's humble Servants,

To the Right Hon. Lord Gorell.

(1) LIST of BRANCHES of the said ASSOCIATION submitting the above.

Abergavenny.
Alford (Lincs.).
Barrow-in-Furness.
Batley.
Bedford.
Bishop Auckland.
Bootle.
Bradford.
Bridport.
Carlisle.
Chesterfield.
Dewsbury.
East London Union.
Exmouth.
Halton and Crossgates.
Harrogate.
Harrow.
Havant.
Hexham.
Howden-le-Wear.
Keighley.
Lincoln.
Liverpool Centre.
Liverpool, Women's Life Society.
Middlewich (Cheshire).
New Barnet.
Newport.
Old Barrow.
Oxford.
Parkstone.
Penarth.
Peterborough.
Redhill.
Romford.
Salisbury.
Southampton.
Southend-on-Sea.
South Shields.
Staffordshire County Union.
Stoke Newington.
Tunbridge Wells.
Tyne Dock.
Wallasey.
Wellingborough (Northants).
Wellington (Salop).
West Hartlepool.
West Hull.

(2) LIST of BRANCHES of the said ASSOCIATION submitting LETTERS and RESOLUTIONS substantially similar to the above.

Beeston Hill (Leeds).
Birkdale.
Birmingham, Warwick and District Union.
Blackheath.
Burslem.
East Dulwich.
Grantham.
Hither Green.
Kingston-on-Thames.
London (Central).
New Street and Rosemary (Bristol).
North Finchley.
North Wales.
Plumstead.
Pontypridd.
Rock Ferry.
Shrewsbury.
Sidcup.
South Metropolitan Union.
Southport.
Stoke Newington.
Stourbridge.
Stratford and West Ham.
Sutton Coldfield and Erdington, Four Oaks and Hill.
Wallasey.
Waterloo and Blundellsands.
Waverley Park.

E.

RESOLUTIONS FROM ASSOCIATIONS, &c.

ASSOCIATIONS from which RESOLUTIONS have been received.

(1) Birkenhead and District Women's Guild.
(2) Birkenhead and District Women's Suffrage Society.
(3) Birkenhead Women's Adult School.
(4) Birkenhead Women's Local Government Association.
(5) British Temperance League.
(6) Coventry and District Women's Liberal Association.
(7) Glasgow City Branch of the Independent Labour Party.
(8) Liscard Branch of the Women's Labour League.
(9) Liverpool Branch of National Union of Women Workers.
(10) Liverpool Union of Women Workers.
(11) Manchester, Salford, and District Branch of National Union of Women Workers.
(12) National Council of P.S.A.'s Brotherhoods and Kindred Societies (Women's Committee), Peterborough.
(13) National Women's Labour League—Durham and Northumberland Branches.
(14) Pontypridd and District Women's Liberal Association.
(15) Seacombe Branch of Independent Labour Party.
(16) Wallasey and Wirral Women's Suffrage Society.
(17) Wallasey Socialist Society.
(18) Women's Cottage Guild, Liscard, Cheshire.
(19) Women's Industrial Council.
(20) Women's Liberal Federation.

(1.)

BIRKENHEAD AND DISTRICT WOMEN'S GUILD.

122, Woodchurch Lane, Birkenhead,
SIR, 28th May 1910.

WILL you kindly place before the Royal Commission on Divorce the following resolution, which was passed unanimously at the above guild meeting held in the Co-operative Hall, Catherine Street:—

"That this branch of the Birkenhead Women's Guild strongly urges that the divorce laws shall be made equal for women and men, as they have been for centuries in Scotland."

Thanking you for the same,

Yours sincerely,
(MRS.) M. RUSSELL,
Hon. Secretary.

(2.)

BIRKENHEAD AND DISTRICT WOMEN'S SUFFRAGE SOCIETY.

4, Mather Road, Oxton, Birkenhead,
SIR, 31st May 1910.

I BEG respectfully to draw your attention to the following resolution, which was passed by the committee of the above-named Society in the hope that it would be placed before Lord Gorell:—

"That this branch of the National Union of Women's Suffrage Societies urges that the divorce laws shall be made equal for women and men, as they have been for centuries in Scotland."

Yours obediently,
(Miss) A. WYSE,
To the Secretary, Hon. Sec.
Divorce Commission.

(3.)

MY LORD, Birkenhead, 25th May 1910.

THE Women's Adult School, Oxton Road, Birkenhead, desires very strongly to emphasise the main points of the letter addressed to your Lordship by the Women's Life Society, Liverpool, where it is urged that the legal, no less than the moral, significance of misconduct should be made similar for both sexes.

The present inequality in the divorce law is morally indefensible.

We are,
Your Lordship's humble servants,
EDITH J. WILSON, President.
CECILE A. FLEMING, Vice-President.

Lord Gorell.

(4.)

BIRKENHEAD WOMEN'S LOCAL GOVERNMENT ASSOCIATION.

DEAR SIR, 30th May 1910.

I AM instructed by my committee to forward to you the following resolution passed at a meeting of the committee of the Birkenhead Women's Local Government Association held to-day.

I am, yours faithfully,
LUCY E. ABRAHAM,
Hon. Sec.

Resolved:—

"That this committee of the Birkenhead Women's Local Government Association strongly urges upon the members of the Divorce Commission the desirability of recommending, in their report, that the divorce laws of this country shall be made absolutely equal for both sexes, as they have been for centuries in Scotland."

(5.)

THE BRITISH TEMPERANCE LEAGUE.

29, Union Street, Sheffield,
DEAR SIR, 19th July 1910.

AT the 77th annual conference of this League, held in Caxton Hall, Westminster, the following resolution on the divorce question was passed unanimously, and we are forwarding you a copy by the direction of the conference:—

"In view of the emphatic testimony of witnesses before the Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, that addiction to the enslaving drug alcohol is more potent in promoting impurity in thought and conduct (thus leading to the sundering of the marriage tie, and the breaking up of the home) than all other causes put together, this conference appeals to the statesmen of all parties, and to the leaders of the Christian Church, for personal example against the use of the intoxicating drug, and for associated action against its sale and distribution: thus solving the anxious problem now before the Divorce Commission in the best of all fashions—the removal of the evil causation."

We are also enclosing a copy of the "British Temperance Advocate" for June, and beg to solicit the favour of a careful perusal of the article, "Three Voices on the Divorce Question." The example of personal abstinence from the intoxicating drug, in the home and in public life, on the part of all Christian and patriotic people, would purify and protect family life from this great evil, and the conference respectfully invites all such to adopt that course.

We are, yours very faithfully,
EDWIN RICHMOND, Hon. Secretary.
CHARLES SMITH, Secretary.

H. Gorell Barnes, Esq.

(6.)

COVENTRY AND DISTRICT WOMEN'S LIBERAL ASSOCIATION.

13, Grosvenor Road, Coventry,
DEAR SIR, 5th April 1911.

AT a meeting of the committee of the above association on Monday evening, April 4th, it was unanimously resolved that the annexed resolution which was then passed should be sent up to you.

Yours truly,
M. A. STREETLY,
Secretary to the Secretary.
Divorce Commission, London.

Resolution :—

"That this meeting (representing upwards of 900 women of Coventry and district) considers that the divorce laws should be so amended as to place the sexes in a position of perfect equality in all respects, and is also of opinion that if possible there should be a cheapening of procedure so as to be of assistance to really necessitous cases, but that great care should be taken in any proposed amendment of the law, not to make divorce so easy for any class of people as to encourage the tendency to make marriage a civil contract, dissoluble at the will of the parties."

(7.)

INDEPENDENT LABOUR PARTY
(GLASGOW CITY BRANCH).
126, Bothwell Street, Glasgow,
DEAR SIR, 4th April 1910.

I BEG to advise you that at a meeting of this branch held here on Sunday the enclosed resolution was passed.

Yours truly,
JAMES MCKINLEY,
The Secretary, Secretary.
Royal Commission on Divorce,
London.

Resolution :—

"That this branch of the I.L.P. regret the necessity of writing the Royal Commission on Divorce, and wish to state our disapproval of the statement made by one of the witnesses that the marriage tie is held lightly by the poor. We emphatically deny that the marriage tie is held lightly by this class, and as such a statement made regarding the most tender relationship between working men and women is misleading and a libel on the working classes, as there is no other reason for marrying than love and respect, for neither party to such a contract has anything to gain, we are shocked that a single man holding a Government appointment should be found willing to make such a statement. We also desire to protest against the opinions expressed giving preference to one sex with regard to infidelity, and claim an equality for the sexes in dealing with cases for divorce on these grounds."

(8.)

21, Mount Road, New Brighton,
SIR, near Liverpool, 10th June 1910.

I MUCH regret that two resolutions passed by this branch of the Women's Labour League were put into wrong envelopes. The enclosed should have been sent to you.

With apologies,
Yours truly,
LEONORA STALLYBRASS.

"That this meeting of the Liscard branch of the Women's Labour League earnestly desires that there should be equality of reasons for divorce for both sexes."

And further,

"That divorce should be placed within the reach of the poor."

(9.)

Ashfield, Knotty Ash,
MY LORD, Liverpool, 17th June 1910.

AT a meeting of the council of the Liverpool Branch, National Union of Women Workers, specially called this month to consider the present position of women under the divorce laws, the following resolution was unanimously passed, and I was instructed to forward it to your Lordship :—

"That this council most earnestly protests against the present inequality of the divorce laws, and prays for its equalisation between the sexes."

I am, my Lord,
Yours faithfully,
EDITH BRIGHT
(Mrs. Allan H. Bright),
Hon. Sec., Liverpool Branch
National Union of Women Workers.

To the Right Hon. Lord Gorell.

(10.)

15, Rutland Avenue, Sutton Park,
Liverpool, S., 29th June 1910.

MRS. SHILSTON WATKINS begs leave to forward an account of a meeting held under the auspices of the Liverpool Union of Women Workers, on Monday, the 27th instant, when the Rev. John Wakeford advocated the repeal of the divorce laws, and an amendment that the laws be not repealed, but amended and made equal between men and women, rich and poor, was carried by 73 votes to 17.

The mover and seconder of the amendment did not press for its being put as a substantive motion, and forwarded to the President of the Divorce Commission in view of the fact that the Honorary Secretary of the Union and some of the other officials supported the resolution moved by the Rev. J. Wakeford.

(11.)

65, Barton Arcade, Manchester,
DEAR MADAM, 5th May 1910.

AT the request of the London Legislation Sectional Committee of the National Union of Women Workers, a joint meeting was held of the Executive and Legislation Committees of the Manchester, Salford and District Branch of the National Union of Women Workers, at which the enclosed suggestions for evidence before the Royal Commission on Divorce were offered, which I am asked to lay before you.

These resolutions were all unanimously passed with the exception of No. 4, which was carried nem. con.

I am, dear Madam,
Yours faithfully,
EDITH MOORHOUSE,
To Lady Frances Balfour. Secretary.

Resolutions :

"1. Equal rights for men and women.

"2. The payment of maintenance money through a recognised officer of the court.

"3. Avoidance of publication of undesirable details in the daily press.

"4. That so long as divorce remains the law of the land, it should be as possible for the poor as for the rich.

"5. Separation orders should be granted only after a time of probation, and that experienced men and women should be appointed to investigate into the circumstances; further that the cases should be heard by a special sitting of magistrates."

(12.)

23, Belmont Drive, Newsham Park,
Liverpool, 14th June 1910.

My Lord,

I have the honour to place before you and the members of the Commission, the enclosed resolution which was passed with enthusiastic unanimity at the June meeting of the executive of the National Council held in Peterborough on Saturday, the 11th instant.

I have, &c.,
Maggie G. Forson, Hon. Sec.,
Women's National Committee.

To the Right Hon. Lord Gorell,
President of the Divorce Commission.

Resolution:

"That this executive of the National Council of P.S.A.'s, Brotherhoods, and Kindred Societies, regards with serious apprehension the views expressed at the Divorce Commission by Mr. Justice Bigham (Lord Mersey) and others relating to the difference in the standard of morality between the sexes.

"It expresses its indignation at the doctrine of 'accidental misconduct,' and demands the same standard for men as for women."

Maggie G. Forson.

(13.)

15, Oakfield Terrace, Gosforth,
Northumberland,
15th September 1910.

Sir,

I am directed to forward to you the enclosed resolution which was passed at a conference of delegates from the N.E. branches of the National Women's Labour League, held at Sunderland on September 10th, 1910.

I am, sir,
Yours respectfully,
(Mrs.) L. E. Simm,
Org. Sec.

H. Gorell Barnes, Esq., Sec.,
Royal Commission on Divorce.

At Sunderland, Sept. 10th, 1910.

Resolved:

"That this conference of the Durham and Northumberland branches of the National Women's Labour League, after having heard an address on the divorce laws of this and other countries, is of opinion that divorce should be granted for—

> "Adultery, wilful desertion for two years or more, incurable insanity, habitual drunkenness, continued cruelty or murderous assault, condemnation to penal servitude, judicial or voluntary separation for two years or more, and mutual consent or incompatibility of temperament.

"We are also of opinion that women should be admitted as assessors to act along with the judge, and that women should sit on all juries in divorce cases, but,

"We especially urge that whatever change, if any, be made in the law, it shall be in the direction of putting men and women on an absolute equality."

(14.)

Tophill, Pontypridd (Glam.),
8th July 1910.

Dear Sir,

I have the honour to forward you the accompanying resolution from the Pontypridd and District Women's Liberal Association, and to request that you will lay it before the Commission:—

"That this meeting of the Pontypridd and District Women's Liberal Association, representing 80 members, protests with indignation against the statements made by Mr. Justice Bigham and others in their evidence before the Royal Commission on Divorce that a different standard of morality should govern the actions of men and women."

Yours faithfully,
Sadie E. Lewis,
Hon. Sec.

H. Gorell Barnes, Esq.

(15.)

37, St. Paul's Rd., Seacombe,
nr. Liverpool,
20th June 1910.

Your Lordship,

The following resolution was carried unanimously at a meeting of the Seacombe Branch of the I.L.P. on the evening of June 18th, and I was requested to send it up to you.

Yours obediently,
C. F. Rymer,
Hon. Sec. Seacombe I.L.P.

"That there should be equality of reasons for divorce as between men and women."

And also—

"That divorce should be placed within the reach of the poor."

(16.)

Wallasey and Wirral Women's Suffrage Society.

16, Newland Drive, Liscard, Cheshire,
20th May 1910.

Sir,

I am instructed by the committee of the above Society to forward to you the enclosed resolution which was passed unanimously.

Yours faithfully,
Eleanor F. McPherson.

The Secretary of the
Royal Commission on Divorce.

To the Royal Commission on Divorce, sitting at Westminster.

Resolution:

"That in the opinion of the committee of the Wallasey and Wirral Women's Suffrage Society (representing over 250 women) the grounds for divorce should be made equal for men and women.

"That the possibility of divorce should be brought within the reach of the poor."

(17.)

Wallasey Socialist Society.

Fairhaven Institute, Seaview Road,
Liscard, Cheshire,
22nd June 1910.

Gentlemen,

At the last meeting of the above Society the following resolution was proposed and carried unanimously:—

"That this Society regards the present law of divorce as unjust to women, and considers that no alteration of the law will be satisfactory or just which does not establish the equality of both sexes in all matters concerned with the law of divorce.

Yours faithfully,
A. Weare.

To the Royal Commission on the Law of Divorce, London.

(18.)

Breck Hey, Liscard, Cheshire,
15th June 1909.

At a meeting of a Women's Cottage Guild, with 125 women present, it was unanimously resolved —

"That in the opinion of this meeting, held at Breck Hey, Liscard, Cheshire, the laws of divorce should be made equal between the husband and the wife."

To the President of the Divorce Commission, now sitting.

(19.)

7, John Street, Adelphi,
Sir, Strand, W.C., 11th July 1911.

At the statutory business meeting of the Women's Industrial Council (Incorporated) held on Monday, June 19th, the accompanying resolution was unanimously adopted, and I was instructed to forward it for your kind consideration.

I am.
Yours faithfully,
L. Wyatt Papworth,
Secretary and Treasurer.

To H. Gorell Barnes, Esq.,
Royal Commission on Divorce
and Matrimonial Causes.

3. "That in view of the present unsatisfactory results of maintenance grants under separation orders, the Women's Industrial Council urges upon the attention of H.M. Government :

"(a) That in the case of a separation order, which necessarily implies bad behaviour on the part of the husband (or wife), the couple should not be obliged to come in personal contact or to communicate by means of the children for the payment of the maintenance. It should be payable into court or through some official, at the option of the parties concerned.

"(b) That the wife should not be at the expense of summoning the husband for making default in payment. A way should be arranged by which, without a large amount of trouble, she should be able to get her summons free.

"(c) That it should be made optional for the wife to put upon the court the responsibility for summoning the husband when the maintenance payable by him is in arrear, and for tracing him if he leaves the neighbourhood. The machinery appointed to carry out (a) would naturally also be utilised for this purpose of enforcing payment, particularly when there are children.

"(d) That orders for the wife's maintenance might be served on the husband's employer for the payment direct to the wife of the maintenance out of the man's wages (if so ordered by the court)."

(20.)

Women's Liberal Federation.

72, Victoria Street, Westminster, S.W.,
Dear Sir, 20th June 1910.

I am instructed by the Executive Committee to send you the following resolution, which was unanimously carried by delegates of Women's Liberal Associations affiliated to the Women's Liberal Federation (representing approximately 95,000 women) assembled in council on June 15th, 1910 :—

"This council approves the Marriage Law Amendment Bill now before Parliament, which provides that the law of divorce shall be amended so as to entitle either party to a divorce on the grounds of unfaithfulness alone."

With further reference to this resolution, my committee ask that they may be permitted to send a representative to lay their views before the Divorce Commissioners.

Yours faithfully,
Irene McArthur,
Secretary.

Lord Gorell.

APPENDIX XXVI.

The following are copies of some of the large number of letters received by the Commissioners as stated in the Report. Of those received a large proportion deal with individual cases. It has not been thought necessary to copy all of them, but sufficient have been copied to afford means of arriving at an appreciation of the grievances complained of, or some of them. Most of the letters dealing with particular cases, including all those copied, gave the names and addresses of the writers and of persons and places referred to by them, but for obvious reasons these are omitted in the copies.

The copies do not include any of the anonymous letters, of which many were received, nor of argumentative letters, nor of letters which did not seem of sufficient importance or were of excessive length, nor of letters marked private or not for publication.

My Lord,

With reference to divorce for the poor in which I have seen from time to time that you are interested, may I cite my own case as one which can claim sympathy? Ten and a half years since my wife deserted me without cause, and all attempts to find her have failed. The law will not allow me to marry for I know my wife is alive.

An application for restitution of conjugal rights would be expensive and would do no good and a judicial separation would probably do more harm than good.

I lead a lonely and loveless life, and while obeying my country's laws my country in this respect does not help me. It is, I consider, a gross injustice. I could, if necessary, give you a dozen references as to my good standing and respectability, for instance, . . . has known me for thirty six years.

I am, my Lord,
Respectfully yours,

To His Honour the Ex-President of the Divorce Court.

My Lord,

I have read with great interest your appeal for cheaper divorce and I should like to state my case to you.

Nearly 15 years ago my husband went to South Africa and left me with 4 young children, for the first 3 years he sent regular but since that time I have had no money or letters from him and I have had to work very hard to bring up my family and could not have done it if my parents and his had not helped me, my youngest child is nearly 15 and I am only 41 but I must not marry because I cannot afford to get a divorce. I have thought sometimes he must be dead but could not quite realise it was so, about 12 months ago I had an offer of marriage and was almost tempted to think he was dead but could not make up my mind to get married without waiting a little longer for fear he might return, about 3 months ago his parents received a letter from someone in Africa asking for help for him as he was ill, a friend of ours was going to . . . and made inquiries at . . . where he is residing and found out he had not been ill and the woman in whose house he is living wrote the letter, and I am bound to a villain like that in this country, but if I was in America I could have got a divorce for desertion long ago for quite a small sum. I know many more similar cases around here. I might say it was nothing in my character that induced him to stop sending. Now my Lord I should like to ask you if you would be so kind as to tell me if I could get a divorce for desertion as I could not afford to get evidence of adultery and shall not be able to get the divorce without the fee is very much lower than it is now.

I have the honour to be my Lord,
Your most obedient servant,

SIR,

I WOULD be extremely obliged if you would kindly advise me the cheapest way of obtaining freedom from my husband . . . an English subject. I was married to him at the register office . . . I was quite happy with him up until about 1904 when he began to give away drinking to the excess, gambling, and got into difficulties in money matters, as the result that he lost his situation as a butler. He went to America promising of reforming himself and would have sent for me and our child, as soon as he would have found a situation. At first I hear from him once, then elapsed about 8 months without a single line in answer to my letters. Not knowing what became of him I wrote to the British Consulate at . . . who has found my husband in a good situation but soon lost it through his master having found out that he had a woman frequently coming in the house after him, and made her pass as Mrs. [writer's name]. In the meantime I have heard then from my husband excusing himself but with quite a different tale of the fact. Since then I have heard nothing more from him. I again enquired through the Consulate, but could not be traced. On the whole it is over five years since I had a penny from him towards mine and our child's keep. I may add that soon after he left England I heard that he had carried on with another married woman, whose husband acknowledged the fact to me by letter which I still possess. I beg to apologise Sir for troubling you. Please accept my sincere thanks in advance,

Yours respectfully,

Hon. H. Gorell Barnes,
Secretary, Royal Commission on Divorce.

SIR,

I TAKE the liberty of putting my case before you. I was married on . . 1878 and at that time was . . . My wife shortly after took to drinking, pawned everything she could lay hands on, even the bedding, and my clothes, she committed theft in the . . . and was associating with men. I was nearly driven mad by her conduct. Could have got plenty of evidence of misconduct, but owing to the want of money could not apply for divorce. In . . . 1881 she left me taking with her my son another child was born at . . . in . . . She then went to London and in order that the children might not want I allowed her 15*s*. a week. On visiting them at . . . I found her and the children sleeping in an empty house. She also committed theft here. Very shortly after this she deserted the two children having left them with her brother at . . . I then claimed the children and brought them up, my son served his time to be an engineer, and my daughter is now married. I have not heard from or seen my wife since the middle of 1883, over 26 years. About 4 years ago I heard she was in an institution and some 3 months ago got her address she having left it. I am now financially in a position to apply for a divorce but her associates are dead, and others left here. I am afraid I shall have some difficulty in proving adultery.

I am at present the . . . and have been in the employment of that corporation for over 31 years. I feel very much grieved at my position and think that it is a great hardship that after such shameful conduct and desertion of over 28 years I should still be tied to such a woman who also ruined my prospects at that time.

Trusting these particulars may be of some service to you,

I remain Hon. Sir,
Yours truly,

SIR OR GENTLEMEN,

I BEG to ask the favour of laying my case before you and to ask, if you think there is any hope for me. it is this in 1904 . . . I was married at . . . Church . . . on the 3rd day He began to beat and abuse me and continued it many times broke up a nice home which my Mother and I provided as He did not and Burnt my clothes etc. and ilused me. I ran away and at 10 weeks was granted a Seperation by . . . Magistrate at . . . After that I found I should be having a Child which was born . . . 1905. So my Mother thought it would be better and I returned and lived with Him again and he behaved so bad to me after 5 weeks after baby was born I Had to leave Him and I applied for another separation at . . . and it was granted . . . 1905 by . . . and an allowance of 10*s*. per week. But He is gone and I do not know anything of Him over 3 years and all my married life is 17 weeks in 5 years 3 months. I am a machinist at dressmaking and support myself and my little boy and live with my widowed Mother.

Can you help me—and is there any hope for me to get a divorce.

I beg you will pardon this liberty.

I am, Sir,
Your humble Servant,

To Hon. Henry Gorrell Barnes,

SIR,

I AM pleased to hear of the Royal Commission on Divorce. In my case my wife left me and would not return to me although I begged her to do so, this was . . . 1907 nearly three years ago. We had a deed of Separation. Now I wish to get a decree as I wish to get married again, under any circumstances I should never return to her and I am living with a lady whom I want to marry. I do hope the law will soon be altered so that it will release me so that I can be properly married again.

Yours most respectfully,

To the Rt. Honourable
H. G. Barnes.

SIR,

MAY I be permitted to draw your attention to that of the deserted wife I have a friend whose husband deserted her four years ago. She has had to part from all her children the two eldest have been adopted the youngest she still supports and she herself has had to seek a situation, so her life is very hard and lonely. She could have married if the law would have permitted her to do so. Meanwhile the husband relieved of all responsibility is no doubt enjoying life at its fullest.

I should esteem it a favour if you would kindly use your influence on behalf of the deserted wives.

Your obedient servant,

DEAR SIR,

IM glad your taking a leading part in trying to get Divorce for the working classes as I for one have been 9 years deserted by my wife and cannot marry again as Im held up and how can we be a Loyal Christian until we get a remedy. according to our humble situation in life. So let us have some good news for the New Year. wishing you many of them.

Yours Respfully,

DEAR SIR,

I AM writing to you to ask if you would kindly inform me how much it would cost me to get free from my wife who deserted me 2 years & 4 months ago and left me two young children she has gone to America and she has been out there 26 months and a friend of mine says that she can marry out there after 2 years and I should not be able to touch her as regards bigamy. I have proof that she has committed adultery on more than one occasion and I have letters which she has sent me which is quite good enough for anybody to judg her by I want to get free because I have fear she might come over here and take one of the children away while I am at work. I am only a working man earning on an average 30*s*. per week so I could not afford a large sum. I was informed to write you for particulars of how much it would cost me. Should you require further information I should be very pleased to give it you respecting the above. An early answer will oblige.

I remain,
Yours,

My Lord,

I am very glad indeed to see that the Royal Commission on Divorce is to meet under your esteemed Presidency to-day. May I venture to express the hope that it may be possible for the Commission to suggest permanent desertion as a sufficient ground ipso facto, for divorce. I am Curate-in-Charge of this large Parish, but cannot get a licence from my bishop on the ground that I am not living with my wife when it is she who has deserted and wrecked my home after misconduct with a man. I cannot get a divorce it being too expensive, and also the shame. The position is both anomalous and undefensible. I am of sufficient credit to have charge of a large parish, but cannot hope for preferment on account of my wife. In the colonies of Australasia I should have been emancipated years ago. It is now . . . years since I have been in this case. Therefore I do hope for relief from the Commission.

Pray pardon the liberty I am taking in making this suggestion.

I have the honour to be, my Lord,
Yours v. faithfully,

Dear Lady Balfour,

Seeing in to-day's paper that you are one of the Commission on Divorce laws I shall take the liberty of writing you and ask if anything could be done for me. My husband deserted me 4 years ago and resides in Mexico. He is I know living with a woman out there as man and wife. He never sends me a penny neither does he keep his children. I am letting apartments at the above address and by a little help from friends manage to live. I cannot get my divorce simply because it is far more than I can ever save out of my earnings. The solicitors require 25*l.* down and say my case the very least would cost 75*l.* I can therefore never hope to be free unless the laws are altered as it is far beyond my means and yet I do not come under the "pauper" law having a bisiness, although all my furniture is hire and I have not any money of my own except what I earn. Can you possibly help the really poor yet decent woman who could pay a little to get her case, but not the fearful and impossible sum that is required now. There must be many who would be most glad if divorce could be made possible to the middle class.

Thanking you in hopes,
Yours faithfully,

The Hon. H. Gorell Barnes,

Dear Sir,

It is with the utmost interest I have read the reports so far made public in connection with the Royal Com. on Divorce. Like many other women I'm placed in a very difficult position; wishing and feeling to have every right to claim a divorce yet not sufficient evidence as the law now stands. Four years this coming July I was married in . . . The following four months were a period of untold misery and mental anguish. At the end of that time my husband deliberately left me, and since . . . 1906, not a trace of his whereabouts has been found or a word has broken the silence. Every effort was made to this end by public and private means but all with the one result.

In any case my whole moral instinct revolts at the idea of a reunion; neither would he wish it I am assured, if he were found. But as there was no actual cruelty so far as blows, though he came very near it in his extremely passionate moods; I have always felt that the fact of desertion is not enough in the eyes of the law for me to attempt to gain a divorce upon.

My sympathies are entirely with you in this matter. Not that the ideal of honour or marriage should be lessened; but that divorce should be obtainable on wider grounds than at present, to, in many cases, save the moral character of the individual.

Yours very truly,

Lady Frances Balfour,

My Lady,

I have been very much interested lately in reading that a Royal Commission for Divorce has been formed and as I notice you are sitting on this Commission I take the liberty of bringing my case before your notice.

It is five years since my husband went away without a word of explanation and since then I have had to support myself to the best of my ability, as he has never helped me in any way, in fact I am in ignorance as to his movements.

Shortly after my marriage he recognised that I had a small income and played on my feelings to such an extent that in a very short time he had morgaged the whole of it. After this I humbled myself, I went into a business with him and did my utmost to encourage him to keep straight but my efforts were in vain, for he seemed to prefer the company of loose companions rather than a comfortable home and cheerful wife. He then became a working partner in a . . . business but soon committed himself and was obliged to leave . . . which as I have already stated is five years ago.

You will readily understand what a hard life I have had for 12 years, simply because I have not had the means to seek release in the ordinary divorce court. I do sincerely trust that the good work you are engaged in will prove a great success for the sake of poor suffering innocent women. Apologising for troubling you and thanking you in anticipation for any suggestion you may be kind enough to send me.

I am,
Yours faithfully,

To Lord Gorell,
Chairman of the Royal Commission.

I hope your Lordship will excuse this liberty I am taking in laying before your Lordship my grievance regarding this matter in which is now taking up your valuable time.

I have been married 9 years and had led a very happy life untill I came home one afternoon in . . . 1908 unexpected and found my wife in bed with the lodger, who I had always treated as a brother, having taken him in, when he was in want and starving, and for 6 years he had lodge with me and had been treated as a friend of the family, however I turned the man out of the house and reasoned with my wife, finding she was the worse for drink, and telling me it was the first time such a thing had occurred. I believed her and forgave her on the promise of her never speaking to him again. I forgave her so much that 3 days after I handed 75*l.* Seventy five pounds over to her, which I had just received in settlement for a claim for compensation to let her see I had still faith in her, and trusting her in every way I know Your Lordship will say what a silly thing to do.

A few weeks after I came home to find my home, wife and child gone, she had taken rooms and was with this scamp for he is no man, I must tell Your Lordship my wife is 22 years older than him.

I applied for a warrant for her arrest at . . . Police Court in the meantime my wife finding that I intended to charge her, applied for a summons against me for threats, but I had only threatened the man with a good hiding, however both cases was to be heard the same day before Mr. . . . taking my wife case against me first my wife and another woman swore that I threatened her with a razor and that I kicked her, which was false, as my razors were taken and also my clothes with the rest of my home, Mr. . . . did not so much as ask me a question but bound me over to keep the peace for 12 months, which I kept faithfully and went out of . . . but when I returned I met the woman who had appeared against me, she apologised to me and said it was all false what she had said against me, and also told me if ever she could put right the wrong she had done she would. when Mr. . . . saw what a different face my case made I think he saw where the wrong was and what my wife was trying for, so he told me he was sorry for me and that my wife could not get an allowance made against me.

I did not meet my wife and did not know where she was untill one Sunday night I met her and this man together, I politely ask her how my child was (a little girl now 4 years of age) but she struck me in the eye with a bag she was carrying (I have never struck a woman yet) but I turned on the man and gave him a good hiding which he well deserved such a hiding that he was laid up in bed for days and only used my fists on him after I had given him as much as I think he deserved I let him go and told him he would have the same each time I met him with my wife, I have only met him once since when he received the same, so he keeps out of my way. This last few days my wife's sister has shown me letters which was written by my wife to this man one is where she sent him 3*l.* to pay back money which he had used of his masters. So I hope your Lordship will see how necessary it is for a change in the English Divorce laws for the poor. I am only a butler so after losing all I had in the world I must be content to be tied to a woman like that all my life, it is more the thoughts of my poor little Girl to be brought up in such a life, and I who has done no wrong not to be allowed to see my child and not so much as to know even where she is.

Now once again I must apologise for encroaching on your valuable time trusting a day may come when we shall see an alteration in these Laws.

Thanking you for perusal of this letter.

I beg to remain Yours respectfully,

My Lord,

Kindly forgive me for writing to you but I am reading carefully the matter on Divorce law now before the Royal Commission. No question has yet been put relating to a case similar to my own.

Up to 2 years ago I lived quite comfortably with my husband, then he quite suddenly went away and cohabited with a woman as "man and wife" and shortly they had a child; they are still living as "man and wife" and I have never seen him since. On hearing of the misconduct I got a separation order to prevent him taking away my (our) child. The separation order granted 10*s.* weekly, none of which I have had, as I hear that his means are only enough for a bare living with this woman and their child. He vows he would never return to me even if I would have him. I now go out and work to keep myself and child. I am now told that the separation order I was forced to obtain prevents my possibility of ever obtaining a divorce. Have I no remedy or am I to continue to live this life of misery and doubt?

I shall be pleased to hear the opinions on such a case. My relations may find the means if a divorce were obtainable.

Again asking you to forgive my troubling you,

I remain,

Yours faithfully,

To Lord Gorrell.

Your Lordship,

Sir,

May I beg to draw your sympathetic attention to the following Re Poor Law Divorce as under present discussion. Would you kindly take my case for consideration. After five years of unhappy married life my husband left me nearly two years ago (at the age of 25) and took another "person" with him to Scotland by whom he has children and with whom he is still living. He left me with two little boys totally unprovided for. My two little boys felt ill and by the doctor's advice I parted with them to . . . . Infirmary (where they still are). The authorities issued a warrant on their behalf and he (my husband) was arrested and brought up to . . . As he was arrested on a Guardian's warrant only my name was not mentioned. I knew little or nothing about the law and he got off with only having to pay to my two boys. They are still in the Infirmary whilst I am earning my living as . . . at above address. Do you not think my position a cruel one in the extreme? I have neither father, mother, brother or sister.

For the sake of such as myself don't you think that there should be divorce for those unable to pay thro' force of circumstances such a large amount as now demanded. I cannot do wrong tho' I have many offers to settle down as Housekeeper etc. and can in some cases even have my two dear little lads. I am twenty seven years in the prime of my life as you may say yet I dare not do wrong for my boys sake. Do you understand my position? My husband and I never cared from the first and I have yet to meet the man with whom my soul can mate and until then I can wait it is true but if there was possibly such a thing as obtaining divorce for the sum of three guineas as mentioned during your present committees discussion, I should feel myself entirely free to follow the dictates of my own heart when that time arrives. I could not in honour listen to any proposal as I am now placed, and yet I am so longing for my two little lads to be with me again that were I free I would sacrifice my personal feeling should it be for their comfort and welfare.

Apologising for taking your valuable time and wishing to show only how perhaps many others beside myself are similarly placed, I beg to remain,

Yours truly,

My Lord,

Having read some reports of Commission, I beg to place before you the case of my Mother who is 64 years of age. In 1882 my Father . . . run away to Canada with a woman leaving myself aged 13, my brother 17, and my Mother. After being away nearly 20 years, during which time my mother has supported herself he returned to this country owing to a law dispute with . . . and after petitioning His Majesty the King he has been sent on to . . . Asylum where he is at the present day I believe. My mother who was granted a Separation Order at the time has never received a coin from him. And I have every reason to believe my mother could have married and being in a house of her own but for the expense of procuring a divorce.

Yours respectfully,

P.S.—My Lord I also beg to state my mother who has held the position of housekeeper, to a large business manager in . . . , for the last . . . years, has only mentioned divorce to me once and said the expense was too great, but it seems to me hardly fair that the law which does not compel a man to support his wife should expect her to be true to his memory.

Respectfully yours,

Right Hon. Lord Gorell,

My Lord,

I am writing to thank you for your sympathy with the poor in relation to divorce as one who has suffered I know the misery which it entails.

I was a small farmer occupying some heavily rented land, having no capital except the few things about the Farm.

Twenty-three years ago my wife left me, the reason being that life was too dull in the country after coming from the town. Her pretext was a charge of cruelty in order to obtain a maintenance. She applied to the Magistrates for a separation order which they refused to grant, and which had they done I should have been unable to pay and someone to take her place in the house besides, as it would have resulted in bankruptcy. I begged her to come back after she failed to obtain the order, she refused and left the neighbourhood, and I could not succeed in tracing her for many years. Eventually I found out that she had married again and had a child, a daughter somewhere near . . . in New Zealand. I have the certificate of her second marriage in . . . [New Zealand] from the registrar at that town, wherein she described herself as a widow and myself as having died some years since on a certain date in . . .

I have applied to solicitors in reference to the matter and they tell me it will cost several hundred pounds to get a divorse and which I think is a great hardship especially after all these years of suffering. I appeal to you and the gentlemen on the Commission for relief in connection with the law on the subject of divorce.

Surely seven years desertion without cause should be considered sufficient grounds for a decree of divorce.

I remain yours obediently,

P.S.—I may say that I have lived here in the same neighbourhood all my life, and am . . . , and am also prepared to verify the statements I have made before the Commission if you think it would be of any service to those similarly circumstanced. If your Lordship could give me any advice how to obtain my freedom from these bonds I should be eternally grateful.

My Lord,

I have been greatly interested in the doings of the divorce inquiry; I have been married 17 years last . . . , 7 years next . . . my wife went to live with another man, She told me she thought more of his little finger than she did of me, altogether, as he was better off, better dressed, and more suitable for her in every way. I consulted Mr. . . . solicitor and he Informed me, that I could not get a Divorce for less than 150*l*. Unfertunately I did not posess that many pence, and therefore had no redress at law, but have had to live within 400 yards of them; through her conduct I had to give up 2 situations, and have only earned since then about 16*s*. a week while the man she is with makes 10*l*. a week, are the Diverce laws fair to me, I don't think so, why should I not have the same privileges as the rich man, I think I should have as much right to be heard in a court of law but the law denies me, on a/c of having no money.

My Lord if you can tell me any way out of my difficulty, or could give me any Infermation you would make me your lifelong Debtor, as my life has been and is still Hell upon earth, I have given you my name and address in good faith but not for Publication the letter can be read out at the Inquiry and published in the papers if you wish to but please don't give the address to the papers.

My Lord I Remain a 7 years sufferer.

P.S.—I have enclosed stamped envelope in case you could give me any advice.

Lord Gorell,
London.

To Lady Francis Balfour,
Royal Commission, London.

Madam,

I hope you will pardon the liberty I take in writing to you, as you are sitting at the Royal Commission. I felt I should like to lay my case in front of you. In 1888 I was married to a man who turned out to be one of the Basest Scoundrels possible, after subjecting me to vile indignities and ill-treatment, he deserted me at the end of 8 years. I heard nothing of him for several years until I heard he was charged at . . . with Fraud, and by inquiry I found he had married another woman and subsequently was convicted for Bigamy since then he has had other terms of imprisonment, and was again sentenced to 3 years imprisonment . . . this year particulars of which I enclose. My whole life has been blighted and I am tied to this man, simply because the present system of divorce is not obtainable to poor people. I am employed in a shop and earn 17*s*. weekly and help support a widowed mother. It is the future that looks so black when I am no longer able to work. I have one son of . . . years of age, who is in the . . . and of course does not earn much. I am told if I were able to find the necessary money, I could get Free of him while he is in prison, but that is impossible, unless the Royal Commission will do something for such unfortunate people as I. I invite every inquiry into my affairs. I am now only 38 years of age.

I have the honour to be, Madam,
Your Ladyship's most obedient and humble servant,

To the Royal Commission on Divorce Laws.

The Secretary,

Dear Sir,

I have followed with extreme interest, the proceedings of your learned Commission, the outcome of which, I earnestly hope will be to afford relief in such concrete and typical cases as my own.

Eight years ago my wife ran away with a lodger. Six weeks later she begged for forgiveness, which was granted, and I took her back. But the second state was worse than the first, for a few months later she decamped again, and has lived ever since, over seven years, with the same fellow. I was thus left in the lurch with two little girls aged about 5 and 6. The wife had had a boy which I thought was mine but now I know it was that fellow's. I have lived in lodgings practically ever since, leaving my poor girls to get on with strangers' kindnesses, but the last four years I have placed them in a boarding school, in which they will not be able to stop for ever, leaving when both are over school age. Thus, through the woman's sin, my daughters have been deprived of home and all it means to girls ever since they were little tots; the same applies to me, for I have had to put up with lodgings. On the other hand, the woman, living with another man these seven or eight years, has a home and children, enjoying the lot with impunity.

Now Sir, my daughters will soon be out of school, girls just over 14 and what have I for them? What "home coming" can I give them? They are too young to "keep house" for themselves and me; they cannot very well come with me in lodgings for "a single young man," were I to put them to work, they must come home sometimes surely? Thus because of the heavy expenses of divorce, I have never been able to free myself from this unfaithful woman, and by this time I might have had a home for my daughters. But no, the guilty party does not suffer in this instance, unless it be through her conscience, whilst I, who wishes to keep pure and live pure before God and man, have to bear the punishment, to deserve which I have done nothing. "Where there is no sin, there is no shame." Eight years ago and so ever since! I have never set eyes on her, neither do I know where she is. But her parents know or hear about her. Where would collusion be in my case, especially when I took her back once, and all the thanks I got was to run away a second time for good?

Thanking you for kind attention.

I remain, dear Sir,
Yours very respectfully,

My Lord Justice,

Kindly allow me to make a statement in reference to the Royal Commission now sitting on the divorce laws, the proceedings of which I have followed from the commencement and I think a great many good suggestions have been. What struck me most was the evidence relating to desertion. Why can't the Scotch system be brought in and make desertion a cause for divorce.

I may state that I have been deserted by my wife some 16 years ago. Now its very hard lines one has to suffer so much on account of one person. I may tell you she sued for maintenance but failed because she had no valid excuse whatever. There was a mother-in-law in the case and she was the instigator. I may say there are two children of the marriage.

In this part 2 or 3 weeks ago there was a similar case and the man committed suicide on the railway after trying to drown himself a few days before. This was a man with a large family. Now I followed the evidence in this case very closely and it was exactly the same as what I had gone through years ago except the very last act, and I can assure you I only narrowly escaped that for it preyed on my mind many days. Now in my opinion its useless to blame this man for taking his life. From my own experience I believe it was quite natural to him and that he thought he was doing his duty. It would be brought on by the constant mental strain. I am not writing this from an individual point of view because I don't expect a law to be past for one only but I know several that are in the same predicament as myself and I am sure there are many throughout the country.

Apologising for trespassing on your valuable time,
I have the honour to remain,
Sir, your humble and obedient servant,

The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Gorell.

Secretary Royal Commission Divorce Court.

Dear Sir,

I hope and trust the efforts that are being made to enable poor people will, soon be at hand or some remedy that will not entail much cost take my case for instance four years ago I was married to a man and after living with him nearly 3 months he disappeared, as he had been very cruel during this time the magistrates here granted a summons but he could not be found for some time and then we obtained his address from the . . . authorities the man being a . . . the summons found him in . . . Scotland. He appeared on the summons the case was adjourned for a month to see if the parties could come to terms. He never turned up at the adjournment and an order and separation was obtained the amount being 7*s.* 6*d.* that is four years next . . . . I have never seen him since the summons was heard, and not one penny have I received I am now and have been close on three years a Waitress in a Gentlemans house in . . . and they take a great interest in my case I am known and go by my maiden name with my employers permission they have also found a home for my infant I cannot describe my suffering before my child was born and afterwards through being deserted I was pointed out to everyone and through no fault of my own a warrant was obtained but the police could not get him I communicated with the . . . authorities and they say he has not applied for his pension since . . . 1907 but he has reported himself once, before he disappeared my parents and I found out he had married me under false pretences and had also tried to obtain various sums of money by false statements even the wedding ring was found to be brass all these facts were placed before the clergyman who married us and who said at the time the man wanted locking up I think it very hard at the age of 23 to be bound to a man I may never see and who so cruelly deserted and left me to face the world with my unborn babe and had it not been for my parents during the terrible months that followed God knows where I would have drifted, and as I stand I am neither maid wife or widow, enclosed you will see I have been seeking a divorce but on the present terms and the existing circumstances I will be obliged to remain as I am although I could remarry a honest man if I were a free woman.

To the Chairman of the Divorce Commission.

HON. SIR,

OF course I much prefer that my name is not made public, but I would like to put my case before you:

I am 49 years of age, and it is just four years and four months yesterday since my wife left me. She took with her the elder son, and has since enticed the younger one away. We shall never live together again: life for me was beyond all endurance, what with her cruel tongue and treacherous deceits.

I am in lodgings, and cannot think of refurnishing a home, as I do not know what her next move might be.

Is it a nice thing to contemplate that my life should be subject to her caprice?

Surely after four years' desertion I might be set free from her every claim, and seek some comfort for my declining years.

In your deliberations please be merciful to the unfortunate. I Remain,

Yours very Sincerely,

Lords and Gentlemen,

DEAR SIRS,

I HAVE been reading with interest the varies subjects on Divorce. I would like to say something regarding myself. I am a Married man with 2 Children. six years ago my Wife left me taking the 2 Children of the marriage with her since that time she has been living an immoral life; After 2 years I was able to put in a petition in the Divorce Court. But unfortunately however the cause was defended the day before the trial 7 weeks after the serving of the Citations.

To my great surprise I found that I was responsible for the costs of defending the case, which however I could not meet, What is one to do for the welfare of the children are they to be brought up in an immoral life as I am now unable to bring the case to court. I humbly pray that your Lordship will give me a little advice, I am only a poor working man.

I am Dear Sirs, Yours Truly,

To the Hon. Henry Gorell Barnes,
Secretary to the Royal Commission on the law of Divorce.

DEAR SIR,

MAY I bring before you my case in which I think no reasonable man would or could object to my having a Divorce it is a sad one.

22 years ago my wife drowned her child on becoming insane without warning and no proceedings were taken, I had to put her away in an asylum she being extremely violent, I have had her put in three different asylums, and she is now in the last one of unsound mind and will never be better this I have from the Commissioners of Lunacy in London. I took the responsibility instead of the government in, keeping a criminal lunatic, which I might have had her tried for drowning her child. I was a young man at the time, and I furnished a house and never slept in it and the cause of insanity is no doubt hereditary for I have traced it in the family. I have given up the sea faring life and I think after 22 years I ought to be allowed to be divorced or I may say no one situated with a wife as I am, should be debarred from marrying again. I should feel it a great kindness to me if you do all you and your committee can to have this law of divorce in England altered. I have one daughter only and she knows nothing about her mother being in the asylum, I have thought it best not to let her know it, and I will do all in my power to prevent her marrying for I would not if I possibly could allow another man to go through what I have. It has been a millstone round my neck all my life time.

Should you wish I will send you on the letter which I received from the Secretary of the Commission of Lunacy and if Mr. . . . does not know that there is a permanent lunatic he can read it and add to his store of knowledge, for he stated in Parliament that he was not aware of there being a permanent lunatic.

I remain, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

P.S.—I may state that I am not doing or at least asking for the laws of divorce to be altered for the purpose of saving the expense of keeping or paying for my wife. But that it is a disgrace to humanity that a man shall be bound to a lunatic, and debarred having a wife, and by so doing drive him to immorality and no end of misery.

I think the Bible or St. Paul says if a man marries and the wife finds no favour in his sight write her a bill of divorce so I fail to see in my case at least how a lunatic can find favour in anyone's sight, and I fail to see how any minister of government or church could object to a divorce in cases like myself.

To the Hon. Henry Gorell Barnes,

DEAR SIR,

I READ with deep interest the article on the Law of Divorce in the Daily Chronicle of Friday last. Does this law introduce the Lunacy Act? I earnestly ask cannot something be done to bring that act forward I myself was married at the age of 22 years after 2 years of married life my wife lost her reason and was taken to an asylum leaving me with a baby 3 months old. This is 12 years ago, I am now 34. I have a doctor's letter certifying my wifes case is quite hopeless yet I am bound and compelled to live an unnatural existence. Mine I know is only one case in thousands or why are the asylums so crowded. These poor creatures are dead to the world. Why cannot something be done to free those who are left behind thereby helping to make England more pure and the cases of forced immorality less. How can one expect a moral country where such laws exist.

Apologising for troubling you,

I am dear Sir,

Yours truly,

HONOURED SIR,

HEREWITH I beg to submit a case (my own) for consideration by yourself and other members of His Majesty's Royal Commission appointed to consider the divorce laws at present in existence, as related to the conditions of the poor.

I remain, Sir,

Yours respectively,

The Honble Henry Gorell Barnes, Esq.

THE Honourable Gentlemen of His Majesty's Royal Commission appointed to consider the present Divorce Laws.

Case.

I . . . am a Subordinate . . . Official and have been in my present post . . . years at a salary equal to a trifle under 2*l.* per week.

After having been in my present post a little over a year I considered I was in a position to marry and did accordingly. In the course of the next 6 years my wife gave birth to two children, a boy and a girl, the boy being five years old when the other child was born.

Soon after the birth of the last child, my wife developed signs of insanity and although I tried to avoid this course, I became compelled to have her removed to an Asylum. I since find out that the insanity was hereditary, which fact was previously concealed from me. This occurred nearly seven years ago (and apparently she is a hopeless case) since when I have found it necessary to break up my home and part with my children to a person who has no other interest in them than the periodical payments I make. Did my circumstances permit I would much prefer, as my children are growing up to have them under my own personal care.

Observations.—I do think that some alteration in the divorce laws are necessary, to make it possible for such as are in the same unfortunate position as myself (and I have met others when visiting the asylum) to provide a home and proper parental training and care for the children of such a marriage. I advance this with all due respect to my present wife, who I will say that when sane was a model wife in all respects but who now does not appreciate any affection shown by her husband. If I was to consider a housekeeper in the first place a housekeeper would require a salary, which would reduce my finances below the possibility of housekeeping. Secondly, I should have to engage someone who was well advanced in years and who would therefore be incapable of doing the necessary household duties of a working man. I know of more than one person nearer my own age, who might also be a friendly companion to me, and would be willing to take charge of my household, and who have every regard for my honourability. They dare not, because the world at large would brand them as immoral, however proper and moral their life might be. Therefore I say an injustice is done to us in so far that it is forcing a man who would be a respectable citizen into an immoral course, and at the same time sacrificing the future of his children who are the men and women of the future.

I respectfully advance the theory that some alteration might be made to release one from a marital tie, which is of no advantage to anyone concerned, thereby in some way make conditions such, that the children should not be sacrificed for the sake of Mrs. Grundy. I advance this solely for the sake of my two children whom it pains me to be separated from.

Yours respectfully,

SIR,

I BEG to apologise for writing to you, but as I have cause to be interested in the Commissions of enquiry into the present state of the divorce laws and being very anxious as to its results, I am sure you will excuse it, and although you are familiar with such cases I have thought it may be right to give you the particulars of my own. I was married a few years before my wife became insane, she has been so continuously for the past 18 years and is certified to be hopelessly incurable by the Medical Superintendents and in a recent letter from the Asylum at . . . she was described as "Mentally lost." I was not aware at the time of marrying that insanity was in her family, her father having died of softening of the brain. Although I have no means, if money could be found, would such deception form any ground for applying for a divorce? In the meantime, Sir, I should be very grateful if your enquiries should result in the law being altered to remedy such a monstrous injustice. With my best thanks for the efforts that are being made to this end, and apologising again for troubling you.

I am, Sir,
Yours very respectfully,

To the Royal Commission Law and Divorce.

GENTLEMEN,

I HAVE the honour to lay the following case of Lunacy before your Royal Commission.

I have a wife . . . who has now been confined in the County Asylum, . . . for over thirteen (13) years with no prospect of her ever being well enough to come out. During all this time I have been paying 5*s.* per week for her. I am a general working . . . at 27*s.* per week. Before being sent to the Asylum she was at home with me for two years causing great expense for Doctors, etc. she also, I am sorry to say got me into serious money troubles, wasting my wages, so that, after she was sent away numerous bills, of which I knew nothing were sent into me; to meet all these extra expenses I had to let my house rent run up to 70*l.* odd, which has not yet been fully paid.

To make matters worse I am a great sufferer from Rheumatism, my last illness laying me up for eight months with rheumatic fever during which time I could not earn a penny, at the same time incurring heavy expenses. Having an unmarried son I must keep up a home and pay a woman to look after the house while I am at work and do for us.

Now considering the number of years my wife has been detained, together with my illness, also four of our family besides myself are paying poor rates, I made application to the . . . Board of Guardians asking them if they could not see their way to reduce the weekly payment, as it was entirely through ill health that I had got a few weeks behind—their answer was pay up, or legal proceedings will be taken.

I think this very hard having tried my best to keep out of debt. What is a man in my position to do as I cannot afford a lawyer to plead my case.

I am Gentlemen, Yours very respectfully,

Mr. Gorell Barnes.

DEAR SIR,

IN reading the papers I have been pleased to see how you have spoke out about the divorce for the poor and I hope such cases as mine will be taken up too.

My husband has been eight years in one of our largest asylums, he is an epileptic and for nine years before that when I lived with him it was drink drink no pleasure in fact he used to have it for breakfast, he was sent away once for the delirium tremens so you see I have had very little pleasure of my marriage. I think it is high time something was done for such cases as mine there are other cases in the town I have two friends who are placed same as myself and has asked me to mention it.

I should esteem it a favour if you would answer this and let me know if lunacy is included in the Royal Commission.

Yours sincerely,

To the President of the Royal Commission on Divorce.

DEAR SIR,

I AM not aware of the class of evidence which will be brought before you during the sitting of the Royal Commission but I would like to bring before you my case not that I have or ever have had any intention of seeking for a divorce but to show the injustice to which one may be put under existing laws. I have been married for the past 14 years to a woman who when I married her appear to be in perfect health but after 4 years had to be certified as a lunatic and it was then that I discovered that she had already been certified before I married her; having become slightly better she was allowed home, but after a year had to be certified again, and was again sent home where she now is, and may at any time have to go away again.

My contention is that any man or woman having contracted a marriage without the knowledge being disclosed of either the one or the other having been in an asylum before marriage that they should be able to get a divorce and that for the sole reason that it is unwise that those who have been certified should be allowed to propogate their species and that for the good of the state.

I remain,
Yours respectfully and faithfully,

DEAR SIR,

IN the Weekly Dispatch of to-day's date, I find in the evidence of . . . that he states that divorce should not be granted for lunacy. Now the following is my experience of married life with the wife in the asylum 12 years ago my wife was taken to the asylum "after twice attempting to do me harm with a knife," and I am informed that she will never come out again although her health is good, why should I have to pass the remainder of my life alone, I am only 43 in the prime of life, so you see what a great hardship it is for one in my position. You may use this letter if you think fit but I would rather my name was not mentioned at the present stage.

I am, dear Sir,
Yours respectfully,

Gorell Barnes, Esq.,
Secretary, London.

MY LORD,

AS Chairman of the Divorce Law Reform Commission, I take this liberty of addressing you, and shall esteem it a favour if you will inform me as to whether the Commission will discuss the question of divorce, as regards an insane partner. I am only a young man 29 years of age, and my wife has now been confined in various asylums for nearly 3 years, which seems to me nearly 30 years, and the Doctors give me no hope of her ever recovering her senses, but tell me that she may live on to be an old woman.

I am quite willing to provide for her maintenance but it does not seem right that I should be debarred from marrying again, as there were no children to the marriage, and to live a life such as I live is almost unbearable and is enough to drive one to desperation, the best years of my live vanishing and nothing to look forward to but years of misery. If I was an old man with children around me I should feel more content, but I am a man and have the feelings and desires of a man and as I had been married some years, you can understand what it means to have a wife taken away from you, and as the law will not allow me to marry again there appears to be only one course to take, and such a course debars a person from decent society, as the law now stands. Cannot something be done to remedy such a condition as mine, as I lead a good life and have no desire to do wrong, if such can be called wrong, but surely I cannot be expected to live a life such as I am now doing until I am an old man.

If it is not asking you too much, should you consider that I was doing wrong to marry again, and is it probable that I should be criminally prosecuted, for doing so, under such circumstances as mine. I know that as the law now stands the marriage would not be legal, but I live in hopes that things will be altered, and to be placed in such a position as mine is enough to drive all hope and ambition from any man.

I hope you will excuse my writing to you at such length, but I know of no one better than yourself to whom I can open out my troubles, as I know you have spent your life in solving matrimonial troubles and trust you will be spared to see the present Law as regards marriage, so altered that adultery will not be a matter of compulsion.

Awaiting your kind reply,
I remain,
Yours faithfully,

The Right Hon. Lord Gorell, London.

YOUR HONOUR,

SEEING a paragraph re "Lunacy Inquiry" I was married to my wife 18 years before she became insane, she had to go to a Private Asylum, and the doctors say there is no hope of her recovery, and she has been there 15 years. The remark in reference to early insanity is quite correct, but what about the man after 18 years? surely that ought to be sufficient for the Lunacy Commissioner to go into the matter and grant a divorce, say in 6 or 7 years after the person has become insane especially as the case is hopeless cases like those ought not to be brought up to London when they happen in the country. Please ask your friends at the Bar if things cannot be altered. There are hundreds of cases like mine and I think they ought to have consideration. In reference to the remark in the paper of the Royal Commission that a man or woman having lived together for 15 years without showing any signs of insanity during that time, and then one or the other becomes hopelessly insane, should have all the pleasures of life taken away from them. There is many a man or woman suffer through no fault of their own and have to be separated for years without any redress.

Yours faithfully,

MY LORD,

BEING intensely interested in the controversy now taking place re Divorce will you pardon me for bringing my own case before your notice which I am convinced is not a solitary one by any means.

My husband for the first ten or twelve years of our married life was a clerk in a . . . office, and was everything that a wife could wish but he accepted a post as representative of a . . . which marred his whole career and he became so violent and debauched in his habits that I sought and had a Judicial Separation with maintenance for myself and 2 children, he never contributed anything and has been an inmate of a lunatic asylum for years, with no hope whatever of recovery, this has been going on for nearly 12 years and my children having married I am alone and cannot of course marry again under the existing laws and therefore I do trust that good may come out of all your learned discussions not only for myself, but for many others who are similarly situated.

Trusting this may come under your Lordship's notice and apologizing for my lengthy letter

I remain,
Your Lordship's obedient servant,

If you make this known, kindly withhold my name from the public press.

YOUR LORDSHIP,

SEEING your Lordship's speech as Chairman of the Divorce Commission in reference to insanity I beg that you will press your opinion on that particular matter. As one whose wife became insane 14 years ago I think I am able to realize to the full the benefit to be derived if such an important suggestion were made law. No one except those who go through the terrible ordeal can have the slightest idea of the mental anguish and torture through which one passes through at a time like that, it is a thousand times worse than death and goodness knows that is bad enough. I have seen my children neglected cruelly treated and verminous and me powerless to do anything to remedy it. I could tell a true tale that would make a strong man weep. May I ask this question if this is the case where a wife is afflicted how much more terrible it must be when the husband becomes insane. I have cause to feel glad it was not me instead of my wife, for I cannot imagine how my wife who was a shop assistant before marriage could possibly have brought up our three children. In conclusion let me say I am sure that the law as at present is a direct incentive to immorality in cases such as these. What can a woman do, for the sake of a home and food for her children and herself if the offer is from say an old school friend or an old lover she would indeed be a strong woman who would see her children want food and clothing when offered to her in all honour but that of the law of the country. I sincerely hope that if relief is not given to the man it most certainly should be given to the woman, believing your Lordship will do your best in this particular direction.

Humbly,
I am your obedient servant,

The Secretary,

DEAR SIR,

REGARDING the conditions of divorce, should like to cite particulars of my own case, as emphasizing the need of legislation to provide increased facilities aud extend grounds on which a petition can be lodged. Was married at . . . in . . . 1897, my wife becoming an inmate of the . . . Asylum in . . 1899; she left that institution without being discharged in . . . 1902 and has since been cared for at home, but still suffers from some form of incurable lunacy.

Needless to say we have no children; though legally married I find myself clean cut off from all such intimacy which should exist as between husband and wife, and am virtually without a partner in the world. Of course in the circumstances I would gladly have my freedom, and can well believe any similarly placed, may not infrequently be driven to adopt a course of immorality which under different conditions they would doubtless have shunned and been easily able to avoid.

Concluding let me suggest Insanity should be a good ground for the dissolution of marriage when on either side the same has been clearly established.

Yours faithfully,

To the Lord Mayor.

SIR,

MY husband has been in an asylum at . . . 15 years and is incurably insane. I have been in service since that time now 55 years of age and getting too old for service can I get a cheap divorce in . . . as I have not much money an old gentleman offers me marriage and a comfortable home if I can get free he is 60 years of age my life has been very hard to be tied to a man who has never kept me; his father was in . . . Asylum 20 years I did not know his family when I married as I was young.

An answer at your earliest will oblige,

P.S.—I only get out Wednesday evening 7 o'clock to late to come to the court to see you personally.

Re Royal Commission on Divorce.

DEAR SIR,

I TRUST you will not consider it impertinence my writing you on this matter. I wish briefly to call your attention to this as relating to Lunacy and my own experience.

18 years ago my wife became insane and was confined in a lunatic asylum where she now is, I was left with 5 young children the eldest 12 the youngest a baby, at that time I was a traveller for a small firm. I however had to give this up and take an inferior position that I might be home with my children. I am quite sure if your Royal Commission knew the difficulty socially and personally of a man placed in this position they would arrange that some means should be adopted to remedy this not only for our sake but for the childrens sake.

I am now 53 years old and my children are now grown up that any alteration of the laws at my time of life would not affect me.

I am therefore addressing these few lines to you that others who are younger may reap some benefit from my experience.

Yours respectfully,

SIR,

I HOPE I am not taking too great a liberty in writing to you. My wife has been in . . . Lunatic Asylum 18 years next . . . "A hopeless Case," and as the law stands now, I am to remain neither married nor single, while everything is being done to assist evil doers getting divorces.

Sincerely yours,

Please accept an apology for writing.

DEAR SIR,

I HOPE you will forgive the liberty I am taking by writing to you, my husband has been in . . . Lunatic Asylum for six years now so I want you to tell me shall I be a free woman, as there is a good man wanting to marry me. I have got a certificate from the Medical Superintendent telling me that my husband is an uncurable case, I have three children, and I do hope you will tell me right. I am a servant at present, will you please let me know soon.

I remain dear Sir,

Yours very respectfully,

To My Lord Gorell.

DEAR SIR,

re Divorce.

I HOPE the existing law will be altered so as to give the poor or working classes a chance that they may avail themselves as well as those that can under existing expensive law and further if the working class whom it affects was allowed to give evidence on behalf of their own hardships and grievances instead of those that are not in a like position as themselves as if they were they would I think have more sympathy for the deserving and unable as in the mens cases I know off.

I would also to give mine own in point of this contention and no doubt there are hundreds of simelar. I married a person that had a deranged mind before marriage and from what I know of the law I am legally entitled to a divorce on those grounds but the expenses incurred prevents me therefore there is no alternative under existing law but to go on year after year now near 20 years which I consider a great hardship whereas if within reach of my pocket I should long ago have availed myself of its blessing therefore I really think it would be a great boon to such if the alterations was affective and no doubt it would be a wise step towards morality for why should not the deserving poor be debarred living in misery on a/c of no cash to go to London whereas if conferred on C Cts and cheapened they would then be able trusting this will have some consideration and be helpful.

I remain,

Yours truly,

MY LORD,

I HAVE read with interest the evidence given before the Divorce Commission and note that most of the witnesses favour granting a divorce to a man if his wife is a permanent imbecile. Now my Lord as a man who has a wife that has been sent out of . . . Infirmary as incurable and who is now laid in bed suffering from disease of the blood vessels to the brain, is wrong in her mind, blind and has lost the use of her arm and leg I strongly object to a man being allowed to shirk his responsibility by granting him a divorce. My wife has been for years like she is to-day and I have tried to obey the marriage law which says "in sickness or in health" out of my wage of 35*s*. per week and the state has not, or will not do anything to help me but if a man was allowed a divorce in cases like this he takes advantage of the law and promptly pushes his wife on to the state for them to keep. Now my Lord why should I have to cast a stigma upon my wife's relations and upon my children by getting a divorce? before the state would help me. Should they not sooner help a man who is trying to do his duty rather than make the way easier for a man to shirk his responsibility.

Yours respectfully,

SIR,

I AM writing to ask how I can get a divorce married in 1899 when I was 19 to a man 25 he led me a terrible life for 7 years. I have 1 little girl. He ill-used me and I have had such black eyes that I have not been able to see for 2 or 3 days have lost the hearing of one ear through a terrible blow and he use to keep me without money for 6 and 7 months at a time bringing in a bit of food when it pleased him. But great part of the time I went to work to keep myself and child I left him once but went back again as he promised to be better but he got worse and not content with ill-treating me he went away and came home with a disease. I stayed then as he begged of me and said again he would be a better man but all no good he took to drink then and after 2 years half hard drinking it has ended in him being a lunatic having been in a asylum for 3 years and the doctor says no hopes of him ever getting any better. Not only that when he was put in an asylum it came out that insanity ran in the family he having a sister that had been in an asylum for 14 years and I did not know it when I married him. The end of it now through ill-usage and hard work my health is breaking up. I am 31 and have not any means of getting a divorce as the money I have earned as had to keep the child and all so to clothe myself sometimes I feel like ending it all as there seems nothing to live for and if I was free how different it might be I might marry again and be comfortable other wise all I can see is the workhouse as I cannot earn enough to save; my wages have been 18*l.* a year board and lodge, it is only like dragging out an existence hoping and trusting they will bring in cheaper divorce so as to free me from this life of misery I am working now in my maiden name because when I went after any work in the name of Mrs. . . . they wanted to know if I was a widow when I said no they would say O he might get better in a month or so and then come out and then you would leave us but I never intend going back to him even if he did I could not have the life again hoping I am not intruding on your precious time and also hoping you could tell me what to do thanking you in anticipation.

The Hon. H. Gorell Barnes

DEAR SIR,

HAVING heard that you are secretary to the Commission now sitting for the purpose of amending the divorce laws, I take the liberty of submitting my case to you, from which the present law seems unable to offer any freedom other than separation, and which may be a point worthy the consideration of the Commission, to the great relief of probably many in a similar position to myself.

I married ten years ago and within a fortnight after my marriage I was somewhat shocked to find that my wife was an epeleptic subject, neither she nor her parents having acquainted me of this fact, although she had suffered eight years prior to her marriage. Since then however she has been steadily getting worse mentally, in spite of the many treatments she has been through at a great expense to myself, her father having absolutely refused to help in this matter.

The fits nearly always occur at night and weekly, and certain very unpleasant conditions take place as a result of them, she losing all control over her natural functions, which I have been obliged to attend to myself. Added to these conditions her temper and jealousy are intolerable, she having on several occasions assaulted me, without the least provocation.

The object of a marriage like this is entirely defeated as I could not possibly, under the circumstances, risk the birth of a child on account of the possibility of its being similarly afflicted, and also it was more than probable that a miscarriage would have taken place each time, owing to her complete loss of control.

Sexual connection was nearly always followed by the fits and one of the medical advisers I had for her informed me that this (sexual connection) should never really take place, as it affected her nervous system. You will thus see that she was physical incapable from the first, of conforming to the conditions of marriage, and for the past ten years has been a burden to me.

Her father is in a comfortable position and has a good home, and I feel that it is his duty to take the responsibility of his daughter, whom he so unfairly foisted on to me, and that I should by law, be again given my freedom, by the marriage being made null.

Yours faithfully.

DEAR SIR,

I WAS married in 1892 and soon after my wife had Influenza and went mad, shortly after she was Locked up as a wonding Lunatic and sent to . . . Asylum where she has been ever since, the doctor tells me she will never be right again. I am only A Labourer. I have no family and no Reliations and have been knock about in Lodgings all my life. Age 45 Good character and steady. I think it is Hard Lines to have to go to the end of my Days without being able to put my Feet on my own Fender.

I am, Sir,

Yours,

HONOURED SIR,

SEEING you are on the Divorce Commission, might I kindly ask if you would bring my case before the Commission.

My Wife is a Hopeless Lunatic in this Asylum having been there now over 23 years and I am so tired and weary of it, as I have to pay 5*s.* a week and my means is but 17*s.* a week, and my rent is 5*s.* a week, I should be very thankful if I could be free. I suppose I could not get her into any asylum in or near London where she would be free of charge to me or I could manage 2*s.* 6*d.* a week. If you could help me in any way should indeed be very thankful.

I remain,

Honoured Sir,

Yours faithfully,

DEAR SIRS,

HAVING read about the Royal Commission and I am a sufferer through my wife being afflicted with Insanity and have been so for 24 years which has caused me to live an Imoral Life which I have no wish to do Could the law think fit to grant the marrage Trusting this will find favour with you Gentlemen,

I am,

Yours respectfully,

Lord Gorell.

MY LORD,

SEEING you are taking evidence of the Divorce Law of Lunatics I beg leave to state my case which is one of very great hardship in bringing up a family. I am in a small way of farming, my wife has been in . . . Asylum for near six years and no hope for her recovery. I am left with 5 children oldest 12 years. It has cost me 40*l.* a year and wages to pay for someone to look after the children. I am nearly ruined and there is no redress at present so surely something can be done. Could you kindly let me know if such an act will pass and if it will be long in coming into force.

Otherwise I will have to take her home and suffer the consequences as I cannot pay any more without the children suffering and leaving my farm.

Your obedient servant,

P.S.—Hope I am not doing what is not right but it will soon take me the same road, and leave the children without a home.

TO LORD GORELL,

As you are taking evidence on the Royal Divorce Commission I take the liberty in writing you. am a working man 37 years 2 children 8 and 12 respectively. My wife has been confined in a lunatic asylum for over 7 years a hopeless case. My children I have had to put away in a home, I am fond of children but never have been able to give them my own home comforts. I should welcome a new law, were I might be released from my burden and allowed to marry again.

I might add in my small sphere I know four men with wives in Asylums varying from 7 to 15 years confinement who earnestly hope through your endeavours on the Divorce Commission we might be able to start life afresh.

I am, dear Sir,

Your obedient servant,

DEAR SIR,

I HOPE you will excuse me I dont know if I am doing wrong or no by writing to you but I have been impressed so much to do so.

I am very much interested in reading the Daily News on the subject of the Divorce Commission and I like to hear the opinion of other on the subject what makes me interested in the subject I am placed under one of the conditions mentioned in the debate namely insanity my life since 8 years old as been a up hill one left on my own since that age both parents being dead. When I came to the age of 22 I married one what I loved but unknown to me she began to have epileptic fits a few months before I was married I only found it out fortnight after I married when she had the first one at home I took her to the best doctor in the town but he told me he could not cure her he said there was only one hope and that was by having a family as that might clear her of them and told me not to fear as the offspring would not take fits on account of her as hers had come through a fright we had a family of 6 daughters and two sons. When the youngest was about 1 year and 6 months old we had to take her away to the Lunatic Ward in the . . . Workhouse and when she had been there about 5 month she gave birth to a little girl making 9 children the child was kept in the house and I must say was well cared for and loved by the nurses but happy for my sake it died when about three months old which gave me a great relief. 6 months after that she was sent to . . . County Asylum that was in 1902 and as been there ever since and they tell me there is no hope of her ever coming out again.

You see I was left to struggle with 8 children and bring them up, and I am only a working man and many a time when I have been pressed for money I have been tempted to do away with myself and would have done but for the children's sake. I have now three married and have five at home all dependent on me and it take and I find it hard worke to make ends meet. I have a little . . . business but its a hard work to keep up. My wife as been away for 11 years and with her being there I feel myself tie up and cannot make headway if I had been free I could have made life happier as I have had some very good offers and could have done well but I am married and the law says I cannot move while she lives so I shall have to struggle on and when all hope for betterment on my part comes it will be too late when you see opportunities keep passing you by it make your life so miserrable that tongue cannot tell. I am now 53 years old but feel young. I think a case like mine one ought to be freed and at a very small cost I should like a word as to what you think.

I am,
Yours truly,

P.S.—Excuse and forgive me if I have dont wrong in writing but when you hear from one who has suffered much you can rely on it better as no one who has not gone through can tell the feeling of one that is so tied. I could write a lot on this subject but it would perhaps weary you.

My Lord,

I hope your Secy. will pass this letter for you to read. The cause is that separations lead to guilty misconduct myself being the sufferer of what I have seen the company my wife keeps. I have tried for a perfect reconciliation but failed. I am a working man a mechanic but not working at my trade through depression of trade been married 22 years this is a most painful position to be in. It is against my advancement and against society. Separations should be abolished.

To Lord Gorell. Yours sincerely,

Memorandum from . . .

To the Hon. Henry Gorell Barnes,

Dear Sir,

Re Divorce law reform.

It is with very great relief that I notice this matter is having attention and I hope and trust that before long it may become law, my own case is as follows.

I was married at the age of about 23 years full of hope and life, with the hope of becoming an honorable man and citizen, unfortunately my wife took to drink with the usual result, eight homes I made her in 5 years, but none would satisfy her, the end of it was a legal separation, which has now been on for nearly 10 years. Oh the misery no one can tell but those unfortunate people that are tied for life to a woman that lives apart from her husband, it is even worse in a small country town like this, where everyone knows, you are shut out from any society, you dare not form the companionship of an honerable woman, you can have no society of the opposite sexes, I have to live my life lonely and sad simply because I made a mistake in early life, before I had experience of the world.

May I prey of you to consider those people that are living apart for long periods by legal separations and give them relief from this long and lasting agony. I am but a small . . . trying to do my best and live an honorable and upright life, but at times it is hard.

Thanking you in anticipation and wishing you every success.

I am, dear Sir,
Yours faithfully,

The Hon. Henry Gorell Barnes.

Sir,

As the Commission to consider the divorce laws will presumably, invite evidence bearing upon various phases of the question, I respectfully submit my own case in illustration of a very common hardship, and in the hope that such cases may come within the scope of the Commission's enquiry.

Twelve years ago I separated from my wife owing to acute domestic differences promoted by neglect of the home and children, one of whom died through lack of proper attention. A deed of separation was drawn up by our respective solicitors at a cost of twelve pounds to myself. I made an allowance of one pound a week, and agreed reluctantly to give my wife the custody of two of the children—girls.

Some time afterwards these children (and the mother) are found in such a condition—dirty and verminous—that the S.P.C.C. took the matter up and the mother was only saved from prosecution by a doctor's certificate to the effect that she was mentally incapable of the custody of the girls, since when I have had charge of them. I now allow my wife ten shillings a week — a big drain upon my resources, especially as I had to defend in court, at considerable expense, an application entirely vexatious and that failed ignominiously. I cannot charge adultery against my wife, but we are as irrevocably parted as any divorced couple, and I respectfully suggest that such a case should come under the same category as those adjudicated upon in the proposed provincial courts. That is to say, if the Commission recommends the substitution of divorce for judicial separation, mutual separations (arising from such experiences as mine) proved not to be of a temporary character, should, after a specifically defined period, be declared just cause for a decree nisi. If I could marry again I would willingly continue the alimony until such time as my wife also married, and such a condition of divorce should be made in all cases when there are no visible means of support.

My course of action twelve years ago was entirely approved by my committee (I am . . .) in whose service I have been since a boy.

I am Sir,
Your obedient and humble servant,

Dear Sir,

In reading the daily paper I saw a accounnt where his majesty the King has commissioned several ladies and gentlemen to see what can be done for poor women concerning divorce and I thought it would be a good thing for me as I had had 16 years of trouble and misery through a bad husband and I could tell you a very sad tale of all the troubles and trials I have had to go through he was ordered by the magistrates to pay me weekly money through a separation order I had through cruelty he is a joiner by trade and can earn good wages but he will leave one job after another so as to defie the law and not give me my money I have had no money from him for 10 years for when I find him he will leave his work and go into the workhouse and then appear before the magistrate in workhouse clothes I do wish I could see one of your ladies if they would be so kind as to make an appointment with me I am sure I could tell them something that might help them or give them some idea how to get at other cases for I have gone through such a lot and I am sure I am situated much worse than a widow for I am never entitled to any of the Benefits widows receive and I am 67 years and of course not able to do much so dear Sir if you will please kindly consider my case I shall be very grateful to you and you will find me very deserving.

Thanking you in anticipation.

I am,
Yours respectfully,

P.S.—I should have stated under a Magistrate's order I obtained the separation.

Dear Sir,

I am now taking the great liberty of placing my full case before you has I saw in the Star of your meeting on the 4th inst. I think myself there is room for a great alteration in marriage laws and separations

I write to say I had a separation from my second wife . . . the . . . 1897 and through no fault of my own my paper is clear to show. On her side it was through neglect of my four children of the first marriage and dirty habits and bad management I do not intend to ever make it up but at the same time has the law is now you cant marry again its like two lives blighted my family are grown up now but they cannot act as a good wife could do if he could marry again.

I am,
Yours obediently,

Lord Gorell.

DEAR SIR,

WILL you pardon the liberty I am taking in writing to you. For a long time I have anxiously awaited the result of your endeavour to get justice for poor people. This is my story twelve years ago I was granted a separation by the . . . Justices from my husband with 1*l.* a week, which he only paid under compulsion until three years ago when he disappeared.

His people could but will not tell me and I am too poor to trace him. He treated me cruelly and I still suffer as the result. For years he has lived with another woman and there are children by her, I believe, as the law stands, there is no remedy for me.

Had I known at the time what a painful position it is for a woman to be separated I would have got a divorce instead. I am honest enough to tell people the truth when seeking a situation they seem afraid of a woman so placed. May I beg of you not to cease your efforts to get justice for us, for I am sure there are hundreds of poor wives in the same position as myself. Can I compel his people to tell me his address? It seems such hard lines that he should spoil my life and go free. I am not strong and have a struggle to live, as things are I cannot marry again. I have read your speeches on the subject, you are absolutely right.

Yours obediently,

MY LORD,

HAVING read in the Daily Mail this morning . . . opinion on separation without the right to marry again may I be allowed to uphold his opinion from experience. My case is this. After an engagement of many years I married in 1899. A few months later I discovered my husband married me for what he thought I possessed, after a wretched life with him for 2 years my position became unbearable. In 1904 I obtained from . . . a judicial separation. Mr. . . . being my counsel. Sir. . . . recommended alimony. This part of my case came before Mr. Registrar . . . who decided I was not entitled to alimony. My husband brought a false charge of insobriety against me in defence, and did his best to degrade me in every way. The best part of my life has been wasted upon him, my only recompense being that I am not compelled to live with him. In 1904 while staying at a boarding house, a gentleman paid me some attention and after a time pointedly asked me—are you a widow? I was surprised at the question, and fearing the manner in which I might be regarded by the other guests in the house, were my real position known, answered on impulse—Yes. This was a wrong course to take but I regarded the acquaintance as a casual one and of no importance. The acquaintance lead to a proposal of marriage, when I had to disclose my true position. If I could have obtained a divorce at this time, (3 years after I had separated from my husband) I should now be a happily married woman, and probably a mother. I am childless. I believe my case to be a common one. A healthy, and moderately attractive woman, living apart from her husband, not infrequently meets a male acquaintance whose friendship develops beyond the platonic stage, they are the best of friends but marriage is impossible. What is frequently the result of such an acquaintance? Why should a woman living a perfectly moral life, never having spoken to, or had any communication whatever with her husband, say for 7 years, be debarred from an honourable marriage with another man? Is the temptation to live under the protection of the man that loves her a great one? How many women are there to-day for whom this temptation is too great? The present form of separation to the moral man and woman is a cruel one, but it offers every excuse, and every inducement to the immoral.

Since 1901, I, for one, have lived a life of loneliness, the law forbidding me to accept the great happiness that could be mine, were I in a position to obtain a divorce.

I have the honour to remain,
Your Lordship's most humble and obedient servant,

Your Lordship
Lord Gorell.

YOUR LORDSHIP,

As Chairman presiding over the Commission dealing with separations etc, I as a man thats has been by the law separated from my wife, I should like to give you something tangible to place before your colleagues on the commission. It is as follows about the . . . in the year 1900 my wife summoned me to appear before the magistrates at . . . in Lancashire as a deserter from her and family the result being I was ordered to pay 4*s.* per week. Well, Sir, for the first 3, 4, 5 years or so, I stayed in my own town and got quite careless. Afterwards I came here to . . . after travelling to London etc. full of remorse however I am at present in employment at . . . I might just inform you I am only an ordinary working man. My wife I admit was and is much better than I am or perhaps ever was. We have 8 children all in . . . and now and then I run over to see them as I cannot help it and I say good luck to them, only I have missed home I am in lodgings and there is no place like home.

Yours respectfully,

To Lady Frances Balfour.

MY LADY,

MAY I write and tell you what caused my sad life, the real cause was never allowed to become known. I was granted a judicial separation in 1893 and the children were given to me. My husband was not made to maintain me because I could teach and earn a salary, which he was allowed to call my independent income. When I broke down in 1907 he was only made to give me 5*s.* per week, because I had a breakdown allowance of 13*s.* 4*d.* per week.

Thus my husband was helped by the Separation, because it set him free to live as he pleased; and this freedom was all that he wanted; he had been trying by systematical cruelty for eight years to obtain it. He was not even made to give me the 5*s.* per week until the following . . . after my breakdown.

I am,
Yours very respectfully,

TO LORD GORELL,

MAY I venture to state to your lordship the bare facts of a case which seem to suggest a direction in which the divorce laws might be improved. A young lady, separated from her husband by mutual agreement, lost sight of him ten years ago, when he ceased payments to her. She went as housekeeper to a gentleman, in order to maintain herself, and an attachment arose between them. About a year ago the husband turned up, and having grounds for divorce, brought a suit. The lady did not defend—in fact, having been deserted so long, desired to be free. Decree nisi was granted but before it could be made absolute, the King's Proctor intervened on the ground of the husband's adultery. The husband did not defend and the decree was rescinded.

The position is therefore this, that these two people, separated for ten years, without the possibility of their ever being able to come together again, are bound together for life, whereas the lady, if she were set free, might be legally, respectably and honourably married. In other words it amounts to this as the law stands, that the less reputable the husband, the tighter the wife is bound to him, for had he been unblameable himself the decree would have been made absolute. In the circumstances it was not surprising that the lady comitted herself. The law insists that she shall now do what it has no right to ask of human nature, or to continue to live in adultery, which she is anxious not to do. Anything more conduce to immorality than the law as it exists is hardly conceivable.

I am,
Yours respfly,

Memorandum from . . .

To the President of the Royal Commission on Divorce.

SIR,

I HAVE a worker whose evidence would be worth listening to, she had to leave her husband on a/c of his misconduct, was too poor to get a divorce, got a separation order and maintenance order against him he left the country and she has to try and maintain her two children, she has had an offer of marriage but of course cannot accept it, but it has just come to my knowledge that she is thinking of going to live with the man who offered her marriage, I have however persuaded her not to do so for the present, but there can only be one end to it for the sake of her children; if you care to hear her evidence I will make arrangements for her to come before you as in Lancashire we dont care for opinions we like facts.

Yours truly,

MY LORD,

I HAVE now been seperated from my wife 10 years and although there are children I do not think it would be advantageous to live together for many reasons. I may say, she has means and is independent of me.

I do not wish to get married again but the hardship is very terrible, being practically neither married nor single and either debarred from society or compelled to be a Fraud and Liar.

Although no order was afterwards applied for before the magistrate to complete the proceedings, the persecutions I endured I cannot forget.

Would your Lordship's commission wish me to be punished in this cruel way a lifetime, or may it not be more merciful to divorce a Man and Wife who have ceased to live together such a period.

I am, my Lord,
Yours respectfully,

GENTLEMEN,

HAVING read of late so much about divorce I thought I would take the liberty to relate my case to you which is true. Having married about 9 years ago my wife and I lived together for about 5 years but she went into bad ways and we parted and I have never returned. But I was not happy without a partner so I made the aqquance of a young woman she is now twenty-three and I thirty-two she has now three children by me One two years and three months Second one year and two months third three months. My wife has a separation from me with charge of one boy the only one who is now six years old and seven shillings and sixpence per week. My wife is always in good work and the boy gets his dinners from the school he goes to now I am earning on an average of eighteen shillings per week. She has now agreed to take 5*s*. per week, out of 18*s*. per week.

Wife -	- 5*s*.	per week.
Rent -	- 4*s*. 6*d*.	do. do.
Insurance	- 4*d*.	do. do.
Gas -	- 6*d*.	do. do.
Coals -	- 1*s*.	In winter.
	11*s*. 4*d*.

which leaves me 6*s*. 8*d*. to keep a woman and three children on. Now gentlemen if work is quiet with me and I have to stand off for a week or two and I can't send my wife any money she gets a warrant for my arrest and if I cant pay back arrears I have to go to prison for one month and perhaps more while the woman who is one of the best in the world to me has to starve with her three children and when I come out I have no work. Prison I would not mind only while I was there this poor girl should not be allowed to starve with her three children.

I remain,
Yours obediently.

To Lord Sir Gorrel Barnes.

MY LORD,

MAY I as a working man humbly lay my case before you, which to my mind is one of the worst that it is possible to imagin, I have read with interest the evidence given before your Lordship from day to day as I have good reason for so doing, as it means much to me, my Lord I will now give you the details of my own case, on the . . . 1906 my wife disappeared from her home and all trace of her whereabouts failed, leaving me with 4 children the youngest 6 weeks old, my children I have kept round me since, time went on, and after the lapse of nearly 4 years I accidentally discovered her, to find she was living with another man by whom she had given birth to a child which is now 2 years of age, and to my surprise I found that she had registered the child in my full name, which I have the certificate to prove, well I demanded that she should have it altered, and she made a declaration in the presence of Mr. . . . J.P. to the efect that I was not the father, some time after that, I was persuaded for the sake of my own children to forgive her, at last I did on the conditions that she kept away from the man that had wrecked my home, and she said she would, and do her duty as a wife and mother should, now as a matter of fact she had only been back a week before she visited the man who had broken my home up again, as I will explain I am employed on night work, and as soon as my back was turned she went after this man, then I lost my temper I assaulted her and made an application for a separation, which on the evidence I produced was granted me with the custody of my children and the wife is at present living with the man that has caused all the trouble and misery, this I think my Lord, is a case where divorce is out of my reach as the law stands have now but if it had been linked to a woman of her description for long.

Hoping, my Lord, you will pardon me writing to you,

I am,
Yours obediently,

Memo. from re Enquiry Divorce Law, &c.

DEAR SIR,

WILL you try and get this story before the Commission?

Twenty-two years ago I married a woman, who without any apparent cause whatever started drinking and she developed into a disgraceful creature. After having three children, two of which died, I decided that it was wicked and against all ideas of decency to cohabit with her principally for the sake of the offspring, and next to preserve my own sense of decency.

The Hell on Earth soon began, and after submitting to lead the most unnatural life a human being can lead, I came away from her after 14 years' steady efforts to cure her. To-day I am leading a life which is very unsatisfactory, as I have a home where my son and I reside with a lady as housekeeper. Mrs. Grundy has been hard at it for years and there is more misery and annoyance caused through this person than many people imagine. In a provincial town Mrs. Grundy has the power to create quite a lot of misery especially to poor devils in my position.

I never go anywhere except that I am alone, and people don't want me because the false position I am placed in, having a wife alive although she has forfeited all claims to me by her conduct.

If I followed the promptings of nature too much, I should probably bring misery to others, I mean by having several illegitimate children, but I have to set my teeth and suffer. Why?

Because few of the Church dignitaries have tasted such a life, this seems the chief reason. My case can be easily enquired into if you think I am not serious.

Yours faithfully,

To the Hon. Henry Gorell Barnes.

MY LORD,

HAVING seen in the Daily Mail last October a Royal Commission had been appointed to enquire into the present state of the Divorce law I am writing to your Lordship to ask if anything has been done to improve that Law. At present I consider it is most unjust especially to the working man. I have a drunken wife from whom I have been separated five years ago. We had been married about three months when she began drinking, I did all that laid in my power to induce her to give it up. There was one child of our marriage and I hoped after that was born she would be better, but as soon as she could get out with the child, she was continually in the public-house with it. She ran me into debt and through her drunken habits I was compelled to give up my business, which has utterly ruined me through having to pay debts incurred by my wife. I endured five years of misery and could no longer bear her drunkenness so I was obliged to get a Deed of Separation Order. Now I have to earn my living the best way I can to support a woman who has blighted my life and prospects, having lost all I had worked hard for to go into business. I know all, I pay to her goes for drink, she is constantly seen in public houses with the child which I think is most disgraceful. I trust there will soon be an alteration in the Divorce Law, as there are many others situated the same as myself, hoping something will be done for their benefit apologizing for the liberty I have taken in making this appeal to your Lordship.

I beg to remain,
Your obedient servant,

My Lord,

Please pardon me for this liberty of writing to you through my unfortunate circumstances. I read with interest the different views of the Commission on separation &c. on which you are now presiding. My position is as follows. Married 17 years at least 12 years of which my wife has been habitually drinking, pawning everything portable even to her own and my underwear to satisfy her craving for drink. Nearly 2 years ago, after an attack of Delirium Tremens she was taken to the Infirmary remaining there about a month, was transferred to an Asylum, she remained there for 12 months, on being discharged came home again, she soon began her drinking habits again and after a few months had the doctor to attend her, he treated her for some weeks and then advised me the Infirmary was the best place she was taken there and again sent from that place to the Asylum where she now remains.

The details of my own case would take too long to state. What can I do in this rotten position? with a very limited income.

Again apologizing for so troubling you,
Believe me my Lord,
Your obediently.

P.S.—Three members of my wife's family have died through the effects of alcohol.

Sir,

As I am very much interested in the divorce problem I am taking the liberty of writing to you on the subject. I do hope that you gentlemen will, see your way clear to get a divorce not for misconduct (only) but for drunkenness and cruelty especially for the working class to be able to sue in the county courts at a fee within the reach of the pockets of the deserving. I am a young married woman who has had to leave her husband after ten years of married life six years of happiness and the remaining four very miserable owning to drink and bad company I worked very hard for four years to try and reform him but he got worse and worse finally I was compelled to leave him as he would not work to maintain me and my only child so I got a sepration from him in . . . police court three years come . . . with a maintenance order against him for five shillings a week for the child only I did not ask for anything for myself as I told the magistrate I had worked to keep him now I would work to keep myself but I cannot get any money from him the . . . magistrates have sent him to prison several times but he does not mind it in the least. I am in a situation at the above address at a wage of 18*l.* a year but I find it a hard struggle to feed and clothe my boy who is 9 years old and to clothe myself and be respectable. I try to make my miserable life happy as far as I can but I find it very hard to live under such sad and trying circumstances.

I sincerely hope under the new act I shall be freed from such a burden my life is blighted not mine only but thousands under the same conditions you may make what use you like of this letter but please do not disclose my name to the public.

I beg to remain,
Gentlemen,
Yours respectfully,

The Secretary,
Royal Divorce Commission.

Sir,

I hope you will pardon my writing and taking up your valuable time, but the subject matter is to my mind very important. The facts are as follows.

In 1896 there was a marriage and more or less since then to 1903 the husband was a drunkard and at the latter date he was locked up and Bail refused on a charge of Rape. He got off and more or less since then to 1908 he was constantly committing adultery but his wife had no direct proof. However in 1908 she found him staying at an hotel with a woman who has given birth to a child and the language the man used to his wife was too awful and horrible. As a result there was a separation order drawn up on . . . 1909 between solicitor and solicitor and of course agreed upon by the concerned parties to the effect that the husband had not to molest his wife, that he had to allow her 2*l.* 10*s.* per week as maintenance and since last . . . he has made no effort towards paying the maintenance. He is living in adultery with the same woman and drinking together and the only way of proceeding to recover the maintenance is through a civil court. The wife wanted a divorce as he was most cruel to her, but the solicitors thought the separation would be better and there it is. I am trustee to the woman and children for an amount invested for their joint behalf and the wife is now told that no divorce would be granted because of the separation order. I do not know whether to expect a reply or not, but I merely draw your attention to the fact that here is a most dreadful hardship on the wife. I hope you will pardon me but the matter is so cruel that I could not help bringing it under your notice.

Yours faithfully,

Sirs,

I wish to let you know the position I am in as regards my marriage. I would have written earlier had I known you would accept letters, from the outside public. My position is this. I was married in 1897 and after a few years my wife commenced to drink heavily which caused greal trouble. In 1902 my wife left me in . . . taking our only child a boy of three years of age with her. Having some property in . . . she went there and sold it for l. After 12 months had gone by my mother chanced to hear that the boy was not looked after properly and was neglected on account of his mother's drinking bouts. My mother went to see her and she said she felt greatly relieved for me to have the boy, and since then we have heard nothing of her or where she went to. And it is almost certain women who drink to get drunk are not particular about their morals. I came to seek work in . . . where I have been engaged this last 7 years and have brought my boy up respectably. Now Sirs I have become acquainted with a good little woman who both care for each other and who will make me a good and true wife and home for me and my boy. If I could be released by law from an alliance which I believe would be allowed under the circumstances. In any other country than England I feel sure if divorce was cheaper and reasonable for men in my position then men would be able to marry women whom at the present time are willing to live with them as their unlawful wife. So Sirs I hope and trust to see you advise an alteration that will enable working men by cheaper divorce be able to live their lives happily and morally.

Yours respectfully,

To My Lord Gorrell,

My Lord,

Forgive my trespassing on your valuable time but learning through the press your kind interest in the Royal Commission on the Divorce Laws, I venture to state my case. I am a working man and have been in the one employ for thirty years I am now 47 years of age I married when 20, shortly afterwards my wife developed a grate taste for drink and gradually got worse I need not go into the misery which I suffered, sufficient is she became an habitual drunkard and was taken away three years ago, she is still in the Asylum the Medical Superintendent tells me she is an hopeless case. Now my position is this, I have meet someon whom I care for very much and they me. We both come of decent family and we cannot be together because the law of England forbids, so what are we to do it is spoiling her life and mine and I have no domestic comfort whatever so you may imagine with what interest we are awaiting the issue of the Commission. Agin My Lord apolergising for presuming on your most valuable time and also wishing you and your colleagues every success in your good work.

I beg to remain my Lord,
Your obedient servant,

P.S.—Should be pleased to furnish you with all details in confidence.

To the President of
The Royal Commission on Divorce.

DEAR SIR,

I DO not know if I am breaking rules in addressing you, discourtesy is the last of my thoughts, but I feel I must write and speak of the misery that the poor are forced to bear through the cursed marriage laws of England. In my own case, I married a woman who proved a drunkard, and after a short time I was forced to leave her and my home for my life had become unbearable, since then my wife has had delirium tremens and been confined in the County Lunatic Asylum for nine months. She is now discharged and from all I hear is still drinking and worse I believe, and the law says that I am legally married. I could never make a home with her again. What a mockery of the word "wedded" marriage, I take it, should be founded on happiness and goodness, on affection and respect. Oh if your Commission only understood what a bitter thing it is to be forcibly tied and compelled to own one who has ceased to be a wife, and drained each week of a large portion of my earnings to cotribute to the support of a wife who has forfeited all love and regard. And I am not alone in my unfortunate position, I meet many women and men who from a variety of causes, are compelled to live a single life although married, and they would hail with delight and bless the day that means were provided to give them freedom.

May your Commission be the lever to pass some good law on this important question and apologising for writing to you.

I remain,
Yours faithfully,

MY LORD,

I BEG respectfully to be permitted to endorse what has been so plainly addressed to the Evening Standard as per cutting enclosed which I ask for your kind perusal, and, pray that you will do the writer the privilege of your consideration when analysing the pros and cons of the present enquiry over which you have the honour to preside.

I also beg to take the liberty of briefly stating my personal experience, was married at 21 against parents desire, wife commenced sly drinking, home and children neglected, wedding ring and other articles pawned to satisfy the hungry craving, two children died due to inattention and want of common sense, was anxious to avoid exposure or would have acted on doctor's suggestion, eventually was compelled to publicly stop all credit, and. to avoid injury to my children was absolutely compelled to supply her with gin, and things went from bad to worse, which resulted in her going away to subsequently return. Later she again left owing to my taking severe measures and my father took my 2 babes 2 years and 5 years respectively and had my goods warehoused. Some 8 years later I was implored to take her back believing she had gained commonsense and given up drink, and, to my deep regret I acceded, and myself and 2 children suffered, as no tongue can tell, with further exposure and unmitigated lies, whilst holding a public position in a country village. After 8 months she again left and I am still married and not married. I declined in both instances to allow her maintenance (and in consequence had to seek protection) until she took a summons, my object, to enable me to state my case to a magistrate, and, although I had a medical gentleman, solicitor and others the presiding magistrate declined to hear their evidence, but, simply enquired "are you prepared to take your wife back" resulting in my being compelled by law to support a worthless woman for the past 15 years. I venture to say Sir that reconciliations prove a life of torture, early marriages should be prohibited, bastardy cases subject to imprisonment on both sides, and last but not least, that separation orders after 5 years should be sufficient to have the effect of a decree being absolute for the dissolution of a marriage and that no maintenance be allowed provided the woman is able to work.

I fear Sir my case is only one of many thousands and pray for your kind indulgence.

Apologising for the liberty taken,
I remain, my Lord,
Your obedient servant,

Lord Gorell Barnes,
Chairman Divorce Laws.

To
the Chairman.

SIR,

In writing to you and stating may case it is to show how hard the present divorce laws are regarding the working classes.

I was married in 1896 and soon after my first child was born in 1897 my wife went on the drink, she gradually went from bad to worse, got locked up two or three times and after selling up my home, eloped with a man named . . . and went off to Canada leaving me with three little children.

Now I have been in my present situation 16 years but owing to the expense of providing for my children it is impossible for me to save sufficient money to get a divorce, and am compelled to lead a lonely life, through no fault of my own.

Trusting you will be able to recommend some means to give us working classes a chance, as well as the rich

I remain, Sir,
Your obedient servant,

Memorandum from . . .

To the Hon. Gorell Barnes,
Sec. of the Royal Commission on Divorce,

SIR,

IN stating the facts of my case again before that should you require me as a witness to give evidence I should be pleased to do so. The true facts of my case are, that, almost, seven years ago, I was compelled, to leave my wife, owing to her terrible drunken habits, neglect and cruelty to the children and myself, I might here state that through those habits I lost two dear children. However I was summoned for desertion, and a separation Order granted. I to have the custody of the children allowing her the smallest grant, I understood they could make viz. 2*s*. 6*d*. per week. I might also tell you Sir that Dr. . . . of this town handed a letter to the Justices, describing the shocking condition he used to find her when called to see the children when very ill. I have strove hard for my two dear boys in humble lodgings and I believe it is only those who are placed like myself, know the need of a reform in our laws. I do pray Sir that your Commission will recommend in cases like mine, that after three years or five there should be absolute Divorce which I am sure would bestow a Gods blessing on vast numbers. although Sir I have been informed by the Police of my wife doings with men it is almost impossible to prove adultery for fear of losing the maintenance money, and being so shrewd make it very difficult to obtain witnesses. My age Sir is forty two years and my sons 16 and 13 respectfully I do trust Sir that this statement will bear good fruit and so enable those who are placed like myself to have another beginning in life and to look forward to having home comforts for the children for I am sorry to say it is a hard life is mine, and Boys.

I am Sir,
Yours obediently.

Re the Royal Commission on Divorce.
The Secretary.

DEAR SIR,

I HAVE followed the sittings and evidence of the above with great interest as I am one who will be affected by their decision. Mine is a typical case of several I know personally. A few years after being married, when I had 4 children I found my wife was giving way to drink to such an extent that I was compelled to obtain a separation. After about 9 months I allowed her to return on her promise both verbally and by letter that she had given it up and would never touch drink again. I am sorry to say that in less than two weeks she was drunk again. This went on so bad that she was locked up several times. Her language to the children was simply disgusting, she would pawn anything for drink and from first to last cost me hundreds of pounds. I at last went to the court and got a legal separation from her on the grounds of an habitual drunkard; allowing her 15*s*. per week. I have not seen her now for nine years, she being in another town.

My children are getting older and two of them will shortly be leaving. According to the present law I must either live a celibate life or live with a drunken wife, the latter I will never do. If the law cannot help me then I shall be compelled to make my own law. You may use this but omit the name for the children's sake.

Yours faithfully,

It is all very well for the persons and those people who says "try and persuade them to give up the drink" only those who wear the boots know where and how they pinch. I hope and trust the Commission will give relief to persons in my position as well as for unfaithfulness. I have only given you the fringe of what a man (and his children) has to go through with a drunken wife.

To the Royal Commission on the Divorce Laws.

GENTLEMEN,

I HAVE read with great interest the evidence given on the divorce laws. I hope I am not intruding but beg to state my case as follows.

I am a married man with 6 children, soon after marriage on returning from work each day, I found my wife more or less intoxicated. The excuse being each time bad bilious attacks. On several occasions I called in a medical man, and after a time he informed me it was only drunkenness, my suspicions were then confirmed. That was my first insight of 14 years of misery to follow. I have given my wife a comfortable allowance each week (including all holidays) for housekeeping, but found it all went in drink, even the children's clothes, her own, and mine, she pawned for drink, even the bed clothes, left nothing but the mattress for all to lie on in all conditions of weather. The children were kept dirty and neglected and have often had to stay at home because their boots were in pawn, the excuse to the school teacher—the children are not well. I also know people that could prove that my wife has committed misconduct, but are afraid of causing trouble in their own families. I did not want my wife to be a total abstainer and allowed her 4 quarts of ale or stout per week, but this was not sufficient. I have found as many as 30 40 and 50 pawn tickets at a time for various articles of mine pledged by my wife or associate.

She would when under the influence of drink openly insult me in the street. I have tried hundreds of times to get her to alter or improve her ways, the retort always being a lot of filthy language and—you have married me I shall do what I like and the law cannot prevent me. The life she led me so injured my health that I had to have medical attendance. It has taken all my savings 200*l*. in 8 years to pay debts and redeem pledges.

Since the children's act was passed, and with the assistance of Inspector . . . P.S.C.C. of . . . and solicitors, I obtained a separation and allow my wife 10*s*. per week, and from what I can learn she is still as bad as ever. Mr. . . . has a full list taken from a diary I have kept. I may mention that most Reverend Gentlemen only see the woman (of this kind) in her best, usually pleading poverty and charity to hide their shame. Pen cannot describe my sufferings, and my means will not allow me to divorce her. I earnestly trust something will be done to enable the working man to rid himself of a burden so intolerable and loathsome as a drunken wife.

I hope I am not encroaching too much on your valuable time, you are at liberty to publish this letter if you so desire.

I remain, dear Sirs,

YOUR LORDSHIP,

I AM taking the liberty of writing you to ask you if you could let me know if I am a free woman, as I am leaving for South Africa next Saturday . . . and should like to know before I go.

On . . . 1893 I had to get a separation from my husband on the grounds of persistent cruelty, since then I have not seen him, or has he sent me one penny to help to keep his two little girls. I have had nothing but what I have earned myself and for the last six months I have had a nervous breakdown, and been unable to work, and I think if I get to South Africa where I have friends I may be better.

If I meet someone who would act as a father to my children can I get married?

I am sorry to trouble you, but I cannot afford to go to a solicitor.

Thanking you in anticipation,
Yours obediently,

To the Right Hon. Lord Gorell.

MY LORD,

I PRAY your Lordship will bear with your humble servant in regard to cheaper divorce facilities for the poorer classes.

In the matter of my own case, my lawful wife is suffering (sad to say) from that dreadful and deadly disease known to medical men Syphlus, and that in an advanced stage, that her visage is depleted of one of its organs. Now when the doctor that attended my wife knew her condition, he sent for me and warned me not to have further sexual intercourse with my wife, so after some delay I managed to get the guardians to grant her an order for the infirmary for 3 months, during which time my wife was greatly relieved but not cured, so that I was still in danger of catching the disease if I lived with my wife, so I parted from her 2½ years ago, but I had not the funds to pay expence, and was also afraid that publicity would prejudice my career so I took to myself a natural wife because I could not live with my lawful wife, I may be to blame for doing this but to my mind it was better than ruining young girls or forging links in the chains of prostitutes.

I have the honour, My Lord, to remain,
Your humble servant,

To Lord Gorrel Barnes.

MOST RESPECTED SIR,

PLEASE allow me to thank you for the position you have taken up with regard to Poor Mans Divorce, and to shew you how hard the present Law is.

For Sixteen years I have been married and my wife had two children (Boys).

Towards the latter part of the time she became fascinated with a younger man, with the result adultery and the breaking up of my Childrens Home. They like me have suffered but the man has not though he knew her to be married. To-day and for the last 3 years since I have been striving to obtain money to take action under Forma Pauperis, but fate seems to treat me hard as I have to work hard and can only find enough to nearly pay my way without incurring this further expense.

The stamp duties are too much for me more less the luxury of a Solicitor and Council, and the consequence is I am as far away as ever.

The Laws of Nature I am denied and also am debarred from asking any respectable womans hand in marriage. People know I am seeking Divorce and through this present day Law I must keep on suffering and through no fault of my own. My children are doing likewise and so the punishment still goes on.

An Englishmans Home is supposed to be his Castle, yet he cannot prevent his chief asset from being stolen.

Yet were a man to enter a shop and steal the most commonest article therein he could get 6 months. My opinion Sir is that a man who knows a woman to be married should, did they commit adultery, be treated the same as any common thief, and the injured one be freed by a stipendary or bench of magistrates. Hoping you will persevere with your good work

I am, Sir,

Yours affectionately,

Please do not consider this private.

HON. SIR,

I WAS married at the age of 18 and for a few years lived fairly happy with my husband (and two children). Never a teetotaler he took to drinking more than was good for him, got into the society of violent men and bad women, and thro his orgies my life and that of my children was perpetually endangered by the throwing of lighted lamps and knives and whatever came to hand, often myself and children had to seek a shelter in the middle of the night from his violence. Eventually I went to a solicitor who wrote him a letter of warning, which he answered, with a promise of better behaviour for the future. After a short time he broke out worse than ever, and I was forced to do what I always dreaded, take out a public summons, result a separation with maintenance which he payed for about five weeks.

My son and daughter are both married and I am still working and keeping myself altho my health is indifferent. Had I been free the chance of a happy home was assured, but through lack of means I have been unable to procure a divorce.

I remain,

Your Lordship to command,

The Hon. H. Gorell Barnes.

TO LADY FRANCES BALFOUR,

I HOPE they will alter the law as regards divorces so as a person of limited means will be able to get a divorce. My case is this I was married in 1879 and there are five children of the marriage and no man ever loved a wife and children more than I did mine business called me away from home for a few weeks in 1887 and when I come home my wife I found was living with another man sanctioned by her own father and mother and as had a family by him and still lives with him in open adultry (if you like I would come to London to see you when the Commission are sitting) she forbid my children to speak to me and she has not spoken to me since and my eldest daughter I do not know I have heard she is married and lives in . . . you are at liberty to publish this letter if you like.

Yours respectfully,

P.S.—I hope your Ladyship will not mind my writing to you as I think mine is a very hard case being tied to a woman like that.

SIR,

SEEING by the papers that a royal commission has been formed to enable the poorer classes of obtaining a divorce, I wish to state my case briefly.

I am a married woman, and at the present time am getting my living as a tailoress and wish to obtain a divorce from my husband whom I married in 1896 and left in 1907 through intimacy with other women there is one child of the marriage.

I shall esteem it a great favour if you would let me know how I could obtain the divorce as I have no means of doing so through the high courts.

DEAR SIR,

I BEG to lay before you my case.

My age is 23, I was married 16. In two months my husband treated me in a most brutal manner without any provocation. I lived with him five years and one little daughter was born.

Owing to the constant ill-treatment, I got a separation order and costs granted . . . a year ago, but which I had to pay, as my husband pleaded poverty, although his father has an income from 3,000*l.* to 4,000*l.* a year, and my husband is an only son and entirely dependent on his father.

I have proof of my husband's misconduct but the Divorce decrees being so expensive, I cannot obtain one, so my young life is blighted, and no future in store for me unless, Divorce proceedings become cheaper. There must be very many similar cases to mine in this world.

I remain,

Yrs. most humbly,

SIR,

SEEING an account of "Cheap Divorce" in the "Daily Mail" I beg to put my case before you. After being married 10 years, I took in a man lodger, who completely wreacked my home. He showed a great liking for my wife and when I spoke about it, she said she would rather I went than he. I then left the house, and she left with this man and all my furniture. I got a legal separation drawn up, and since then have not spoken. She has now taken my three children away from me and has got 4 illegitimate ones besides.

Will you kindly tell me the particulars and how to arrange the Divorce, and the cost, as I am only a working gardener earning 1*l.* a week.

I am, Sir,

Your's respectfully,

DEAR SIR,

MIGHT I be allowed as one of the members of the poorer class to say with what pleasure I hear that a Royal Commission of Enquiry has been appointed to consider the law of divorce and its relation and administration, in regards to the working class, who cannot proceed solely on account of finance, let me briefly illustrate to you the injustice of the present law as regards to myself, for this last eighteen years. The woman that I married, was a slave to the drink, more a creature of pity perhaps, than for condemnation, gradually and eventually, became hopeless, and whilst under its influence, did almost anything and went from bad to worse, and I was absolutely compelled to leave her and after allowing her upon a maintenance order the sum of 8*s.* a week, for some little time, I discovered that she was living a life of immorality with other men, my case was taken into the . . . Police Court and upon me producing more than ample evidence of her immorality, the Order was rescinded, and allthough she is no longer my wife morally, the law still says that she is my wife legally until I get a divorce from her, and this I have not been able to do on account of finance, being too poor therefore not being able to proceed, otherwise I like many others, might have been living a happy pure and contented life, this injustice I have felt most keenly at times, and should the outcome of this commission rectify this lamentable state of things I for one shall be most pleased and gratefull, and should any further information be required of me I should only be too willing to give same. should you deem my case sufficiently worthy of a reply, I have enclosed a stamped addressed envelope for same. Believe me to Remain your Obedient Servant

DEAR SIR,

I SEE by the press, that a Royal Commission has been appointed, re Divorce for the poor, and about time too! for as the law stands at present Divorce is simply a luxury for the rich, and it furnishes the justification of saying, there is one law for the rich and another for the poor.

For instance, I will give you my own case—my wife left my home and protection some months ago, now, she is leading the life of a prostitute, as a matter of fact, during the past summer months she followed that calling at . . . , she could be seen with different men daily, yet I am forced because I do not possess the means—to have a woman, bearing my name, I am forced to put up with this month in month out, to be pointed out as one whose wife is a Prostitute! had I been a rich man, I could get rid of such a creature, but as I am poor, well, I've got to grin and put up with it. Let us hope the time is not far off when Divorce will be within the reach of all, and that £. s. d. will not bar the door—to-day the homes of the poor are wrecked by infidelity as much as compared with the homes of the well-to-do, but the rich have a remedy, the poor none, perhaps soon, justice from this point of view, as far as Divorce is concerned, will be denied to none.

I am, Sir,
Yours truly,

DEAR SIR,

AFTER reading the Correspondence Re "Cheap Divorce," I thought my case would perhaps interest you. In the first place I am a young man 25 years of age and up to 5 months ago I hadn't seen my wife for 4 years. Then I receive a letter from a man in . . . asking me to petition for a Divorce on the grounds of Adultery saying, I shall have no difficulty in doing so, as she (my wife) is expecting a child. After making enquiries I find that they have been living together as man and wife for about 3 months and since then I know, in fact I can prove, that she (my wife) has given birth to a still born child. You will now see the position I am placed in. I havn't means to apply for a Divorce, not being able to meet the expense and I don't think it possible to get my expenses from him (Co-respondent). There is no doubt left, that had I been a rich man I could have procured a Divorce at once, but seeing that I am not, then I must live a solitary life or, under false pretences (which I don't intend to). I hope you will excuse me taking this liberty and if you feel at all interested in my Case I could on demand send you further particulars, also letters bearing on my character. I think you will gather that in my case "Cheap Divorce" would mean a great deal to me. Again apologizing for any trouble I may have given you.

From Yours Truly,

YOUR LORDSHIP,

I HOPE you will excuse my liberty in writing to you but I felt I could not refrain from doing so after reading your motion to bring facilities for divorce within the reach of a poor and deserving person of which I think I am as regards jurisdiction about 7½ years ago I preyed for a Divorce from my wife in India . . . on the ground of desertion and adultery which cost me the whole of my savings which I withdrew from the Savings Bank only to learn afterwards that my case was dismissed. I then came home from India as I could not soldier there it preyed on my mind so much after being home from India 12 months and receiving letters from her of a condolling character I resolved to bring her home thinking she might reform and through . . . I got her a passage Home. she went on all right for a few years till I left the service some few years when she repeated her conduct and the result was a child which I disclaim then she became the same as ever pawning and selling my Home gradually till I was compelled to leave her and now my Lord I cannot possibly pay for a second Divorce and am leading a life of lonliness. I think it very hard that I could not have been judged fairer than this. I paid a detective all I could afford thinking I could get a paupers Divorce but he wanted more than I could afford so that fell through I have got ample proof at present for a second petition but I have not got the money to do it with I am a Labourer employed . . . earning 22s. per week and got a small pension. So hoping my Lord you will take my extenuating circumstances into consideration, and give me a little advice on the subject.

I am,
Your Lordship,
Your obedient Servant,

To the Royal Commission on the Divorce Laws.

GENTLEMEN

MIGHT I give you the the following facts as a reason why Cases should be heard in tows in which people reside in 1907 I "Personally" made application to the Court throught my Solicitor for Divorce the Case went on for about 2 years Costing me 200*l.* then it had to be entered under another Court result had to drop it for want of money. 10 years after (Now) having to live an unnatural life for the above reason.

DEAR SIR

Re cheaper Divorce.

6 years ago I broke my leg playing football, my wife left me saying it served me right, she went with another man, had a child, how could I forgive,

I am a Working man and do not average 1*l.* per week, so it is impossible to obtain a divorce, hoping this will receive attention.

Yours Truly,

DEAR SIR

I SEND these few lines to congradulate on your undertaking to get a cheaper divorce which I do think is much needed for the poorer class my wife has been living with another man for about 12 years and got children by him and I am not allowed to do anything because I have not money enought

Yours Fraternally,

To The President of the
Divorce Commission.

Re Poor Man's Divorce.

DEAR SIR,

I TAKE the liberties of writing your Commission giving a true statement of my situation in reference to Myself and Wife.

We have been married 15 years, but she left me 5 years ago, I had reasons to believe that she was unfaithful at that time and sought Legal advice and I wished him to get me Divorced. My Wife hearing later that I had sought Legal advice as taken upon herself to write to my Solicitor making a full confession of her Misconduct on several occasions, and wished him to tell me that it was not with the one whom I thought it to be. Both our afidifits have been signed and I have engaged Council opinion. I have paid altogether 10*l.* I have been anxiously waiting an hearing. But my Solicitors now tell me that there must be more evidence before they can proceed. Having furnished them with all the evidence that is possible for me to give I cannot say any more to help them. Therefore I am anxious that your Commission should hear my story. I am only a working man and cannot afford to pay for Divorce in the ordinary way.

Hoping still that something can be done on my behalf

I am, Gentlemen,
Yours obediently,

SIR,

FROM condensed reports in the newspapers of the proceedings of the Royal Commission on Divorce, I understand that communications have been received from "silent witnesses," and, as I consider myself a "victim" of our present marriage law, I trust this letter will be laid before the Commissioners.

I hold the opinion that divorce should be made cheaper. My wife became a chronic inebriate and I was reluctantly compelled to obtain a separation order under the 1902 Act, an Act which gave relief where previously I had none.

From experience, separation is unsatisfactory. With one-fourth of wages gone in allowance, a family to care for, and being a sort of "odd man" in social gatherings, for an uncertain time, a man's life is a blank, try how he will to occupy his time. This, of course, entirely apart from the experience of the other side.

Five years ago I took legal advice, and was informed I had good grounds for Divorce, owing to having proofs of wife's infidelity; but the cost, 26*l.*! That means, at least 30*l.*, which places Divorce entirely out of my reach. Why should not the law be made for the poorer classes as well as the richer class?

Hoping, Sir, the result of this Commission will be that Divorce will be made easy, not necessarily for trifles, but, at any rate, within the reach of such as

Your obedient servant,

DEAR SIR,

As your Commission has been started to enquire into the subject of Divorce and the conditions which lead to such a step. I think it is my duty, apart from any personal considerations to write and state my own case for your information in the fervent hope that future legislation will perhaps afford me a means of escape from my awful predicament. I am married to a woman who is internally deformed and which I did not discover until after marriage. I was put into communication with a firm of London lawyers by a weekly newspaper and they informed me that they had never in their long experience ever heard of such a case as this and that the law had never been framed to meet such a condition of affairs. They said I could enter divorce proceedings and no doubt obtain a nullity of the marriage but such a course would cost 40*l.* to 60*l.* Of course this to me is hopeless because my average earnings do not exceed 25*s.* to 27*s.* per week. I do not care to entrust to a letter, addressed as this is, minute details, but if you care to communicate with me and give me your name and address I will go more fully into the matter and give you the name of the medical man who thoroughly examined my wife, and also a description of how and to what extent she is deformed. Externally she is practically the same as the usual type of woman, internally her sexual organs are sealed and withered. At present I am forced to live an unjust and strictly speaking dishonourable life. Can you assist me. I am eagerly awaiting your reply.

Faithfully yours,

My Lord,
Ladies & Gentlemen,

I SHOULD like to draw Attention to the Committee enquiering into whether Divorce should be Cheaper for the Working Class. I have just got a divorce myself and as a Working Man my evidence is sound Common Sence. not prejudice by Religious Instruction. I know a good few around about where I live that as not money enough for a divorce Result they are both going about with anyone they fancy. and always quarreling like Dog and Cat. the Children hearing them on almost every occasion. that is the no cheaper divorce result. some are living with other men and men with other women bringing children into the world Result children shamed for life throught no fault of their own because father or Mother could not get a divorce. I know one friend a good young Man. Total abstainer Wife drinks and bothers with another man. This young man cannot get money for a divorce Result he as being brought up in the police court for Assaulting this other man on several occasions his wife stabbed him a few weeks since and he was fined in the . . . Police Court still he as no chance of Divorce she as been out all night about 20 times this year at least. and the man is a good honest, steady young man still he is compelled to live with a Swine like that. Take my case I got damages, custody of my Boy but I cannot get a penny, my case started in 1909. Case come up in 1910 then I have 6 months before I am free altogether. 1 year and 4 months althought I win the case I must be 6 months before free I think this requires reducing. Remember there was no defence at that. if There had been I should have been compelled to pay her expences which is outrageous from a Working man. especially when all the wrong is on the woman's part I think the Committee might give the Points a Concideration as they are from one who as suffered throught the expences being so great. Of course there are two sides to the question of divorce.

I remain yours, Truely,

DEAR SIR,

I beg to address you with reference to my case which has occurred during the past month, as an illustration of the necessity of cheaping the cost in divorce.

A few months back my suspicions were aroused as to my wife's conduct in my absence, I may state here, I am a commercial traveller (always home for the week ends), and when I finally brought the matter to a head, she left me . . . with the man, whom she owned to have been carrying on with for over 12 months, and is now living with him in furnished apartments, it is the usual thing a friend of the family. Of course there are a lot of details that are not necessary to enter into here.

If it were a matter of a few pounds (say 10*l.*) I would bring a suit against them, but at present I am out of employment caused through this trouble, so cannot think of it. The suit would be entirely undefended on their part, as there is not a question of cruelty or adultery against me during the time I have been married to my wife, just within 7 years.

I should be obliged if you would bring this before the Commission, and should you wish to hear any further particulars, I should be pleased to give them.

Yours obediently,

SIR,

As one directly affected, I most earnestly trust that the Commission may cause divorce to be cheaper, my case is as follows, married 2 years, no children, wife deserted after disgraceful behaviour, heard nothing 6 months, wife eventually brought action for restitution of conjugal rights, I with ample evidence brought cross petition for divorce, co-respondent a wealthy man, . . . employed very expensive Counsel who spun out case 5 days, I compelled to withdraw having no means to continue, have never earned more than 3*l.* a week as a pianoforte tuner, now earn (30*s.*) my own costs were 630*l.*, fancy that for a man in my position, all my savings of a lifetime are gone.

I believe in this country over 100,000 couples are living apart, imagine the misery being tied to a person that they will never live with again, if the commission give relief, it will mean happiness to above number, fancy to about as many people who formed the queue in one day to see the late King Edward lying in state from 6 in the morning till 10 at night.

Yours respectfully,

APPENDIX XXVII.

"THE MODEL LAW"—AN ACT REGULATING ANNULMENT OF MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE—EXTRACTED FROM UNITED STATES CENSUS REPORT—MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE, 1867–1906 (p. 272).

Proposed uniform divorce law.—The form of Bill as recommended by the congress on uniform divorce laws is as follows:

AN ACT REGULATING ANNULMENT OF MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

CHAPTER I.—JURISDICTIONAL PROVISIONS.

Article I.—Annulment of marriage.

SECTION I. Causes for annulment.

A marriage may be annulled for any of the following causes existing at the time of the marriage:

(a) Incurable physical impotency, or incapacity for copulation, at the suit of either party: Provided, That the party making the application was ignorant of such impotency or incapacity at the time of the marriage.

(b) Consanguinity or affinity according to the table of degrees established by law, at the suit of either party; but when any such marriage shall not have been annulled during the lifetime of the parties the validity thereof shall not be inquired into after the death of either party.

(c) When such marriage was contracted while either of the parties thereto had a husband or wife living, at the suit of either party.

(d) Fraud, force, or coercion, at the suit of the innocent and injured party, unless the marriage has been confirmed by the acts of the injured party.

(e) Insanity of either party, at the suit of the other, or at the suit of the committee of the lunatic, or of the lunatic on regaining reason, unless such lunatic, after regaining reason, has confirmed the marriage: Provided, That where the party compos mentis is the applicant, such party shall have been ignorant of the other's insanity at the time of the marriage, and shall not have confirmed it subsequent to the lunatic's regaining reason.

(f) At the suit of the wife when she was under the age of 16 years at the time of the marriage, unless such marriage be confirmed by her after arriving at such age.

(g) At the suit of the husband when he was under the age of 18 at the time of the marriage, unless such marriage be confirmed by him after arriving at such age.

Article II.—Divorce.

SECTION 2. Kinds of.

Divorce shall be of two kinds:

(a) Divorce from the bonds of matrimony, or divorce a vinculo matrimonii.

(b) Divorce from bed and board, or divorce a mensa et thoro.

Article III.—Divorce a vinculo.

SECTION 3. Causes for.

The causes for divorce from the bonds of matrimony shall be:

(a) Adultery.

(b) Bigamy, at the suit of the innocent and injured party to the first marriage.

(c) Conviction and sentence for crime by a competent court having jurisdiction, followed by a continuous imprisonment for at least two years, or in the case of indeterminate sentence, for at least one year: Provided, That such conviction has been the result of trial in some one of the states of the United States, or in a Federal court, or in some one of the territories, possessions, or courts subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, or in some foreign country granting a trial by jury, followed by an equally long term of imprisonment.

(d) Extreme cruelty, on the part of either husband or wife, such as to endanger the life or health of the other party or to render cohabitation unsafe.

(e) Wilful desertion for two years.

(f) Habitual drunkenness for two years.

Article IV.—Divorce a mensa.

SECTION 4. Causes for.

The causes for divorce from bed and board shall be:

(a) Adultery.

(b) Bigamy, at the suit of the innocent and injured party to the first marriage.

(c) Conviction and sentence for crime by a competent court having jurisdiction, followed by a continuous imprisonment for at least two years, or in the case of indeterminate sentence, for at least one year: Provided, That such conviction has been the result of trial in some one of the states of the United States, or in a Federal court, or in some one of the territories, possessions, or courts subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, or in some foreign country granting a trial by jury, followed by an equally long term of imprisonment.

(d) Extreme cruelty, on the part of either husband or wife, such as to endanger the life or health of the other party or to render cohabitation unsafe; or such indignities, threats, or acts of abuse, as to render the condition of the other party intolerable and life burdensome, and to force such party to separate from the other and to live apart.

(e) Wilful desertion for two years.

(f) Habitual drunkenness for two years

(g) Hopeless insanity of the husband.

Article V.—Bars to relief.

SECTION 5. When decree shall be denied.

No decree for divorce shall be granted if it appears to the satisfaction of the court that the suit has been brought by collusion, or that the plaintiff has procured or connived at the offence charged, or has condoned it, or has been guilty of adultery not condoned.

Article VI.—Jurisdiction.

SECTION 6. In what courts.

The * * * court of this state shall have and entertain jurisdiction of all actions for annulment of marriage, or for divorce.

SECTION 7. By personal service in actions for annulment.

For purposes of annulment of marriage, jurisdiction may be acquired by personal service upon the defendant within this state when either party is a bona fide resident of this state at the time of the commencement of the action.

SECTION 8. By personal service in actions for divorce.

For purposes of divorce, either absolute or from bed and board, jurisdiction may be acquired by personal service upon the defendant within this state, under the following conditions:

(a) When, at the time the cause of action arose, either party was a bona fide resident of this state, and has continued so to be down to the time of the commencement of the action; except that no action for absolute divorce shall be commenced for any cause other than adultery or bigamy, unless one of the parties has been for the two years next preceding the commencement of the action a bona fide resident of the state.

(b) When, since the cause of action arose, either party has become, and for at least two years next preceding the commencement of the action has continued to be, a bona fide resident of this state: Provided, The cause of action alleged was recognized in the jurisdiction in which such party resided at the time the cause of action arose, as a ground for the same relief asked for in the action in this state.

SECTION 9. By publication in actions for annulment.

When the defendant can not be served personally within this state and when at the time of the commencement of the action the plaintiff is a bona fide resident of this state, jurisdiction for the purpose of annulment of marriage may be acquired by publication, to be followed, where practicable, by service upon or notice to the defendant without this state, or by additional substituted service upon the defendant within this state, as prescribed by law.

SECTION 10. By publication in actions for divorce.

When the defendant can not be served personally within this state and when at the time of the commencement of the action the plaintiff is a bona fide resident of this state, jurisdiction for the purpose of divorce, whether absolute or from bed and board, may be acquired by publication, to be followed, where practicable, by service upon or notice to the defendant without this state, or by additional substituted service upon the defendant within this state as prescribed by law, under the following conditions:

(a) When, at the time the cause of action arose, the plaintiff was a bona fide resident of this state, and has continued so to be down to the time of the commencement of the action; except that no action for absolute divorce shall be commenced for any cause other than adultery or bigamy, unless the plaintiff has been for the two years next preceding the commencement of the action a bona fide resident of this state.

(b) When, since the cause of action arose, the plaintiff has become, and for at least two years next preceding the commencement of the action has continued to be, a bona fide resident of this state: Provided, The cause of action alleged was recognized in the jurisdiction in which the plaintiff resided at the time the cause of action arose, as a ground for the same relief asked for in the action in this state.

SECTION 11. Particeps criminis may be made a party.

Any one charged as a particeps criminis shall be made a party, upon his or her application to the court, subject to such terms and conditions as the court may prescribe.

SECTION 12. Hearings.

All hearings and trials shall be had before the court, and not before a master, referee, or any other delegated representative; and shall in all cases be public.

SECTION 13. Attorney, appointment of by court.

In all uncontested cases, and in any other case where the court may deem it necessary or proper, a disinterested attorney may be assigned by the court actively to defend the case.

Article VIII.—Evidence.

SECTION 14. Proof required.

No decree for annulment of marriage, or for divorce, shall be granted unless the cause is shown by affirmative proof aside from any admission on the part of the defendant.

SECTION 15. Impounding of record and evidence.

No record or evidence in any case shall be impounded, or access thereto refused.

Article IX.—Decrees.

SECTION 16. Rule for decree nisi.

If after hearing of any cause, or after a jury trial resulting in a verdict for the plaintiff, the court shall be of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree annulling the marriage, or to a decree for divorce from the bonds of matrimony, a decree nisi shall be entered.

SECTION 17. Final decrees, entry of.

A decree nisi shall become absolute after the expiration of one year from the entry thereof, unless appealed from or proceedings for review are pending, or the court before the expiration of said period for sufficient cause, upon its own motion, or upon the application of any party, whether interested or not, otherwise orders; and at the expiration of one year such final and absolute decree shall then be entered, upon application to the court by the plaintiff, unless prior to that time cause be shown to the contrary.

SECTION 18. Decree a mensa, terms of.

In all cases of divorce from bed and board for any of the causes specified in section 4 of this act, the court may decree a separation forever thereafter, or for a limited time, as shall seem just and reasonable, with a provision that in case of a reconciliation at any time thereafter, the parties may apply for a revocation or suspension of the decree; and upon such application the court shall make such order as may be just and reasonable.

SECTION 19. Former name of wife.

The court upon granting a divorce from the bonds of matrimony to a woman may allow her to resume her maiden name, or the name of a former deceased husband.

CHAPTER III.—GENERAL PROVISIONS.

Article XI.—Children.

SECTION 20. Legitimacy of.

(a) In an action brought by the wife, the legitimacy of any child born or begotten before the commencement of the action shall not be affected.

(b) In an action brought by the husband, the legitimacy of any child born or begotten before the commission of the offence charged shall not be affected; but the legitimacy of any other child of the wife may be determined as one of the issues of the action. All children begotten before the commencement of the action shall be presumed to be legitimate.

Article XII.—Foreign Decrees.

SECTION 21. Effect of.

Full faith and credit shall be given in all the courts of this state to a decree of annulment of marriage or divorce by a court of competent jurisdiction in another state, territory, or possession of the United States when the jurisdiction of such court was obtained in the manner and in substantial conformity with the conditions prescribed in sections 7, 8, 9, and 10 of this act. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit the power of any court to give such effect to a decree of annulment or divorce by a court of a foreign country as may be justified by the rules of international comity: Provided, That if any inhabitant of this state shall go into another state, territory, or country in order to obtain a decree of divorce for a cause which occurred while the parties reside in this state, or for a cause which is not ground for divorce under the laws of this state, a decree so obtained shall be of no force or effect in this state.

Article XIII.—Repeals.

SECTION 22. Repealing clause.

The following acts of assembly and parts of acts, viz.: * * * and all other acts and parts of acts of assembly of this state, general, special, or local, inconsistent with this act, be and the same are hereby repealed: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall affect or apply to any actions of annulment of marriage, or for divorce, now pending.

SECTION 23. When act shall take effect.

This act shall take effect on the day of A.D. .

APPENDIX XXVIII.

NAMES OF WOMEN AFTER DIVORCE.

The question as to the name to be held by a woman whose marriage has been ended by divorce is one that is not covered by the terms of reference of this Royal Commission, but in view of the correspondence that has been addressed to the Commissioners on the subject, and the fact that the general law as to the use of names varies in different countries, it has been thought desirable to furnish some information on the subject.

A brief reference to the historical development of the use of names in marriage and generally may to some extent explain modern variations in practice in different countries. The taking of the husband's name by the wife on marriage appears to spring from the earliest Roman practice. Originally in Rome a woman bore the name of the head of the family to which she belonged. Consequently, if she passed out of the manus of the father into the manus of the husband she lost her father's name, and as a member of her husband's family acquired her husband's name. Thus we have Caecilia (filia) Metelli; Metella Crassi (uxor). Later it became the practice to indicate a daughter as distinguished from a wife by adding the letter (f) after the name of the daughter. Mr. H. E. P. Platt, Fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford, who has considered the question of the names of married women in Roman practice (in contrast to Roman law) for the present writer, doubts if there is any evidence that when a wife passed in manum viri she took her husband's gentile name. In the age of the kings, Lucretia is described as remaining Lucretia after marrying L. Tarquinius Collatinus and, not many years later, the wife of Cn. Marcius Coriolanus is not called Marcia, but Volumnia, and his mother is Veturia (Livy ii, 40). It is possible, however, in these cases that manus never arose. Again, C. Julius Caesar was designated (designatus) Flamen Dialis when he married Cornelia. He must have married her by confarreatio and so acquired manus, and yet she remained Cornelia by name (see Suetonius, Jul. 1). Again, a Flamen Dialis must have been the son of a confarreate marriage, yet Cæsar's mother was called Aurelia. It should be noticed that expressions such as Metella Crassi occur only in a few instances (Madvig's Grammar). Gildersleeve and Lodge, in their Grammar, say, "The Family Genitive, as Hasdrubal Gisgonis " (Livy xxvi. 20 and elsewhere), Hectoris Andromache " (Aeneid iii. 319), is found twice only in Cicero: " otherwise it is poetical and post-Ciceronian. Servus, " however, is regularly omitted: Flaccus Claudii, " Flaccus, Claudius' slave." But even when the Family Genitive was used it was rather as a description of a person for purposes of identification than as a name: thus Hasdrubal Gisgonis distinguishes the son of Gisgo from Hasdrubal, the son of Hamilcar (see also Pliny, Ep. ii., 20). But we, in fact, find such descriptions of married women: as Jucundus Domitiae Bibuli, namely, Jucundus the slave of Domitia the wife of Domitius [? Calpurnius] Bibulus (see Cagnat, Épigraphie latine, p. 64; Orelli's Latin Inscriptions, 2874. During the later Republic the marriage in manum, however, became more and more rare, and, of course, in the common case of a formless marriage by consent and cohabitation, the wife did not pass into a husband's family, and so retained her own nomen or gentile name, though, as pointed out above, for purposes of description or reputation, she might sometimes use her husband's name. Under the Empire, when the marriage in manum had practically ceased to exist, the wife took a fuller name by adding to her nomen, or gentile name, the cognomen, or family name, of her father, using feminine endings: thus the daughter of Lucius Aemilius Lepidus Paulus would be called Aemilia Lepida. But sometimes the daughter took the name of both father and mother: thus the daughter of Attius Atticus and Valeria Sextina might be called Valeria Attia.* We have also to remember that from the time of Diocletian (C. 290 A.D.) a change of name was by Roman law freely allowed to freemen unless it opened the door to fraud (Cod. Just., Lib. IX., Tit. XXV., De Mutatione Nominis).†

Though the doctrine of manus (and, therefore, the use of the husband's name by the wife) gradually died out in Rome itself, yet an institution similar to manus was a custom also of the Germanic tribes, and when these tribes adopted Roman law they retained their own law of manus, and, perhaps, adopted the old Roman law on the subject of family names. Consequently the wife bore the husband's name once more. By this date, however, Christian divorce a vinculo was slowly dying out, and the problem before us did not arise in the modern form until the codes of the eighteenth century re-introduced the practice of divorce and re-marriage. But the question throughout the middle ages continually arose in the numerous nullity cases that represented the modification that those ages introduced into the doctrine of indissolubility. In one English nullity case—quoted in Sir Moyle Finch's case (Coke's Rep., Part VI., 66*a*)—it is stated that "if a man marries with a woman pre- " contracted, and has issue by her, this issue in law " and truth bears the sirname of his father. But if " after the husband and wife be divorced for the pre- " contract, now the issue have lost his sirname . . . " yet because he once had a lawful sirname, it is a " good ground of reputation subsequent." The same argument applied to the divorced wife. The English mediaeval law indeed adopted, as other Germanic codes adopted, the early Roman law of family life. An Englishwoman passed under the manus of her husband and became one with him. Therefore she took his family name. Before dealing with modern English law it will be convenient to consider the practice in some other countries.

In Scotland, the later Roman law seems to have been adopted with the formless marriage, and thus the wife, though she assumes her husband's name and drops her own, and is rightly designated by her Christian name alone, and is referred to as the wife of the individual whose surname is given (see Fraser on Husband and Wife (2nd ed.), p. 515, and Voet 23.2.40), nevertheless retained and retains for legal purposes her own family name as an alternative to the name of her husband. (See Dunlop and Greenlees Trustees [1863], 2 Macp. 1; Johnstone v. Coldstream [1843], 5 D. 1297, see p. 1312.) A will signed by a married woman with her maiden name and surname has been held valid (see Johnson v. Coldstream). It should be noted that " there is no need of the authority of the court " to enable a man in Scotland to change his name " (Lord President Hope: Young, 1835, 13 S. 262; see also Forlong, 1880, 7 R. 910, Lord Pres. Inglis).

It is interesting to see how a different practice arose in France. The Roman practice, at any rate, from the time of Diocletian, as to the use of names generally was the rule that still survives intact in England; as we have seen, a change of name was by Roman law freely allowed to freemen unless it opened the door to fraud (Cod., Lib. IX., Tit. XXV., De Mutatione Nominis). This law was adopted in France, but it was found to lead to abuse, and enabled plebeians to enter the order of the nobility. By an ordinance of March 26th, 1555, Henri II. forbad (art. 9) any person to change his name or arms without letters of dispensation under pain of heavy fines and punishment and loss of nobility. The ordinance was not enforced. The States-General, in 1614–15, promoted an ordinance (which was signed in 1629) which directed all gentlemen to sign all legal documents with the name of their families and not of their seigneuries, thus suggesting a reversion to the Roman practice. This was again unenforced, and the order of the nobility was invaded by rich landowning commoners. The decrees of 19th June 1790, and 27th September 1791, abolished titles and ordered every citizen to bear only his family name. State registration of names followed on 20th September 1792, and the changing of names was forbidden on 23rd August 1794. On April 10th, 1803, it was made legal to change a name subject to certain strict formalities, and in the present code this law is maintained. But it has to be noticed that a customary practice had grown up centuries earlier among the nobility by which the family name only was retained by the eldest son, while a younger son added to this name the name of his wife or his mother. Even to-day in some Departments a husband adds the name of his wife to his own name and retains the double name after his wife's death. Consequently, in France, the old Roman practice had been entirely transformed, and we often find a husband bearing the wife's name instead of the wife the husband's name. It was probably for this reason that throughout the nineteenth century no settled practice existed in France after the introduction of the practice of divorce as to the name to be taken by the late wife. It was not until the passing of the law of February 6th, 1893, that it was finally decided that a wife on divorce should resume her family name, and should not be allowed to use the name of her former husband.* The penal code forbids any person to use any name other than his or her

* It may be added that some members of the Italian nobility still derive their names from the name of a family and not, as is more usual in other countries, from the name of an ancient fief: see on the whole question of names the Encyclopedia Britannica article by Mr. J. H. Frese, and Larousse, Grand Dictionnaire Universel de 19 Siecle, art. "Nom." Riemann and Goelzer in dealing with the inscription referred to above (Jucundus Domitiae Bibuli), say, in their Grammaire Comparée du Grec et du Latin (p. 112), "de même en Italie on " trouve certains noms de famille en-i qui sont des génitifs; " on a dit d'abord Niccolo Niccoli, puis Niccoli s'est " employé tout seul."

† Codex Justinianus, Lib. IX., Tit. XXV. De Mutatione Nominis, Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus, A.A. et C.C. Juliano. Sicut initio nominis cognomiuis praenominis recognoscendi singulos impositio privatim libera est, ita horum mutatio innocentibus periculosa non est. Mutare itaque nomen sive praenomen sine aliqua fraude licito jure, si liber es, secundum ea quae saepe statuta sunt minime prohiberis, nulli ex hoc praejudicio futuro. S. XV. K. Jan. A.A. Conss. (See Cod ex Justinianus: P. Krueger, p. 848, and Corpus Juris Civilis, Kriegel, Vol. II., p. 603.)

* See on France generally Dalloz, Jurisprudence Générale: Nom. Prenom., also Kelly's French Law of Marriage, 2nd ed., 1895, by O. E. Bodington, p. 130; French Civil Code, annotated by E. Blackwood Wright (ed. 1908), p. 53.

registered name. Thus French law has little in common with English law, which, strictly following the Roman Codex Justinianus, recognises no right in a name simpliciter.

When we turn to German law we find a somewhat different position. It will serve no useful purpose to deal at length with the German history of the use of names save to say that the German common law, which offered a permanent background to a great variety of local customs, was a modified form of the Justinian Code as received in 1495. Thus the common law of Germany presumably incorporated the Roman law, permitting non-fraudulent change of name. But this general rule was subject to local customs and local codes: The Bavarian Codex Maximilianus (1756), the Prussian Laurecht (1794), Code Napoleon (1804), Badische Landrecht (1810), the Austrian Civil Code (1811), and the Saxon Civil Code (1863). It will be sufficient here if reference is made to the provisions of the Civil Code which came into force on January 1st, 1900. This Code (Tit. 1. 12) provides that "where the "right to the use of a name is disputed by another "or against the rightful bearer, or where the interest "of the rightful bearer is injured by another, who "illegally uses the same name, the rightful bearer "may demand of the other the discontinuance of the "infringement. If further injuries are to be antici-"pated, he may sue to cause them to be discontinued." Section 1355 provides that "the wife receives the family name of the husband." Section 1577 provides that "the divorced wife retains the family name of the husband." The wife may resume her family name. If she was married previously to the dissolved marriage, she may also resume the name which she had at the time of the marriage, unless she is alone adjudged guilty. The resumption of the name is effected by declaration before the competent authority; the declaration is to be made in publicly authenticated form. If the wife is alone adjudged guilty, the husband may forbid her to bear his name. The prohibition is effected by declaration before the competent authority (magistrate); the declaration is to be made in publicly authenticated form. The magistrate is to communicate the declaration to the wife. With the loss of the name of the husband the wife again receives her family name.

It will also be convenient to recite the provisions of the Swiss Civil Code (10 December 1907) upon the subject. Section 29 declares that there is property in a name. Section 30 allows the Government of a canton to sanction a change of name on good grounds, but this change can be attacked by anyone who is injured by the change. Section 149 provides that a divorced woman takes again the name of the family which she bore before the celebration of the dissolved marriage. If she was a widow at the date of the marriage, she can be authorised by the divorce decree to take her family name again.

In England, apparently from the time of the introduction of surnames, a person could have "divers names at divers times" (Co., Litt. 3*a*), and Sir Moyle Finch's case (Coke's Reports, Part VI., 66*a*) shows us that there were from the first at least two types of surnames:—

(a) a name inherited from the father;
(b) a name acquired by reputation. (See also Doe d. Luscombe v. Yates (5 B. & A. 543).)

The case of nullity referred to in Sir Moyle Finch's case shows also that from mediaeval times, at any rate in England, and almost certainly elsewhere, a wife on marriage acquired her husband's name, possibly by reputation, as in the Roman cases referred to above, but possibly de jure mariti. (See Findall v. Goldsmith 2 P.D. 263). The issue, on the ground cognomen majorum est ex sanguine tractum, also acquired the same name. On the dissolution of the marriage the issue retained the same name by reputation. We are not told whether the wife did so or not. She would, of course, lose the name as "a lawful sirname" (if the name was not merely a name by reputation), as she was no longer in the manus of her husband; but the children also lost the name in so far as it was "a lawful sirname," but retained it on the ground of reputation. There seems no reason why this should not have been the case with the quondam wife. The Elizabethan practice shows how invulnerable a claim a wife had to her husband's name: the case of Bon v. Smith (Cro. Eliz. 532) and Jobson's case (Cro. Eliz. 576), which were cases dealing with gifts to persons bearing the testator's name, show that in the Elizabethan age a woman was regarded as having absolutely lost her family birth-name by the fact of marriage. It is true that in the case of Pyot v. Pyot, in 1749, Lord Chancellor Hardwicke regarded these decisions as "odd," and evaded them, but he did not overrule them. But Pyot v. Pyot does seem to show that a married woman for the purpose of taking under a deed or devise does not lose her former name. In the case Wright v. Plumptre (3 B. & A. 474), decided in 1820, it was strongly contended by counsel (Sergeant Pell, Mr. Gaselee, and Mr. Adam) that "the taking of the name "of the husband by the wife is a matter of mere "private arrangement. In many countries married "women retain their maiden names; and even in this "country, women of a certain rank, marrying their "inferiors retain their former names and titles; the "use then of the name of the husband, is a mere "voluntary assumption, and does not take away the "former." Abbott, C.J., however, held that the lady in question "had, as is usual in England, parted with "her surname on her marriage, and had been always "called by the name of her husband," and was not "a person of that name" that she bore before marriage. The case of Leigh v. Leigh (15 Vesey, 92) shows that a married woman stood in a very special position, for in that case Lord Eldon held (p. 100) that "an Act of "Parliament giving a new name does not take away "the former name," and that consequently the former name is available for purposes of succession. It is a voluntary assumption of a name, and this apparently is to be distinguished from the acquisition of a substitutional name on marriage. The cases of Barlow v. Bateman (3 P. Wms., 65) and Doe dem. Luscombe v. Yates (5 Barn. & Ald. 544) seem to show that "anyone "may take upon him what surname and as many "surnames as he pleases without an Act of Parlia-"ment." Mr. Jacob Waley, the eminent conveyancer, was of opinion "that a new surname may be assumed at pleasure." (Davidson's Precedents, Vol. III., Part I., 3rd ed., p. 360.) It would, therefore, appear to follow that whether a wife is or is not divested of her late husband's name on divorce, she can at pleasure resume her maiden name or adopt as her own the name that she formerly held either by reputation or de jure mariti.

A wife usually takes her husband's surname, but whether it is a name acquired by reputation or by special right, in view of the cases just discussed, is an open question. The question, as we have seen, goes back into classical times.

It is necessary to consider some modern cases on this subject.

Violet, the former wife of Earl Cowley, is an instance of a wife not taking her husband's name. The House of Lords held that having "acquired the "right to use a name which the usages of society" allowed her to retain, it was impossible for her first husband to restrain her from using his name (Earl of Cowley v. Countess of Cowley, A.C. (1901) 460).* Mr. Jacob Waley, as we have seen, held on the cases that "a new surname may be assumed at pleasure provided "of course that it is not for any fraudulent purpose" (Davis v. Lowndes, 1 Bing. N.C. 618). Lord Lindley (Earl Cowley v. Countess Cowley (1901), A.C., p. 460) says: "speaking generally, the law of this country "allows any person to assume and use any name, "provided its use is not calculated to deceive and to "inflict pecuniary loss." The test as to the wife's name is probably the question of reputation. In Findall v Goldsmith (2 P.D. 263), Sir Robert Phillimore said: "I am of opinion that marriage confers a "name upon a woman, which becomes her actual "name, and that she can only obtain another by "reputation. The circumstances must be very excep-"tional to render a marriage celebrated in the actual "names of the parties invalid. It could only be where

* It is desirable to notice that it is not the use of the name that raises the presumption that the wife can pledge the husband's credit. That arises from the fact of cohabitation (Gomme v. Franklin (1859), 1 F. and F. 465).

" the woman has so far obtained another name by " repute as to obliterate her original name."* Hence, where a woman who had divorced her husband was re-married to him by the name which she had gained at her first marriage, it was held in Tindall v. Goldsmith that there could be no nullity on the ground of undue publication of banns. A name obtained by repute, it must be remembered, may, however, obliterate an actual name. Thus in the case of Tooth v. Barrow (1 Spinks. 37. [1854] the illegitimate daughter of a woman, lost her mother's name and acquired by notoriety or repute the name of her mother's husband. This case decided that if under such circumstances banns of marriage were published in the original name of the woman with intent to defraud, the marriage would be null and void. Lord Lindley, in the Cowley case (p. 459), considered that Findall v. Goldsmith " goes far to show " that, so far as name is concerned, the Countess was " entitled to continue after the divorce to use the " name and style which she had previously acquired " the right to use," and it was held on her re-marriage to Mr. Biddulph that no damage was done by her continued use of the name Cowley, and that apart from damage she had a right to use a name of which she had acquired the use. The case of Du Boulay v. Du Boulay (1869, L.R. 2, P.C. 430) carries the right further. Lord Chelmsford said: "In this country we " do not recognise the absolute right of a person to a " particular name to the extent of entitling him to " prevent the assumption of that name by a stranger " . . . . The mere assumption of a name which is " the patronymic of a family by a stranger who has " never before been called by that name, whatever " cause of annoyance it may be to that family, is a " grievance for which our law affords no redress." The assumption of the patronymic name of another family would only be restrained " where it has been " exclusively used in connection with a particular " business (Kerr on Injunctions, 4th ed., p. 544), or " where the unauthorised use of a man's name though " neither libellous or defamatory may cause injury in " his property, business, or profession " (Hawker v. Stourfield Park Hotel Company, W.N. [1900] 51).

There are cases, no doubt, where a mere voluntary assumption of a name would not satisfy the " names and arms " clause in a will (Croxon v. Ferrers (1904), 1 Ch. 252). The terms of the clause must be observed. Moreover, it is usual, on changing a name, to notify the fact in a public way by royal licence advertised in the London Gazette and other papers, or by deed poll enrolled in the Central Office of the Supreme Court, and advertised in The Times and local papers (" Cyclopædia of Forms and Precedents," Vol. 9, p. 1, and Vol. 16, p. 441). But the point of practical importance is that a woman after divorce is free to determine the name by which she wishes to be known. It is possible that by divorce she loses the right to use her late husband's name de jure mariti, and, if so, she reverts to her former name. But in any event she can take, on other grounds, the name she bore during marriage, or any other name that appears to her to meet the equities of her position.

J. E. G. DE MONTMORENCY.

* From this it would seem that the name of a married woman is not merely a name acquired by reputation, but is acquired by the fact of marriage, and can be replaced by a name acquired by reputation.

INDEX.

Military—continued.

EXAMINATION PAPERS:—

Majors (other than R.A.M.C. and A.V.C.) in "Tactical Fitness for Command"; Lieutenants and Captains of the Regular Army and of the Australian, Canadian, and New Zealand Permanent Military Forces, for Promotion; Majors of the Royal Army Medical Corps (Regular Army) in "Technical Subjects," for Promotion; Majors of the Army Veterinary Corps (Regular Army) in "Technical Subjects," for Promotion; Lieutenants of the Special Reserve of Officers, for Promotion; Lieutenants, Captains, and Majors of the Territorial Force, for Promotion; Officers of the Special Reserve of Officers and the Territorial Force (Voluntary), for the Symbol "Q" or "q." May 1912. 1*s.*

Military Entrance:—R.M. Academy, R.M. College, Qualifying Test for Commissions. Supplementary First Appointments in the Royal Marines. June–July 1912. 1*s.*

Qualifying Certificates. March 1912. 6*d.*

FINANCIAL INSTRUCTIONS. Appendix II. Payment of Units proceeding to or from India as ordinary reliefs at Indian expense. 1*d.*

GUNS. DRILL FOR. 6-in. B.L. Howitzer. 1912. 1*d.*

GUNS. HANDBOOKS FOR:—

6-in. B.L. 30-cwt. Howitzer, Marks I. and I*. 1912. 1*s.*

9·2-in. B.L. Mark IX., "C" Mark IX. and Marks X., X*., and X.* Land Service. 1912. 1*s.*

INDIAN EMPIRE. OUR. A short Review and some Hints for the use of Soldiers proceeding to India. 6*d.*

KING'S REGULATIONS AND ORDERS FOR THE ARMY. 1912. 1*s.* 6*d.*

ORDNANCE SERVICES. ARMY. Regulations. Part I. 1912. 6*d.*

RANGE FINDER. Infantry No. 2. (Barr and Stroud.) 31·5-inches base. Handbook. 1912. 1*s.*

TELEGRAPHY AND TELEPHONY. Instruction in. Amendments, Sept. 1912, to Vols. I. and II. 1*d.*

TERRITORIAL FORCE:—

NURSING SERVICE. Standing Orders. 1912. 1*d.*

REGULATIONS for the, and for County Associations. 1912. 6*d.*

YEOMANRY AND MOUNTED RIFLE TRAINING. Parts I. and II.; 1912. 6*d.*

Admiralty Publications:—

CHANNEL PILOT, PART II., 1906. Revised Supplement, 1912. —

RED SEA AND GULF OF ADEN PILOT, 1909. Supplement, 1912. —

RUSSO-JAPANESE WAR, 1904–5. PRIZE COURT DECISIONS. Vol. 1. Russian Cases. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Board of Trade:—

JOURNAL. Weekly. 3*d.*

LABOUR GAZETTE. Monthly. 1*d.*

MERCHANT SHIPPING:—

Medical Guide. The Ship Captain's. 2*s.*

NATIONAL INSURANCE ACT, 1911. PART II. UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE. Decisions given by the Umpire. Vol. I. up to and including Aug. 15, 1912. With Index. 8*d.*

RAILWAY AND CANAL TRAFFIC ACT, 1888. Analysis of the Railway Rates and Charges Order Confirmation Acts, 1891 and 1892. [Reprinted with certain additions, from the Parliamentary Paper Cd. 6832 of Session 1892.] 1*s.* 6*d.*

SURVEYORS. INSTRUCTIONS TO. Lights and Sound Signals. 2*d.*

Record Office Publications:—

I. CALENDARS.

CHANCERY ROLLS. Various. Supplementary Close Rolls, Welsh Rolls, Scutage Rolls. 1277–1326. 15*s.*

CHARTER ROLLS. Vol. IV. 1–14 EDWARD III. 1327–1341. 15*s.*

STATE PAPERS. COLONIAL SERIES. Vol. XX. America and West Indies. Jan.–Dec. 1, 1702. 15*s.*

STATE PAPERS relating to IRELAND. HENRY VIII., EDWARD VI., MARY, and ELIZABETH. Vol. XI. 1601–1603; with Addenda, 1565–1654, and Calendar of the Hanmer Papers. 15*s.*

II. LISTS AND INDEXES.

XXXVIII. List of EARLY CHANCERY PROCEEDINGS. Vol. V. 20*s.*

Record Office Publications—continued.

III. PRIVY COUNCIL.

PRIVY COUNCIL OF ENGLAND. ACTS OF THE. COLONIAL SERIES. Vol. V. 1766–1783. 10*s.*

VI. SCOTTISH.

GREAT SEAL OF SCOTLAND. REGISTER OF THE. 1306–1424. New Edition. 15*s.*

PRIVY COUNCIL OF SCOTLAND. REGISTER OF THE. Third Series. Vol. IV. 1673–1676. 15*s.*

Local Government Board:—

BYELAWS. MODEL. VIII. Public Bathing. 2*d.*

Do. as to New Streets and Buildings. Circular, Aug. 29, 1912, to District Councils. 1*d.*

REPORTS ON PUBLIC HEALTH AND MEDICAL SUBJECTS. NEW SERIES:—

63. BOILED MILK AS A FOOD FOR INFANTS AND YOUNG ANIMALS. Available Data in regard to the Value of. 9*d.*

66. FLIES AS CARRIERS OF INFECTION. Further Reports (No. 5). 3*d.*

69. ENTERIC FEVER in BARNSTAPLE. 4*d.*

SMALL HOLDINGS AND ALLOTMENTS ACT, 1908. Circular, Aug. 22, 1912. Small Holdings—Accounts of County Councils. 1*d.*

Various:—

AERONAUTICS. ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR. Report on the Tests of Petrol Motors in the Alexander Motor Prize Competition, 1911. 9*d.*

AFRICA BY TREATY. THE MAP OF. 3rd Edition. 3 Vols. and case of Maps. 60*s.*

ANCIENT AND HISTORICAL MONUMENTS, &c, in WALES AND MONMOUTHSHIRE. ROYAL COMMISSION ON. Inventory of the Ancient Monuments in the County of FLINT. 9*s.*

ANCIENT AND HISTORICAL MONUMENTS, &c. in SCOTLAND. ROYAL COMMISSION ON. Fourth Report, and Inventory of Monuments, &c. in GALLOWAY. Vol. I. County of WIGTOWN. 6*s.* 6*d.*

ASTROGRAPHIC CATALOGUE, GREENWICH SECTION, Vol. III. (part of). 2,212 Stars within 3° of the North Pole in Standard Rectangular Co-ordinates for the Epoch 1900·0. 2*s.*

CAPE OBSERVATORY ANNALS. Vol. X. Spectroscopic Researches, Part II. Appendix I. On the Spectrum and Radial Velocity of ϵ Canis Majoris. 6*d.*

COLONIAL OFFICE:—FLAGS, BADGES, AND ARMS OF THE BRITISH DOMINIONS BEYOND THE SEAS. Additional Plate for Part II.—Arms of Jamaica. 6*d.*

COMMERCIAL TREATIES BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND FOREIGN POWERS. Vols. I. to XXV. 15*s.* each.

GREENWICH OBSERVATIONS, 1909. APPENDIX. Investigation of the Motion of Halley's Comet from 1759 to 1910. 3*s.*

GREENWICH ASTRONOMICAL, MAGNETICAL, AND METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS, 1910. 20*s.*

Do. Separate parts:—

RESULTS. ASTRONOMICAL. 1910. 5*s.*

Do. MAGNETICAL AND METEOROLOGICAL. 1910. 3*s.*

Do. PHOTO-HELIOGRAPHIC. 1910. 3*s.*

HISTORICAL MONUMENTS (ENGLAND). ROYAL COMMISSION ON. County of Buckingham Inventory. 15*s.* 6*d.*

HOME OFFICE:—

QUARRIES (under the Quarries Act, 1894) in the United Kingdom and the Isle of Man. 1911. List of. 5*s.*

SHOPS ACT, 1912, with Regulations, Explanatory Memorandum, and Circular. (Bound, 6*d.*) 4*d.*

OPHTHALMIA NEONATORUM in Scotland. Incidence of. 4*d.*

ORDNANCE SURVEY. PROFESSIONAL PAPERS. New Series. No. 1. GEODETIC BASE LINE, An Account of the Measurement of a, at Lossiemouth, in 1909; together with a Discussion on the Theory of Measurement by Metal Tapes and Wires in Catenary. 2*s.*

SICKNESS AND MORTALITY. Adjusted Rates of, and Expectation of Sickness based thereon; and Monetary Tables. 10*s.*

SLEEPING SICKNESS COMMISSION of the Royal Society. Reports of the. No. XII. 5*s.* 6*d.*

SOLAR PHYSICS COMMITTEE. SOLAR ECLIPSE EXPEDITION to Vavau, Tonga Islands, April 29, 1911 (Eastern date). Report. 6*s.*

STATE PAPERS. British and Foreign. In 100 Vols. 10*s.* each.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON DIVORCE AND MATRIMONIAL CAUSES.

APPENDICES

TO THE

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE AND REPORT

OF THE

ROYAL COMMISSION

ON

DIVORCE AND MATRIMONIAL CAUSES.

Presented to Parliament by Command of His Majesty.

LONDON:
PUBLISHED BY HIS MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE.
To be purchased, either directly or through any Bookseller, from
WYMAN AND SONS, LTD., FETTER LANE, E.C., and 32, ABINGDON STREET, S.W.; or
H.M. STATIONERY OFFICE (SCOTTISH BRANCH), 23, FORTH STREET, EDINBURGH; or
E. PONSONBY, LTD., 116, GRAFTON STREET, DUBLIN;
or from the Agencies in the British Colonies and Dependencies,
the United States of America, the Continent of Europe and Abroad of
T. FISHER UNWIN, LONDON, W.C.

PRINTED BY
EYRE AND SPOTTISWOODE, LTD., EAST HARDING STREET, E.C.,
PRINTERS TO THE KING'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.
1912.